Letter
from Secretary to between the British Government and his Excellency, to which those despatches refer, has been suspended, until the state of the public business should admit of the preparation of an answer to the letters addressed by the Vizier to the Governor-General, in reply to his Lordship's letter of the 8th of May 1812, and transmitted with your despatches to the Persian Secretary of the 9th of September and 5th of December, and to his Excellency's separate letter relating to the affairs of her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, transmitted with your despatch to the Persian Secretary of the 2d of December.

2. The Governor-General having now replied to those letters, I am directed to transmit to you the enclosed copy in English of the letter which his Lordship has addressed to the Vizier on this occasion, and to communicate to you the following observations and instructions of the Governor-General in Council on the subjects to which it refers.

3. The original letter to the Vizier will be transmitted to you by the Persian Secretary with the least practicable delay.

4. Before I proceed to the immediate subject of this despatch, I am directed by the Governor-General in Council to convey to you the cordial expression of his Lordship in Council's approbation of the ability, judgment, firmness, and perseverance, which have distinguished your conduct in the arduous and important negotiation to which your despatches refer. The peculiar temper and disposition of the Vizier have, on this, as on former occasions, presented obstacles to the accomplishment of the just views of the British Government at the Court of Lucknow, which no exertion of the qualities above described, without the application of the further direct interference of the Government, could be expected entirely to overcome; while the failure of your utmost efforts, therefore, to obtain his Excellency's concurrence in the whole of the measures which you have been employed in urging him to adopt, has excited regret rather than surprize in the mind of his Lordship in Council, the success which has attended our exertions in accomplishing some objects to which great importance was attached by Government, has afforded his Lordship in Council a high degree of satisfaction; and your conduct, in either case, is considered to have augmented your claim to his distinguished approbation, which has already been so frequently and justly acknowledged.

5. While the Governor-General in Council regrets the failure of your efforts to obtain his Excellency's acquiescence in those demands and expectations of Government which are still unfulfilled, it is extremely gratifying to his Lordship in Council to observe that the progress of your discussions has had the effect of compelling the Vizier gradually to abandon every ground on which he has attempted to resist them, by a semblance of argument, or by assumed doubts and apprehensions of the expediency and practicability of the measures proposed to him, and has reduced him to the necessity of having recourse to the most palpable evasion and prevarication, in order to elude what he can no longer fairly object to. This observation refers especially to the question of reform, although it is applicable, in a greater or less degree, to the other topics which have lately been agitated with the Vizier; and, in stating it, I am instructed to notice in terms of peculiar approbation, the able tenor of your remarks on the Vizier's first proposed answer to the Governor-General's letter of the 8th of May 1812, containing arguments the most irrefragable, in opposition to the weak and evasive reasoning adopted by his Excellency with a view to obstruct the salutary and indispensable object of reform.

6. With regard to the question of reform, which is the principal subject of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier of this date, you will observe, that his Lordship considers all argument to have been completely exhausted in the long and elaborate discussions which have already taken place; and that being decidedly of opinion that the British Government will not be justified in relaxing its efforts to carry that arrangement into effect while a possibility remains of accomplishing it, his Lordship has aimed not so much at exposing the weak and untenable arguments and feigned doubts and alarms of the Vizier, as at endeavouring to impress on his mind, both the right and the determination of the the British Government to enforce the observance of the stipulations of the treaty in this particular, to make him sensible of the condition to which his perseverance in opposing our just views may eventually place him with relation to this Government, and of the hopelessness of ultimately succeeding in that opposition, and generally to obtain his prompt and implicit compliance with demands urged under the express sanction of a public treaty, by awakening his mind to the possible consequences of an opposite course of conduct.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

7. The Governor-General in Council cannot anticipate the new efforts of evasion or delay which the Vizier may employ with a view to prolong the negotiation after the receipt of the Governor-General's letter. It is possible, indeed, that he may declare his assent to the plan, and agree to enter immediately, in concert with you, on the necessary arrangements, and perhaps actually do so, trusting to time and circumstances for an opportunity of breaking them off, or perhaps to the means which he may possess, by clandestine intrigue, of frustrating them in their progress. His success in either would be deeply to be lamented, as defeating, or at least retarding, the accomplishment of reform, and would afford matter of triumph and gratification to the Vizier. His Lordship in Council, however, reposes entire reliance in your vigilance, discernment, and energy, for frustrating any designs which his Excellency may entertain of this nature.

8. You are so fully possessed of the views and sentiments of the Governor-General in Council in every branch of the proposed measures of reform, as to render any instructions for your guidance, in addition to those which you have from time to time received, entirely unnecessary. You will observe, that a reference is made in the letter to the Vizier to your communications, which will of course be renewed in the name and by the direct authority of the Governor-General, and in the spirit of the letter to his Excellency's address, which you will enforce by such further arguments and representations as may be calculated in your judgment to improve and confirm its impression on his Excellency's mind.

9. Of the remaining points adverted to in that letter, there is only one on which it appears necessary to state any observations, namely, the case of Hoosein Alee Khan. It has occurred to the Governor-General in Council, that if the repugnance of the Vizier to restore the stipend to the family of the late Hyder Beg Khan continues to be unalterable, it will be for the interests of Hoosein Alee Khan to accept a compromise, by receiving from his Excellency, for his own use and that of his immediate family, a proportion (one-fourth for example) of the original stipend. This is stated for your consideration, and you are authorized to accede to an arrangement framed on this principle, if you judge it advisable. You will observe, that the passage in the Governor-General's letter relating to this point is so expressed as to leave it in your power to offer or accept a compromise, or to insist on a compliance with the original requisition, as you may think advisable.

10. The Governor-General has called on the Vizier to render justice to Alee Nuckee Khan without any further delay, referring to your letter of the 30th of April, as containing the result of his Lordship's deliberate judgment on that question. His Lordship in Council has only adverted generally to the questions relating to the two Begums, the grievance of the Company's Sepoys, and the employment of our troops in the pursuit and apprehension of banditti. Those points being either satisfactorily arranged, or in a fair train of adjustment, it has been thought advisable to avoid any irritating reference to what has passed. There is only one point on which his Lordship has thought it necessary again to urge the Vizier, namely, the restitution of the possessions of Shums-oon-Nissa Begum at Dehli. You will be pleased to renew your application to his Excellency on this subject, and to recommend to the Begum the appointment of a person to take charge of them. You will, of course, receive every practicable assistance from the Resident at Dehli in effecting this arrangement, if his interference shall be necessary.

11. The Governor-General has addressed answers to the letters from the two Begums, received with your despatches on the 5th, 12th, and 25th September 1812, to the Persian Secretary. English copies of those answers are enclosed, and

1. Be pleased to submit to the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council the enclosed copies and translations of letters which have passed between his Excellency the Vizier and me, and copies of letters which I have addressed to her Highness the younger Begum, and to the Judge and Magistrate of Elahabad, descriptive of the final adjustment of her Highness's claim on the Vizier for the daily supply of her table, and of the terms of the commutation of her jagier for an annual stipend in money.

2. This highly satisfactory result of a long protracted and most unpleasant discussion between the British Government and his Excellency the Vizier, having for its object his Excellency's concession of the just rights of the Begum, and his attention to the calls of humanity in her behalf, cannot fail to be agreeable to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council; and I congratulate his Lordship in Council on the happy conclusion of the business, as produced by my negotiation under his Lordship in Council's commands.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 30th June, 1813.)

In my last letter to your Excellency on the subject of the jagier and supplies of her Highness the younger Begum, I apprized you of my intention to summon the revenue officers of the jagier to Lucknow, to require from them an accurate statement of its revenue for the current Fusly year, attested by their signatures and seals, and to send them to the Presence with that statement, to satisfy your Excellency of its accuracy. I also promised to submit to your Excellency a proposal regarding the compensation for her Highness's supplies, which should be calculated to prevent loss to either party, to afford satisfaction to her Highness, and to promote your Excellency's reputation.

Your Excellency was pleased to assure me, in reply to that letter, that my proposal should be honoured by your consent: and now, that the collections of the revenue of the jagier are at an end, and the whole of its revenue, according to the settlement for the present year, has been realized, I have the honour of transmitting to your Excellency two abstracts of the wasil-baukee account, signed and sealed by the Chowdree, Ahmud Oolla, with the deposition of that officer to the accuracy of the account, taken in my presence: twenty-nine kuboleeats by the Zemindars for land revenue, twenty-five obligations for nuzurana, eight kuboleeats for saeer duties, and a statement of the expense of collections under the seal of the Aumil of the jagier. The Chowdree, Ahmud Oolla, attends your Excellency with this letter, to attest the correctness of its enclosures: and from these documents it will appear to your Excellency, in the clearest and most satisfactory manner, that the net revenue of the jagier, as realized by the present Aumil, after deducting all the charges on the revenue, such as nankar and other exemptions and fees, with the exception of the charges of collection, is the sum of Lucknow Sicca Rupees 37,698. 14 annas per annum. Now the charges of collection on the above sum, as originally stated by your Excellency, at the rate of ten per centum on the revenue, would amount to 5,769 rupees, 14 annas, 9 pice; whereas the actual expense incurred by her Highness the Begum on this account, as stated by her Highness's Amil, is only 1,852 rupees, 10½ annas: a sum so far inferior to the amount of your Excellency's demand, as to render an accommodation between you impracticable, without considerable concessions by both. But the difference between your Excellency and her Highness on the other important point, namely, the value of her Highness's supplies, is equally irreconcilable with the former; your Excellency having stated it as 63 rupees per diem, and her Highness demanding 125. My sole and uniform object in the part which I have taken in this discussion from its commencement, was to give satisfaction to both the personages concerned in it to the utmost practicable extent; to provide a suitable maintenance for her Highness the Begum, without loss to your Excellency; and by securing the future ease and comfort of her Highness's life, in whatever country her residence might be fixed, to exalt your Excellency's reputation. The accommodation which I have now to propose seems, to my impartial judgment, to be better calculated than any other that I could devise, to accomplish those desirable ends. It is to take the mean ratio between your Excellency's statement and her Highness's, on both the questions at issue; that is, to fix the charge of collecting the revenue of her Highness's jagier at a moiety of the aggregate amount of your Excellency's demand, and her Highness's offer, or the sum of 3,811 rupees, 4 annas, and 2 pice per annum, to be deducted from the gross amount of the collection; and, on the same principle, to fix the daily allowance, in lieu of her Highness's supply of provisions, at the sum of 94 sicca rupees, or a moiety of the aggregate amount of your Excellency's offer and her Highness's demand. Thus the net amount of the revenue of the jagier to be annually paid by your Excellency to her Highness the Begum will be the sum of 53,887 rupees, 9 annas, and 9½ pice, and the yearly amount of the compensation in lieu of supplies to her Highness's kitchen, for twelve lunar months or 354 days, will be the sum of 33,276 rupees; making together the yearly sum of 87,163 rupees, 9 annas, and 9½ pice, or per mensem 7,263 rupees, 10 annas, and 1 pic. On your Excellency's agreeing to pay this sum into the Honourable Company's treasury monthly, on account of her Highness the Begum, I am prepared to give your Excellency possession of her Highness's jagier.

But as the whole of the revenue for the current fusly year has been already collected by her Highness's servants, while the compensation for her Highness's supplies is in arrear from the commencement of this year of the Hijjree, or for a period of nine lunar months, during which your Excellency has paid only Rupees 4,662 on account, it follows, that the arrear of the compensation in question at the rate now submitted, or the sum of 20,295 rupees, was actually due by your Excellency at the close of the last month, and should now be paid to her Highness, whose exigencies are said to be pressing; and further, that the sum of 94 rupees per diem must be paid to her Highness hereafter, from the 1st of the present month till the 14th of the month of Rumzaun, corresponding with the 1st of Kooar in the ensuing fusly year; when, in the terms of my present proposal, your Excellency's payment of the monthly instalments of Rupees 7,263. 10. 1. to her Highness the Begum will commence.

I agree to what you have written, and send to you the sum of 20,295 rupees, being the arrears of the daily allowance for provisions up till the 1st of the month of Jemadée-oo-sanee, after deducting the sum which I sent to you formerly on her Highness the Begum's account. To her Highness the Begum Shums-oon-Nissa. (Written 10th July 1813.)

I have had the honour to receive your Highness's letter, dated the 2d instant, expressive of your anxiety regarding the adjustment of your claims against the Government of his Excellency the Vizier, and I have fully understood the contents of it.

It is superfluous to assure your Highness that my best endeavours have been generally exerted in your behalf since the commencement of your unhappy differences with his Excellency, and more particularly, with a reference to your jagier and your claim for the supply of your table, that I have strenuously laboured to bring those two questions to a speedy and satisfactory adjustment.

Your Highness is aware of the arguments which his Excellency originally used to defeat your claim for supplies. He observed, that a table-allowance could never be demanded from him by a person who had retired from his dominions ; that while your Highness resided with him he had furnished the usual supplies for your table daily, but that, from the day of your quitting his capital, he had considered the obligation to do so as entirely abrogated and annulled, and that nothing but his respect for your Highness, and the expected intercession of our Government in your behalf, could have induced him to continue the allowance for a single day after your departure to the jagier. That his servants had attended your Highness to your jagier, and had furnished the usual supplies for the daily consumption of your table, till your Highness had been pleased to dismiss them, and to direct the provision of those supplies at your own charge by your servants, a measure, on the part of your Highness, which completely exonerated his Excellency, in his own judgment, from all further trouble or expense on this account.

In short, it was his Excellency's manifest intention to withhold any further supply for the use of your Highness's table, and to refuse the smallest compensation on this account ; and nothing but my repeated and earnest intercession, supported by the strongest remonstrances on the part of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, could have induced his Excellency to enter into a discussion of your Highness's claim. His Excellency consented at length to grant a certain allowance in money, 63 rupees per diem, as your Highness was informed, in lieu of the provisions in question ; but my regard for your Highness's comfort occasioned my rejection of this sum, and my persistence in a vexatious discussion with his Excellency in your Highness's behalf, till he was pleased to convey to me a promise of being guided by my decision on the extent of your Highness's claim, with a reference to the supply of your table, on the condition of my agreeing for your Highness to the transfer of the jagier to his Excellency for an annual stipend in money, proportioned to the revenue of the jagier.

Under the authority which your Highness had conferred on me, and sensible of the great advantages which an arrangement of this nature must produce, I had no hesitation whatever in consenting to his Excellency's proposal ; and I directed your Highness's Vakeel to summon the revenue officers of the jagier to Lucknow in the month of March last, for the purpose of ascertaining its revenue, with the view of concluding this arrangement.

The Vakeel objected to this measure in March last, on grounds which I thought it proper to admit ; and the conclusion of the arrangement was suspended

suspended with your Highness's knowledge and consent, till the whole of the revenue of the year for the current year should be realized.

Ahmud Ali, Chowdree of the jagier, has recently arrived at Lucknow, and has submitted the revenue accounts in a number of separate documents, a list of which is enclosed. Those documents have been submitted to the Vizier, and the Chowdree has attended to attest them; and after a long discussion between his Excellency and me on the subject, the whole of the revenue of the jagier, as asserted by your Highness's officers, supported in statements by me, has been finally admitted by his Excellency, and your Highness's rights have been maintained.

With regard, however, to the charge of collection, a considerable difficulty has arisen in reconciling the different statements of his Excellency and your Highness's Amil.

The established charge of collection throughout the Vizier's dominions, and also in the Company's territory, is known to be ten per centum on the gross amount of the revenue, which would have constituted a heavy deduction from the amount of your Highness's income; and it has proved a most arduous task upon my part, in combining the settlement of this question with the adjustment of your Highness's claim on account of the supplies for your table, to conclude an arrangement with the Vizier, which should not only preclude loss to your Highness, but be far more advantageous, on the whole, than the original state of your affairs, as securing a larger income for the future than your Highness has hitherto enjoyed.

For the details of the arrangement that has been concluded, I refer your Highness to the two separate documents enclosed, and to the verbal explanation of your agent. The annual amount of the compensation for your Highness's provisions has been fixed at the sum of 33,276 rupees, and the net revenue of the jagier at the sum of 53,887 rupees, 9 annas, and $9\frac{1}{2}$ pice per annum. His Excellency the Vizier has agreed to pay the aggregate of the two sums above stated to your Highness regularly every future year; and he has now sent to me, on your Highness's account, the sum of 24,957 rupees, as the arrears of the compensation for supplies for a period of nine months, commencing with the first of Shuvvaul, and ending on the last day of Jemadee-oos-sanee in the present year of the Hijjree.

A copy of his Excellency's letter to my address, announcing his consent to this arrangement, is transmitted for your Highness's information; and I have further the honour of transmitting to you my draft on the Collector of Elahabad for the sum of Lucknow Rupees 24,957, payable ten days after sight, when your Highness's servants will receive it. The monthly allowance for supplies, at the rate above stated, will be regularly paid to your Highness till the commencement of the ensuing fussy year, or till the 14th of the month of Rumzaun, when the instalments of the aggregate sum of 87,163 rupees, 9 annas, and $9\frac{1}{2}$ pice per annum, or Rupees 7,263,10 per mensem, will commence.

I congratulate your Highness most cordially on the satisfactory adjustment of the only important questions which depended between you and the Vizier, and which the friendship of the British Government for your Highness has thus brought to a happy conclusion.

2. The Begum's Vakeel having represented to me that her Highness was subjected to loss, on a former occasion, by the receipt of Furruckabad Rupees instead of Lucknow Rupees, which are said to be also current at your Hon. Son, I have thought it proper to state the amount of the remittance on this occasion in my draft on the Collector of Elahabad as in Lucknow Sicca Rupees. This will not, I trust, be productive of any material inconvenience to that Officer, and cannot occasion loss to the Government, because the usual remittance, or monthly supply of money, from the treasuries in the Ceded Provinces to this treasury, is generally subject to a discount, corresponding with the Batta or difference of value in exchange between the coinage of Lucknow and Furruckabad, and this batta is at present nearly three per centum.

3. If I have been misinformed regarding the currency of Lucknow Sicca Rupees at Elahabad, and her Highness the Begum decline to receive Furruckabad Rupees in the room of them, my draft must, of course, be returned, and a reference must be made to the Government regarding the future disposal of the money to be received on her Highness's account, which will amount to the monthly sum of Lucknow Sicca Rupees 7,260, or Lucknow Sicca Rupees 87,120 per annum.

4. I beg the favour of your making the necessary communication on the subject of this dispatch to the Collector of Zilla Elahabad, and informing me of the result at your earliest convenience.

1. The eunuch, Tuhseen Alee Khan, who has so long and so deservedly enjoyed the favour and protection of our Government, is now, to every appearance, in the last stage of his existence, and will probably have ceased to exist before this letter, or an arzee which he has just now sent to me to the address of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, can be submitted to the notice of the Government.

2. With his arzee to my Lord Minto's address, Tuhseen Alee Khan has sent a letter to me, a translation of which is enclosed; and I perform an act of humanity, humanity, at least, if I do not discharge an essential obligation of my public duty, in recommending the subject of this letter to the most favourable consideration of the Government.

3. By a despatch from the Persian department, under date the 4th of September last, I was instructed to offer to Tuhseen Alee Khan the Honourable Company's guarantee of the payment of a small pension to be assigned from his own funds to one of his confidential servants; for whom, and for some relations and other dependants of the eunuch to be placed under that person's charge, the protection of the British Government was requested.

4. The nature of the communication, which I made to Tuhseen Alee Khan on that occasion, has doubtless suggested to his mind the terms of the letter, which has now been addressed to me (a translation of which is enclosed), and the disposition of property which it conveys. The whole amount of his personal property, as referred to in this letter, cannot exceed the sum of a lac and half of rupees, and can scarcely be an object to the Vizier, if the possession of it could be justly demanded by his Excellency to the prejudice of the needy relations and dependants of the proprietor, to whom the amount has been bequeathed. But the right of Tuhseen Alee Khan to dispose, in the manner described, of the trifling remainder of his property acquired in the service of Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and reduced to its present amount by the unkindness and illiberality of the Vizier, seems to me to be almost unquestionable, and to be fully supported by the rules of Mohummudan law, though not by the practice of Mussulmans under the arbitrary government of the Vizier. His Excellency's right, on the other hand, to resume the possession of the jagier which Tuhseen Alee Khan has hitherto enjoyed, seems to me to be equally unquestionable; and I have discouraged every hope, on the part of Tuhseen and his heirs, of their enjoying any portion of the jagier after his death.

5. The office of Nazir of the khoord muhl, when vacated by the death of Tuhseen Alee Khan, will be conferred by her Highness the Bhow Begum, as a matter of course, on some person of her Highness's selection; but the question of the future superintendence and payment of the stipends of the subordinate women and reputed children of the late Nawaub, Asuf-ood-Dowlah, hitherto exercised by Tuhseen Alee Khan under the guarantee of the British Government, seems to merit the early consideration of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, and to require his Lordship's instructions for the guidance of my conduct on the occasion of Tuhseen's demise.

6. I solicit the favour of an early communication of the sentiments and orders of the Government on this latter question, and regarding my acceptance or rejection of the trust which Tuhseen Alee Khan would impose on me, with a view to the protection of his dependants.

Your uniform kindness to me, on all occasions, far exceeds the power of language to express; and God is my witness, that the cap of my devotion to your will has ever been the ornament of my head, as well as the greatest boast of my heart. The sincere gratitude which I feel for the obligations which you have conferred on me can only cease with my life. Day after day, and by night too, I offer up my prayers to God for the increase of your happiness and prosperity, and the prolongation of your valuable life.

The present state of my health and my bodily weakness are such as to preclude every hope of recovery, save by the immediate interposition of the divine mercy; and having hitherto, on all occasions, experienced the favour and protection of the British Government, and ascribing the long duration of my existence in this transitory world solely to the ease and tranquillity which I have enjoyed under the protection of the Honourable Company, whose most willing and faithful servant and dependant I have ever been, I look up with confidence to your friendship in this last stage of my existence, for the continuance of these blessings to my friends and relations after my death ; and, with this view, while yet in complete possession of my intellects, and of every other legal qualification to dispose of my property by bequest (praised be God for the same), in the hope of a continuance of that protection and kindness from you to my relations, after my decease, which you have uniformly extended to me while living, I humbly submit my request that you will accept and exercise the trust of executor and guardian of this my last will and testament, in the manner under-written, viz. :

Whereas Chutra Mull Set,h, my late brother, had long ago expended on my account, or restored to me, all the money and property which he ever had of mine, and owed me nothing at the time of his death, nay long before that event, while in the fullest possession of every mental faculty, we settled our accounts with each other, consequently I have no claim upon him or his heirs whatever, nor are they to be called to account in my name. On the contrary, after settling accounts, I became indebted to my said brother deceased for many sums of money and other benefits which he conferred on me, and on this account, as well as from our relationship, his wife and his daughters and daughter-in-law, with two little boys his grandsons, named Kedar Nath and Lalljee, who are all residing in a house built with his own money, have been taken under my protection, and I have maintained them hitherto as my own.

All my money and valuables are contained in the three houses undermentioned, viz., the house I now occupy contiguous to the palace of Furabuksh, a house in the Punj Muhuleh, and a third near to the old Dowlut Khāna. No money nor property belonging to me has ever been deposited in any other place, nor in the possession of any of my relations or friends. I possess two other houses ; one of them near to Wuzeerbaugh, the other in Teekeet Gunge, contiguous to Nishatbaugh, and I have also a garden at Becjnora.

It is my wish and expectation from your favour, that immediately after my death the whole of my household furniture, plate, and valuables, with the five houses and gardens above described, my elephants, horses, camels, hackeries, and other property of every description, be disposed of, under your authority, by public sale, and the proceeds be deposited in the Honourable Company's treasury and vested in its funds, the interest on the amount to be distributed monthly among my relations and friends, as particularly specified hereafter, and continued in perpetuity to them and their heirs for ever, so as to preserve them from indigence or want, that they may pray for you their benefactor.

My grand-nephews, Kendar Nath and Lalljee, who are infants, I commit to your especial guardianship, and I confidently hope and trust that your friendly aid and protection will always be extended to them, and to their mother and grandmother, and in a word to all my connexions, so that no injury nor loss may befall them.

For the purpose of my interment I long ago purchased a piece of ground in the Chouk, near to the Akburee Duravāzeh, on which I erected a musjid, puckha bazar, and stable, at my own exclusive expense, and have uniformly distributed the rents of all those buildings in charity among the durveishes attached to the musjid. To this ground it is my earnest desire, and I rely on your goodness for its accomplishment, that when I die my body may be removed in a respectable and creditable manner, and buried within the compound or area of the bazar, and that a puckha monument may be erected over my grave with a part of the money to be produced by the sale of my property and deposited in the Honourable Company's treasury. The rent of the shops in the bazar and musjid, as hitherto collected by the servants of my deceased brother, Chutra Mull Set,h, and distributed by them among the durveishes, to be collected in like manner after my death, and appropriated to the support of the durveishes attached to the musjid and tomb ; and, in addition to the amount of the rent so collected, I further bequeath the sum of Sicca Rupees 600 per annum from the interest of my money in the Honourable Company's funds, to defray the expenses of the inohurram, and of the anniversary of my death and interment.

Sheikh

Sheikh Shuhab-ood-Deen, my old and confidential servant, and my accredited agent with the British Government, in constant attendance on you, having served me faithfully and honestly, and conducted himself to my entire satisfaction, without interfering in my pecuniary concerns, I give and bequeath to him, and to his heirs and successors for ever, a monthly allowance of Sicca Rupees 200, to be paid from the interest of my money vested in the Honourable Company's funds; and I commit him to the fostering care and protection of the British Government and to your kind patronage, which I earnestly solicit in his behalf.

To Aftaub Raee, also an old friend, who has served me faithfully and honestly in the capacity of Moonshee, and never intermeddled with my money matters or property of any description, I give and bequeath an allowance of Sicca Rupees 50 per mensem, in perpetuity, from the interest of my money, as above; and I solicit the British Government to protect him, on all occasions, for my sake.

Here follows a list of all my bequests, to be paid from the interest of my money in the Honourable Company's funds, making a total amount of Sicca Rupees 575 per mensem, or per annum Sicca Rupees 6,900.

Sheikh Shuhab-ood-Deen has always received his monthly allowances from my own hand, and I consider him as one of my best and most valued friends; Moonshee Aftaub Raee is also a very old and confidential servant; and I request that the monthly stipends of both these persons be paid to them and their heirs for ever from the Honourable Company's treasury directly, out of the interest of the proceeds of my sale, to be vested in the funds of the Company. The remainder of the interest of my property to be paid to Kedar Nath and Lalljee, the grandchildren of Chutra Mull Set, h, my brother deceased, to whom I intrust the payment of all the other provisions abovementioned, and who will appropriate the residue of the interest as a personal provision for themselves, their heirs and successors, who are hereby constituted and declared to be my heirs and residuary legatees. The receipts of Sheikh Shuhab-ood-Deen and Aftaub Raee, for their monthly stipends, will be presented by these persons themselves at the Honourable Company's treasury, and a receipt for the residue of the interest or surplus income of my property, under the seals of Kedar Nath and Lalljee, or their heirs, will be presented by Shuhab-ood-Deen, my Vakeel, through whom the money should be paid.

I intreat, as a last favour, your acceptance of this trust, the executorship of my last will and testament, which I beg you to retain in your possession. I have directed an inventory of all my property to be made, and it shall be sent to you in the course of a few days.

My sole hope and trust are in the British Government, whose devoted servant I am and shall be till my last breath.

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 24th ultimo, enclosing the translation of a letter to your address from Tuhseen Alee Khan, respecting the disposition of his property after his death, and soliciting the protection of the British Government to his surviving relations and dependents. The arzee addressed by Tuhseen Alee Khan to the Governor-General has also been received.

2. The long and intimate intercourse which has subsisted between Tuhseen Alee Khan and successive Residents at the court of the Vizier, his known attachment to the British Government, the services which he has rendered, and the hazard to which he has been exposed in performing what he deemed to be his duty duty to the allied Governments on a memorable occasion, and the great respectability of his character and conduct, constitute claims on the countenance and support of the British Government which appear to the Governor-General in Council to warrant the decisive interference of the Government in favour of his surviving relations and dependants, and for the protection of his property (exclusive of the jagier which is, of course, resumable at his death), in order to give effect to the disposition which he has made of it.

3. The Governor-General in Council will therefore approve of your adoption of the measures which may appear to you best calculated to accomplish the purposes of the will of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and authorizes you to apprise his Excellency the Vizier, at such time as you may judge it to be expedient, that you are in possession of instructions from Government to the above effect, stating to his Excellency the grounds on which the Governor-General in Council deems it to be the right of the British Government to extend its protection to Tuhseen Alee Khan, and setting before his Excellency the powerful motives of consideration for that person's long and faithful services to his family, and more especially to himself, which ought to restrain him from any opposition to an arrangement perfectly just in itself and sanctioned by the dying request of Tuhseen.

4. It appears to his Lordship in Council to be desirable, that on the occurrence of the decease of Tuhseen you should take measures, without delay, for securing his property from injury and dilapidation, and for retaining it under your own charge, until an opportunity shall offer of disposing of it in pursuance of the directions contained in his will.

5. The Governor-General in Council is satisfied that your proceedings, under these instructions, will be regulated no less by a desire to fulfil the just expectations of Tuhseen Alee Khan, sanctioned by the British Government, than by every practicable endeavour to reconcile the Vizier to them.

6. His Lordship in Council regrets the necessity, which is unhappily established by the character and conduct of the Vizier, of founding his instructions, on the present occasion, on the anticipation of his Excellency's desire to appropriate the comparatively insignificant amount of property, acquired in the course of a long life devoted to the service of his family, and would willingly indulge the hope that an appeal to the common principles of gratitude, justice, and honour, would induce his Excellency voluntarily to give effect to the provisions of the will. However feeble such a hope may be, it will at all events be proper, in the first instance, to assume that his Excellency is susceptible of these principles with relation to Tuhseen Alee Khan, and consequently to frame your earlier representations to his Excellency on that basis, reserving for the case of his determined opposition to the dispositions of the will, a more decisive and energetic exertion of the influence of the Government which you represent.

7. By the decease of Tuhseen Alee Khan the superintendence of the khoord muhl of the late Nawaub Shooja-ood-Dowlah, and also of the muhl of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah and of his reputed children, will become vacant. The charge of the first-mentioned establishment will be conferred, of course, on some person of the election of her Highness the Bhow Begum, whose right to the management of it, in conformity to the tenor of the engagement executed by the Vizier in 1798, under the guarantee of the British Government, admits of no dispute, and has lately been again distinctly recognized.

8. With regard to the muhl of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah and to that Prince's reputed children, whom his Excellency the Vizier is bound by treaty to maintain, the Governor-General in Council is of opinion that the most expedient arrangement would be for his Excellency, in concert with you, to nominate a proper person to the charge of the establishment in question. The Governor-General in Council understands, that shortly after the accession of the Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan to the Musnud, an allowance of one lac of rupees was assigned by his Excellency, under the guarantee of the Resident, for the maintenance of the reputed children of his brother and the females belonging to the muhl, but that that this sum is considerably reduced in consequence of the death of several of them, and that a great degree of distress prevails among the survivors. It would be worthy of his Excellency's liberality and justice to revise the distribution of the allowance in question, and to apportion it according to the age and the wants of the parties, and to allot the surplus which will remain to the establishment of a fund to meet the necessary expenses of the marriages, and other domestic occurrences, among the reputed children of the late Vizier, and for the relief of the indigent relatives of the women of the muhl.

Consultations,

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

9. With respect to the participation of the Government in the appointment of a person to superintend the establishment in the room of Tuhseen Alee Khan, the Governor-General in Council considers the obligation imposed on the British Government, by the spirit of the 16th article of the treaty of 1798, to warrant a degree of interference which shall ensure the due execution of that article; but it will neither be just nor expedient to extend it beyond the approval of the person who may be selected by the Vizier. The proposed revision of the allowance is believed to be indispensably requisite for the relief of the distress experienced by the women and reputed children of Asuf-ood-Dowlah; and their actual condition, and the circumstance of their maintenance, being a provision of a treaty to which the Company is a party, entitle the Government to call on the Vizier to accede to the proposed arrangement.

10. The Governor-General in Council is therefore pleased to desire, that you will make an application to his Excellency to the foregoing effect in the name of the British Government, and endeavour by every effort of persuasion and argument to induce his Excellency to carry it into execution. The course of argument to be pursued will readily present itself to your mind, and render it unnecessary to enter into any detail on that part of the subject.

11. As no record of the engagement, above referred to, for the support of the muhl of Asuf-ood-Dowlah can be traced on the proceedings of Government, I am directed to desire that you will extract the necessary information on the subject from the records of the Residency, and transmit it to me for the purpose of being submitted to his Lordship.

Sir :

1. With real concern I report to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, the death of Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan. He died at five o'clock yesterday evening, and was buried this morning in the place pointed out by his will, with every demonstration of respect for his character and sorrow for his death, on the part of the dependants of the British Government residing at Lucknow, who accompanied his remains to the grave.

2. The enclosed is a translation of a letter which I received from his Excellency the Vizier, at the instant at which the death of Tuhseen was announced to me by my hurkarra, who is stationed at his gate. A copy of my answer to his Excellency's letter is also transmitted by this despatch.

3. On a retrospect and more mature consideration of the contents of Tuhseen Alee Khan's will, I am apprehensive that the provision of it, by which his grand-nephews (being Hindoos) are declared to be his residuary legatees, cannot be supported nor maintained according to the tenets of the Mohummudan law, which pronounces infidelity, as it is termed by Mussulmans, or a difference of religion between the ancestor and the heir, to be a barrier to the right of succession; and, under this view of the question, if his Excellency the Vizier should insist on his right to the residue of the estate, though the claim would be illiberal and unworthy, it must, I fear, be admitted by our Government.

I have received your Excellency's letter, announcing the melancholy event of the death of that old and faithful servant and well-wisher of both States, Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan. I lament the death of Tuhseen with sincere and genuine sorrow. With a view to the protection of his property, I suggest to your Excellency, for the present, that the small guard of the Hon. Company's sepoy which has long been posted at his house be increased, and instructed to prevent any person from removing or interfering with the property, save by your Excellency's orders and mine.

About five days ago, despairing of the eunuch's recovery, I reported his condition, and all the circumstances regarding him that had then come to my knowledge, for the information and orders of the Government; and I have reason to expect a reply, containing particular instructions for my guidance, in the course of a fortnight or twenty days. Till then, I submit to your Excellency that the measure above proposed is all that can be proper or advisable.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 28th August, reporting the demise of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and the communications which have passed between you and his Excellency the Vizier, relative to his property.

2. The Governor-General has learned with concern the decease of a person whose zealous and faithful services to the family of the Vizier, and attachment to the British Government, have always entitled him to peculiar consideration and regard.

3. The instructions conveyed to you in my despatch of the 3d instant will apprise you of the measures which you are authorized to take, for the purpose of securing to the surviving relations and dependants of Tuhseen Alee Khan the enjoyment of his property, according to the distribution of it prescribed in his letter addressed to you a few days before his death. The circumstance adverted to in the third paragraph of your letter now acknowledged, does not appear to require any change of resolution in that respect, since the determination tion of the Governor-General in Council, as stated in that despatch, was founded, as you will have remarked, not on the supposed right of Tuhseen Ale Khan, according to the Mohummudan law, to devise his property in the manner described in his letter (for by that law Tuhseen, if considered as a slave, is debarred from the privilege of any testamentary disposition of property), but on the right and duty of the British Government, under the circumstances of the case, to exercise its influence and authority, to induce the Vizier to renounce his claim to the property of the old and faithful servant of his family, in favour of the persons to whom the deceased desired to leave it, and to afford its protection and support to those individuals.

4. The arrangement made in concert with the Vizier for the custody of the property, and the suspension (which his Lordship in Council understands the Vizier to have agreed to) of any further proceedings until the receipt of a reply to your reference, are entirely satisfactory to Government. With a view to mark the respect of the Government for the memory of the late Tuhseen Ale Khan, it is the desire of his Lordship in Council that you should confer khillats of condolence on the grand-nephews of Tuhseen, and on Sheikh Shuhab-ood-Deen, who formerly attended you as his Vakeel; but as it would be proper that this mark of regret and esteem for the deceased should be bestowed in concurrence with his Excellency the Vizier, the Governor-General in Council desires that you will suggest to his Excellency the propriety of marking his sense of Tuhseen's merits and services by a similar token, and endeavour, if necessary, to overcome by argument and representation any objection which he may oppose to it. If your efforts should be unsuccessful, his Lordship in Council authorizes you either to invest the persons in question with khillats on the part of the British Government, or to refer the question for the consideration of Government, and suspend any step of the nature adverted to until you shall receive his Lordship's instructions.

To the Right Hon. Gilbert Lord Minto, Governor-General in Council, &c. &c. &c.

My Lord :

1. Before my departure to Fyzabad I had several conferences with the Vizier, at which I laboured by every argument that I could think of, and with all the powers of reasoning that I possess, to convince his Excellency's mind of the justice and necessity of his compliance with your Lordship in Council's demands having reference to the reform of his Government, and to the other points in discussion which remain to be adjusted with his Excellency.

I have renewed those exertions since my return, with the aid and under the influence of your Lordship in Council's instructions, conveyed by the Secretary's despatch under date the 2d July last; and in the spirit of the letter to his Excellency, an English copy of which was transmitted by the Secretary for my guidance. The original letter in Persian, under your Lordship's signature and seal, has not yet been received.

2. The Vizier has been long in the habit of listening in silence to my discourse on every question of importance on which his feelings are at variance with my counsels, more especially on the question of reform, and of professing his adherence to treaty as an answer to every argument that I adduce, in a manner, too, the most vexatious and irritating, because his professions are in direct opposition to the whole course of his actions, except when influenced by my immediate control, through the operation of fear on his mind.

3. The true meaning of his Excellency's language with a reference to the question of reform is, in my judgment, as follows: "Let me have the whole of your system and regulations, the system which prevails in the Ceded Provinces, as promised by Lord Wellesley, at once, that I may examine it carefully, and see if it corresponds with the terms of the treaty: that is, if its adoption in this country be compatible with the exercise of my independent authority, the authority of an absolute ruler. If I find it so, I will carry it into effect, through the medium of my own officers, without any interference on your part, save by the aid of your military power to support the measures which I direct, to enforce the authority of my officers in the execution of my despotic commands." So that, by his Excellency's interpretation of the treaty, the Honourable Company's guarantee, and the power of the British Government, are no more than the engines of his despotism. We are to be excluded from any share in his counsels, beyond the duty of submitting a plan for the better administration of his affairs, which he is at liberty to approve or reject, thus protracting the negotiation at his pleasure; and, if he approve, is at liberty to execute in the manner which he may think proper, with the aid of the British troops, to be always ready at his call, and bound to enforce his authority, without any investigation of the purposes, whether just or rapacious, to which that authority may be applied.

4. That such is the intention of the Vizier, has been demonstrated by the whole course of his proceedings since the conclusion of the Treaty of Cession, and more particularly by his discussions with me on the important subject of reform; which latter, although productive of his declared acquiescence at one stage of the negotiation in the principal measures proposed to him, were no sooner discovered to militate against the exercise of a despotic authority for purposes unjust and rapacious, than his solemn acquiescence was withdrawn, by an effort of prevarication and evasion as unworthy of his Excellency's understanding as consistent with his uniform conduct.

5. In a letter received from the Vizier on the 21st of June last, a translation of which is inclosed, your Lordship in Council will observe that his Excellency expressly disavows the obligation of his written acquiescence in any of the measures of reform, and describes the instrument which conveyed it as no more than a statement of answers to certain propositions on my part, which he was at liberty to abide by or depart from, as circumstances might afterwards suggest. The other observations in his letter having reference to the difficulty of executing the proposed reforms in his government, and their tendency to subvert his authority, are demonstrative of the intention ascribed to him, and of the true meaning of his language, as submitted in the third paragraph of this dispatch.

6. His Excellency's construction of the terms of his agreement with Lord Wellesley to regulate the whole of his proceedings by the advice of the British Government, as exhibited in the conclusion of his letter, is worthy of particular notice. In reply to my remark on a former occasion, the truth of which is unquestionable, that no important measure of his administration since the date of the Treaty of Cession has proceeded with the advice of our Government, his Excellency, without controverting the fact, has thought proper to explain it away, as he supposes, and to evade the manifest inference from it, namely, his daily infraction of the treaty, by detracting from the importance of his measures, and pronouncing them to be such as "did not require any previous consultation with our Government;" so that his Excellency's interpretation of this important provision of the treaty, as explained by his agreement with Lord Wellesley, may be stated in the following words: "I am bound to consult with the British officers on such affairs of my Government as may seem to require their advice; but I alone am the judge of the necessity or expediency of consulting them: and on every occasion of my belief that your advice would be contrary to my views, I shall carefully refrain from consulting you, and act as I may think proper; referring to you for advice on occasions where I expect your concurrence, and on all occasions for the support of your troops, which you are bound to afford on my requisition, in the terms of the provision of guarantee."

7. The

7. The wilful and manifest perversion of the spirit and letter of the treaty on which the whole of this reasoning proceeds, cannot be unknown to his Excellency, and has been repeatedly explained to him by me.

Letter

8. In a letter of the 2d July, a copy of which is enclosed, I canvassed his Excellency's arguments, and refuted them, to the best of my judgment, in a manner precluding reply. I compared the form and substance of His Excellency's written acquiescence in the several measures of reform, as conveyed by his letter to my address of the 4th April 1811, with the manner and substance of the agreement concluded with his Excellency by Lord Wellesley: and from this comparison I deduced the obvious and unquestionable inference, that the former was as binding as the latter. I referred to my former demonstrations of the facility of executing the reforms, and of the salutary consequences to result from them, if commenced in a spirit of cordiality, with a wish on the part of his Excellency to promote their general success, and a resolution to seek my concurrence, and to be guided by my respectful advice, in the progress of all the details of them. In reply to his Excellency's desire of "a new system of administration, similar to that which prevails in the Honourable Company's provinces, or any other conformable to treaty," with a view to its immediate adoption, I entreated his Excellency to look back to your Lordship's letter to his address, under date the 28th December 1810, where the outline of a system is described, and then to refer for its details to my written representations to his Excellency, which were first solemnly agreed to and afterwards unhappily rejected. This outline and those details, I observed, formed the only system of administration that could ever be recommended to his Excellency. They were, in all respects, conformable to treaty; had no tendency whatever to diminish his authority or consequence, and the adoption of them in his Excellency's country, his execution of them with my concurrence and advice, were indispensable to the happiness of his subjects, to the security of their persons and property, to the advancement of every true interest of his Government, and of the reputation of both States. His Excellency's apprehensions of a loss of authority or consequence from a compliance with the counsels of our Government, I proved to be imaginary and groundless. But admitting their reality for a moment, I maintained that even this circumstance could form no plausible pretext for a departure from the letter of the treaty, which, in guaranteeing his Excellency's authority, provided expressly for its exercise with our uniform concurrence and advice. With a reference to his Excellency's observation, that "no new or extraordinary affair in the exercise of his authority had occurred to require his consulting our Government," I quoted the words of his agreement with Lord Wellesley, to shew the most palpable fallacy in his reasoning. The "ordinary government of his dominions, the usual exercise of his authority," were expressly subjected by treaty to the influence of the British counsels, which he was solemnly pledged to abide by, and every measure of his Excellency's administration, such as committing a district in farm, establishing a court of justice in his capital, the reform or alteration of any branch of the police of his dominion without the previous concurrence of our Government, could be viewed in no other light than as a direct infraction of the treaty, a manifest departure from his engagement, for the consequences of which he might be made answerable whenever the Government chose; and our tacit acquiescence in which, for a time, could be ascribed to no other motive than extraordinary forbearance and moderation in the exercise of an established right. Setting aside for a moment the obligation on his Excellency to advise with the British Government, and to regulate his proceedings by its advice, I argued on the manifest advantage which must arise to his Excellency's interests from a previous communication and consultation with the British Resident at his Court on every important concern of his government. Concealment, he had often declared to me, to be far from his wish or intention, though unhappily evinced by his practice. The occasional, and, as acknowledged by himself, the too-frequent failure of his arrangements, could only be rectified or repaired by an ultimate reference to our counsels, or an appeal to the power of our arms; and was it not better for his Excellency, more conducive to his essential interests, and to the ease and tranquillity of his mind, to adopt that proceeding, in the first instance, which would insure the success of his measures, by obtaining the concurrence of those whose power alone could enforce them?

9. My letter to his Excellency the Vizier, containing most of the arguments above noticed, has not hitherto been honoured with a reply, though the evasive remarks to which they were intended as answers have been repeated at every conference since my return, and in a manner the most vexatious and perverse, with the view, as it would seem, of ultimately conquering my patience, and producing a degree of irritation that might lead to some expressions on my part to be misconstrued by his Excellency into disrespect, and form the grounds of a second complaint.

10. This design, on the part of his Excellency, if entertained, has been constantly frustrated; and at our conference on Saturday the 28th instant, which lasted for several hours, his Excellency at length had recourse to expressions of the most abject submission, instead of reasoning, when I brought him to the final alternative of the immediate execution of the several measures of reform originally recommended to him by me, or of producing a written demonstration of their inconsistency with the terms of the treaty.

11. The above is the actual state of my negotiation with his Excellency the Vizier on the important question of reform. The other subjects in dispute, namely, the redress of the grievances of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan and the restoration of the pension to the indigent family of Hyder Beg Khan, are exactly as they stood at the date of my letter on those subjects to the Vizier, a copy of which has been already submitted to the Government, and has been honoured with your Lordship in Council's approbation. His Excellency is aware of this circumstance, but continues to withhold his assent to the measures of justice which I proposed to him, under your Lordship's authority and in your name, and to which it is obvious that he can offer no plausible objection, since he has delayed to reply to my letter.

12. A paper containing some secret intelligence of the proceedings at his Excellency's durbar, since our conference of the 28th instant, as appearing to be worthy of your Lordship in Council's observation, has been transmitted to the Secretary to Government, who will submit the contents of it to your notice. On my receipt of your Lordship's letter to the Vizier I shall lose no time in applying it, with every exertion of zeal, to the purposes for which it is intended.

I have received your letter, dated the 4th of Jemadec-oos-sanee, 1228 Hijjuree (4th June 1813), with a copy of the articles written 9th Rubbee-ool-awul, 1226 Hijjuree (4th April 1811), which were merely answers to certain statements of yours in reply to my letter of the 29th of Jemadec-ool-awul, 1228 Hijjuree (31st May), which contained a copy of the concluding article of my agreement with Lord Wellesley. You have written, that "as my letter is indicative of a "final resolution to adopt the salutary system," &c. (to the end). My acquiescence or rejection of the system in question will have been understood by you from the contents of my letter; but the truth of the matter is this, that if the establishment of the system proposed had not been difficult, it could never have been suspended till now: and even now, I do not see how it can be properly established. As it has of necessity been suspended from its difficulty, and the punishment of the refractory has been suspended in consequence, and I have thereby suffered considerable loss, therefore, contemplating the disordered state of the country, and the great loss, which has arisen from the delay to punish the refractory, and relying, too, on the responsibility which is conveyed by your written assurance of the most cordial and zealous assistance in the commencement and progress of the arrangements, I now write to inform you that I do not refuse to establish in my dominions a system of administration calculated to promote the comfort and happiness of the people, similar to the system which may have been established in the Company's territory, a plan of which was promised to me by Lord Wellesley, or any other conformable to treaty treaty which may be proposed. But if, in the establishment of that system, any loss shall be occasioned to me, I look to your friendship for reparation; and to a measure that may operate to subvert my authority and power, or to diminish my consequence among the people, to whatever system it may belong, I shall never, on any principle, consent.

Letter
from the Vizier.

You have written, that "the document which I transmitted was already in your possession; that you have copies of it in English and Persian; that it is ever in your view; that it is quoted in the Governor-General's letter, and forms the basis of all his Lordship's propositions and your's; and that you could never have deviated, nor wished to deviate, from its provisions." In reply to which I observe, that God forbid that there should be any deviation from it, for my strength and confidence are on it alone; and in the same manner as you wish and propose to abide by it, so also, on my side, there has never been the smallest deviation, nor shall there be any in future.

In reply to your remark, that on my part, from the date of the instrument referred to generally, and during the period of your own residence particularly, not a measure of my administration has proceeded with the advice or concurrence of your Government, nor have I ever sought your advice. The case is this: That during the period to which you allude, no new nor extraordinary affair in the administration of my Government has occurred that required my consulting with your Government. I solemnly disavow my recollection of any measure, requiring or deserving consultation with your Government, that has been adopted by me without your previous knowledge and consent. Many measures have been adopted in compliance with your desire, the details of which are not in my recollection; and those which I do recollect, I refrain from noticing, to avoid prolixity and repetition.

In answer to your remark, that the sooner the work of reform be undertaken with your advice the better, I repeat, that whenever a plan, such as I have described above, shall be prepared and presented to me, the establishment of it shall be commenced without delay; for, considering the design which I have in my mind, I must naturally be anxious for the speedy settlement of my country.

I shall reply by a separate letter to your statements of the cases of Hoosein Alee Khan and Alee Nuckee Khan.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 2d July 1813).

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter, dated the 21st ultimo, in reply to mine of the 4th. The definition or description which your Excellency has been pleased to assign to the articles of agreement dated the 4th of April 1811 (9th Rubbee-ool-awul 1226), and conveyed to me by a letter of that date under your Excellency's official seal, seems to my judgment to be fully as applicable to the articles of agreement with Lord Wellesley, and indeed to every other arrangement concluded between the two States, as to the instrument to which your Excellency has applied it. The form of the negotiation with Lord Wellesley, on the result of which your Excellency's "strength and confidence," are said to rest, is exactly the form of the negotiation between your Excellency and me, the result of which you have been pleased to disavow; namely, that of answers on the part of Lord Wellesley to requests conveyed by your Excellency, like the answers conveyed by your Excellency to certain propositions on my part, in the name and under the authority of the Government.

The ambiguous nature of the expressions contained in your Excellency's former letter having reference to the proposed system of reform, was adverted to in my answer to that letter; and I am concerned to have occasion to remark, remark, that the same ambiguity of expression, the same disposition to evade a candid and dispassionate discussion of the important question of reform, with a view to its satisfactory adjustment, is observable in, and may be said to pervade, the letter which I am now to reply to.

The difficulty of carrying into effect those reforms of your Excellency's administration, the expediency and necessity of which can no longer admit of a doubt, has been frequently stated by your Excellency, and is insisted on in your letter before me as the only remaining pretext for a delay to acquiesce in our counsels. That this difficulty is entirely imaginary, or that your Excellency's cordial concurrence in the execution of the measures of reform is all that is required to remove it, to facilitate the execution of those measures, and to ensure their successful result, has been demonstrated to your Excellency by me on repeated occasions of conference, as well as in numerous letters. The actual state of the Honourable Company's provinces in which a similar system obtains, is a practical demonstration of this fact, superseding the necessity for argument; and if the experiment had been happily made in your Excellency's country at the time, and in the manner which I proposed, the doubts in your Excellency's mind would long ere now have subsided. A settlement of the revenues of the country, on fair and advantageous terms for your Excellency's subjects and for your Government, would long ago have been made; no material loss nor defalcation of your Excellency's revenue could have arisen; the seeds of disaffection and rebellion among your Excellency's subjects would have been destroyed, and their attachment to your person and Government would have been established on the only solid or permanent basis, that of gratitude for security enjoyed under the influence of a just system of administration.

Those salutary and happy results of your Excellency's cordial acquiescence in the counsels of the British Government, of your firm and constant adherence to the principles of the subsisting alliance, and to the terms of your engagement with Marquess Wellesley, are still in your Excellency's option, with every just and reasonable advantage of the Honourable Company's guarantee, and of our responsibility for the maintenance of your authority, whenever your Excellency may be pleased to demonstrate your acquiescence in those counsels, and your observance of those principles and terms, by commencing and conducting the reform, by proceeding in the exercise of your authority, under the influence and with the aid of our advice.

Your Excellency has been pleased to inform me, that, "contemplating the present disordered state of the country," &c. you no longer refuse to establish a system of administration in your dominions similar to that established in the Company's territory, a plan of which was promised by Lord Wellesley, or any other conformable to treaty, which may be proposed.

But your Excellency must surely be aware that the general outline of a system for the due administration of your revenue, and for the establishment of courts of justice and police, which was conveyed and recommended to your Excellency in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, under date the 28th December 1810, and the details of which were submitted by me, is exactly similar to that which prevails throughout the Company's dominions; a sketch of which was delivered to your Excellency by Lord Wellesley in person, if I mistake not, and which his Lordship promised to explain to your Excellency more fully, and to recommend for adoption in your dominions when experience should have satisfied him of its effects.

This promise has been fulfilled by Lord Minto, in the genuine spirit of friendship for your Excellency, and of regard for the interests of your Government, as well as for the reputation of both States; and your Excellency has only to refer to his Lordship's letter above noticed, and to the written discussions which followed it between your Excellency and me, to be satisfied of the justness of this remark, and of the necessity and expedience of your adopting the system which his Lordship in Council has proposed, and which is perfectly conformable to treaty.

In

In reply to your Excellency's remark, "that if, in the establishment of the system proposed, any loss shall be occasioned to your Government, you look to my friendship for reparation, &c." I have no hesitation in assuring your Excellency, that eventual resistance to your authority in the establishment of the system proposed, and in the execution of all such measures as may be determined on with my previous knowledge and advice, shall in every instance be suppressed by the power of the British troops in your dominions; and that to this extent, and with this just and necessary provision, the Honourable Company's guarantee, the responsibility of the British Government for the internal tranquillity of Oude, and the due realization of its revenue, as well as its external defence, will ever be recognised and acknowledged. A measure subversive of your Excellency's just authority, or having a tendency to diminish your consequence, has never been proposed by our Government, nor ever entered into its contemplation. But if, to offer its advice to your Excellency in the genuine spirit of friendship, and to urge your compliance with that advice on every important occasion, be an attempt to subvert your authority or to lessen your consequence among your subjects, it is my duty in candour to declare, that the right of the British Government to offer its advice to your Excellency, and to expect your compliance with its advice, as well as the obligation on your Excellency to consult with the British Government, and conform to its counsels on all occasions, being established by the spirit and letter of the alliance, cannot be relinquished nor departed from without essential injury to both States, and must ever be asserted and recognized.

Letter
from Resident at

Your Excellency's repeated declaration of a wish and intention to abide by the terms of the engagement with Marquess Wellesley is entirely satisfactory in itself; but as followed by, and connected with your remark, "that during the period to which I allude no new nor extraordinary affair in your Excellency's administration has occurred to require your consulting with our Government," seems, in my judgment, to be qualified in a degree that is not only totally inadmissible, but must be productive of the most injurious consequences, unless immediately obviated and removed.

I can never acquiesce in the interpretation which your Excellency seems disposed to assign to the terms of your engagement with Marquess Wellesley, to consult with the British Government, and to conform to its counsels and advice. The letter of the obligation in question extends "to all affairs connected with the ordinary government of your dominions and with the usual exercise of your authority," and the limitation of its sense, which has been proposed to "new and extraordinary measures," is in my judgment a total misconstruction, a manifest perversion of its object, which can never be supported nor acquiesced in, and against which it is my duty to protest in the most solemn and unqualified manner. I submit to your Excellency with confidence, as a fair and obvious deduction from the letter of your engagement with Marquess Wellesley, that the grant of a district in farm, the establishment of a court of Adawlut, the reform or alteration of any branch of the police of your Excellency's dominions, however frequently those measures have occurred, without my previous knowledge or concurrence, are measures that unquestionably require your previous consultation with our Government, and your conformity to our advice in the execution of them; and that the execution of such measures as those, like your Excellency's recent arrangements in the districts of Sandee and Beyswarrah, and a number of others which might be noticed in every department of your administration, without previous communication with me, is not only a violation of the engagement concluded between your Excellency and Lord Wellesley, but has an obvious tendency to exonerate the Honourable Company's Government from the obligation to maintain an authority, which, in the spirit of the subsisting alliance, should be uniformly exercised with its advice. The application of the foregoing remark to the important point in discussion, to the commencement and progress of every branch and of each individual measure of the salutary system of reform, is too obvious to require explanation, and should be ever in your Excellency's mind to ensure the success of those measures.

Under the influence and impression of this remark, if your Excellency be pleased to admit it, I entirely agree with your Excellency, that the sooner the reform be undertaken the better in every point of view; and the plan of it as referred to in this address is already in your Excellency's possession, its general outline being contained in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter of the 28th of December 1810, and the details of it submitted by me under his Lordship in Council's instructions, and subsequently honoured by his approbation.

I await the receipt of your Excellency's separate letters on the claims of Hoo-sein Alee Khan and Alee Nuckee Khan, with a degree of anxiety proportioned to the interest which the Government feels in the satisfactory adjustment of the claims and redress of the grievances of those persons.

Secret Intelligence from the Durbar: Beebeepore, 29th August 1813.

The Vizier, after quitting the Residency on Saturday, determined to retire to Beebeepore, and came out accordingly this morning. Having summoned Moon-shee Rownuck Alee to his presence, he called for all the papers respecting reform, which the Resident submitted to him long ago, and placed them in the drawer of his writing-table, observing that at the next conference with the Resident it would be determined whether those papers should be acted on or not. It seems that he is waiting to be told by the Resident that such and such measures must be immediately adopted, and that then only he will carry them into effect. At a consultation of yesterday, Hukeem Mehdee observed that a new Governor-General had sailed from England and was daily expected in Calcutta, and that many gentlemen had proceeded to meet him; it seemed, therefore, advisable to delay the execution of any new measures till the arrival of the new Governor-General. The Vizier replied to this remark, that he waited for nothing but a positive requisition from the Resident, which he could no longer attempt to evade.

On the Hukeem's remarking that his Excellency's retreat to Beebeepore was indicative of the weakness of his Government in the minds of the people, the Vizier was totally silent.

The Right Honourable Gilbert Lord Minto, Governor-General in Council,
&c. &c. &c.

My Lord :

1. Your Lordship's letter to the address of his Excellency the Vizier, under date the 2d of July last, was received from the Persian department on the 1st instant, and presented to his Excellency on the morning of Saturday, the 4th instant, at his country seat of Dilkoosha, where I had the honour of breakfasting with his Excellency.

2. The nature and tendency of the only remarks and exhortations which could with propriety have accompanied the delivery of such a letter as this to the Vizier must be so apparent to your Lordship in Council, as to supersede the necessity for my repeating them. I continued in conference with his Excellency, after reading some portions of the letter to him, for a space of several hours, during which I laboured assiduously to direct his most serious attention to the important tant and momentous crisis to which the discussion between him and the British Government had been brought, by his procrastination and evasion on questions that admitted not of dispute.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

3. Your Lordship's letter to his Excellency I described to him as containing a final declaration of the just expectations of the Honourable Company's Government on a number of questions that had been agitated between his Excellency and me for a period of three years, and on each of which his Excellency had taken advantage of the great lenity and forbearance of the British Government, for the purpose of evading demands, the manifest justice of which had been repeatedly demonstrated by arguments that his Excellency was originally unable to combat and had long ceased to oppose. For a recapitulation of those arguments, I referred him to some passages of your Lordship's former letters, and to several letters and memorials transmitted by me to his Excellency; particularly those of the 27th of June 1811, the 15th of January and 29th of August 1812, and the 29th of April, 1st of May, and 2d of July last, scarcely any of which had been honoured with a reply.

4. In reality, I observed to his Excellency, the questions to which those arguments referred did not at any time admit of dispute, and should never have given rise to the discussion which his unhappy disposition had occasioned.

The reform of his Excellency's Government was prescribed by the letter of a treaty, and should have commenced on the conclusion of that treaty. The delay on the part of our Government to propose a specific plan of reform had been accounted for in a satisfactory manner. It had arisen exclusively from a desire to render the system as perfect as possible by experience of its effects in our dominions; and this delay could never obviously have affected, in the smallest degree, the obligation on the part of his Excellency to execute a plan of our suggestion, whenever it should be proposed for his adoption. A specific and unobjectionable plan had been recommended by your Lordship to his Excellency in the beginning of the year 1811, and the details of it had been generally approved by him. Had they been disapproved by his Excellency, it might still have been argued with force, that, as the suggestions of the British Government, with whose advice he had pledged himself to conform, he was bound by the treaty to adopt them; and his refusal, even in that case, to do so, might have been considered as a violation of the treaty. But after solemnly declaring his acquiescence in the principal measures that were proposed to him, his refusal to carry them into effect might have justly involved him in consequences which I felt the greatest reluctance to describe to him, and which I prayed to God to avert. Those consequences were feelingly referred to in your Lordship's letter to his Excellency, as actually now hanging over him, and suspended alone by the moderation, the extraordinary patience and forbearance of the Honourable Company's Government, which his Excellency had tried to the utmost, and which could scarcely be expected to bear with his procrastination or evasion any longer.

5. But if the Government were even still disposed to forbear, I intreated his Excellency to consider that the actual state of his country, as recently described by himself, called loudly for immediate reform, and must shortly, in my opinion, be such as to require a more general and comprehensive interference on our part, than his Excellency perhaps was aware of, for the purpose of supporting his authority and preserving the tranquillity of his dominions.

6. His Excellency had repeatedly told me, that a fourth part of his revenue for the present year was outstanding, and that few of the principal landholders paid any respect to his Aumils; so that a general insurrection of the landholders might at no distant period be feared, and the aid of the British troops, to be necessarily accompanied by Ameens, in the terms of my declaration to his Excellency by your Lordship's especial command, was the only alternative that could remain for the support of his Excellency's authority, save his cordial concurrence with me in the execution of the measures of reform. To the effects of an interference like that described between his Excellency's officers and his subjects, indispensable on the part of our Government for the purpose of essential justice, and perfectly warranted by the spirit of the Honourable Company's guarantee, guarantee, I intreated his Excellency to attend, while forming his ultimate decision on the first and most important of the questions that were argued in your Lordship's letter; and with this exhortation I concluded my remarks on the subject of reform.

Consultations,

7. With a reference to the second of those questions, the claim of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan for redress of the grievances sustained by him during a period of several years, I recalled to his Excellency's mind the words of his letter to your Lordship, conveying an absolute promise to abide by your Lordship's decision on the merits of the question at issue. That decision his Excellency would find most fully and explicitly detailed in your Lordship's letter before him, and I could scarcely entertain a doubt of the speedy adjustment of the claim in the terms of your Lordship's decision.

8. The question of a provision for Hoosein Alee Khan, as far as his Excellency's promise was concerned, was exactly similar to the foregoing. His Excellency had promised to your Lordship to be guided by your decision on the case; and that decision having now been explained to him, his compliance with it should follow of course.

9. The only remaining point, I observed, which was treated in your Lordship's letter as a matter of just and immediate demand, was the restoration to her Highness the younger Begum of the possessions of her ancestors in Delhi, in pursuance of a promise by his Excellency, contained in two of his letters to her Highness, copies of which she had produced. On this subject I had nothing to add to your Lordship's most kind and considerate assurance, that his Excellency's early compliance would be received as a mark of his friendship and attention to the advice of the British Government.

10. The Vizier had listened to me in silence during the whole of the discourse which is here recorded. He now observed to me, that he had been long in expectation of receiving this letter from your Lordship, and was heartily glad that it had arrived, because it would necessarily lead to an adjustment, in some way or other, of questions that had been too long unsettled, more particularly the question of reform; that his affairs were in great and general disorder, owing to the protracted discussion of this question, and that he could not be at rest till it was settled. He would carry the letter with him directly to Bebeepore, would peruse it with care and attention, and no time should be lost in preparing and transmitting an answer, expressive of his final determination on every point that it embraced.

11. I replied, that the answer to be satisfactory must, in my judgment, be short, and might very easily be prepared; that the argument on every part of the subject was considered by your Lordship to be exhausted, and his Excellency's concession or rejection of the just demands of the Government, which your Lordship was determined to persist in, was all that was expected or required; that the former alternative was the wisest and most beneficial to the true interests of his Excellency, as well as the most conducive to the preservation of his authority and consequence, which were the objects nearest his heart, seemed, to my judgment, obvious and indisputable; and, judging on the question as I did, I performed a duty of friendship to his Excellency in recommending it most earnestly to his choice. At a future period, I added, if his Excellency should unhappily find the independence of his authority to be controlled, his consequence among his subjects to be lessened, by any circumstance or course of events, he would probably then recollect, and reflect with serious concern on, the friendly admonitions which I had so often conveyed to him, with the view of averting those evils, and particularly my exhortations of that day.

12. From the 4th till the 20th instant the Vizier continued at Beebeepore, intent, as he daily informed me, on the consideration of your Lordship's letter, and occupied in preparing his reply to it.

13. Being extremely desirous to bring about a satisfactory adjustment of the several subordinate questions which are agitated in your Lordship's letter to the Vizier before commencing on the work of reform, or at all events to separate the future discussion of this subject from that of every subordinate question, question, I addressed a short letter to his Excellency on the 8th instant in nearly the following terms. " I transmit, for your Excellency's consideration, an extract from your friendly letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, under date the 17th of Shabaun 1227 (26th August 1812), expressive of your absolute promise to be guided by his Lordship's decision on the cases of Hoosein Alee Khan and Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan; and as your Excellency has now been apprized, in a manner the most authentic and solemn, of his Lordship in Council's decision on both of the cases at issue, I submit my confident hope, that your Excellency's promise will be fulfilled without any further delay, and that the sincerity of your professions of friendship and consideration for the British Government will thus be established beyond a doubt, to the real satisfaction of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, and more particularly to mine."

Consultations,

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

14. On the 9th instant I addressed another letter to his Excellency, of which the following is a verbal translation: " Your Excellency's justice and benevolence have ultimately enabled me to effect a final and satisfactory adjustment of all the most important concerns of her Highness the younger Begum, and with the exception of her Highness's claim for the possessions of her ancestors at Delhi, which your Excellency promised to restore to her on two separate occasions, in your letters of which copies are enclosed, I am not aware of any unsettled demand against your Excellency's Government by her Highness. On the subject of this latter demand, your Excellency has been recently apprized of the sentiments and wishes of the British Government in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter of the 2d of July last; and his Lordship has laid his injunctions on me to procure the restoration of those possessions to her Highness the Begum, who has herself also recently applied to me on the subject, in a letter of which a copy is enclosed. In obedience to his Lordship's command, and in compliance with the desire of the Begum, I solicit the favour of an order on your Excellency's agent at Delhi for the surrender of her Highness's possessions to the person appointed to take charge of them, who is now in attendance on me. An adjustment of the revenues of those possessions, and the payment of the balance due to her Highness, can be easily settled hereafter."

15. To the first of the two letters above inserted I received an immediate answer: the second has not been honoured with a reply. His Excellency's answer to my letter of the 8th instant is expressed in the following terms. " The truth is, that the discussion regarding the cases of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan and Hoosein Alee Khan has proceeded to a most disagreeable length, and cannot be protracted any longer without real uneasiness to me. The affairs of this Government, indeed, must be subject to the greatest embarrassment, until all the questions that are agitated in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter be settled, and consequently I can never be unmindful for a moment of the necessity of bringing them to an adjustment. I am sedulously occupied in perusing all the papers that have reference to those points; but as the cases of the Moonshee and the Khan form parts of the Governor-General's letter, until the terms of my answer to that letter be adjusted I cannot take up any of those cases."

16. The evasive nature and object of his Excellency's letter, above quoted, must be evident to your Lordship in Council from a mere perusal of its terms: but they were rendered still more manifest to me by the reports of his Excellency's proceedings at Bebeepore, and of the counsels by which he is known to be influenced in his opposition to the views of our Government. I replied to his Excellency's letter by a message to the following effect, delivered in writing to my Moonshee, for the purpose of being read by his Excellency: " The disposition evinced to my judgment by the contents of your Excellency's letter of yesterday has filled me with grief and concern. I can scarcely suppose it to be possible that your Excellency should form a wish to depart from a positive promise on any point, conveyed either verbally or in writing, to me or to any one else; but an unconditional promise contained in a letter from your " Excellency to the Right Honourable the Governor-General is an obligation of

" so solemn a nature, that my mind rejects the idea of a departure from it in any " respect. Yet if your Excellency were disposed to fulfil your assurance in " behalf of the Moonshee, I can scarcely account for a delay in your issuing " the several orders which the Governor-General has proposed to you. The " words of your Excellency's letter to his Lordship are these: 'Whatever your " Lordship desires, inform me of it, and I shall act accordingly.' His Lord" ship's reply is as follows: 'I deem it incumbent on your Excellency's justice " to issue your positive orders to the Aumil of Sandee for the release and res" toration to the Moonshee of his hereditary possessions in that district,' &c.
" Under these circumstances, let me respectfully inquire of your Excellency
" what is meant by the expression in your letter to me, 'that you cannot take " up the case of the Moonshee;' a case that is absolutely decided by your Ex" cellency's unconditional promise, and that requires but a few lines of an order " to your Excellency's Aumil of Sandee, 'till the terms of your answer be " settled:' and if such be the disposition of your mind with a reference to a " case that is decided, what hope can your well-wisher indulge of a speedy and " satisfactory adjustment of the other questions at issue, so as to strengthen, or " even to preserve, the relations of friendship and harmony subsisting between " the two States. I beseech your Excellency most earnestly to issue your " orders without delay in the terms of his Lordship's requisition for the redress " of the grievances of the Moonshee, and the restoration of his just rights. I
" further exhort your Excellency, with similar earnestness and anxiety, to com" ply with his Lordship's request of a provision for Hoosein Alee Khan, and to " issue your orders immediately for the restoration to her Highness the Begum
" of the possessions of her ancestors at Dehli, so that nothing may remain for " discussion between your Excellency and me, save the important question of " reform, and the execution, in concurrence with each other, of the salutary
" arrangements connected with it; and that your Excellency's friendly reply to " the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, instead of the labour of " many more days, may be a short and satisfactory declaration of your acqui" escence in all his demands:—your fulfilment of his just expectations. I " intreat your Excellency to be assured of the truth and sincerity of the friend" ship with which I submitted my advice to your Excellency on each and all " of those points at our conference on Saturday last, and that whoever may " advise you to act otherwise than in compliance with my friendly admonition,
" in the name of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, is an enemy to " your person and Government, however specious his counsels may appear. I " concur most cordially in the justness of your Excellency's remark, that the " whole of the concerns of your Government must be subject to embarrassment
" and disorder, until the questions that have been agitated, and are at issue, be " brought to a satisfactory conclusion. But the real cause of this disorder is " manifestly no other than that which the Right Honourable the Governor-Gen" eral has described to your Excellency in the concluding paragraph of his letter, " namely, your Excellency's reluctance to conform to the counsels of the Bri" tish Government; and it is at all times in your Excellency's power, by a " prompt and sincere compliance with the just demands and salutary advice of " that Government, to rectify every disorder, to secure the prosperity of your
" dominions, and the ease and happiness of your mind."

17. The Vizier's reply to my message, which my Moonshee saw him read with attention, was conceived in the following terms: "That he was sorry to observe my suspicion of his wish to evade or resist the demands of the British Government, as conveyed by your Lordship's letter to him; that any longer evasion or delay was obviously out of the question; the discussion of all the points in dispute had already lasted for years, and an end must be put to it immediately; that resistance to your Lordship's demands was obviously out of his power, and no resource but acquiescence remained; that he was occupied from morning till night in preparing his reply to the letter, and that I should receive it in a very few days. What then was the occasion for hurry on any particular subject, when the whole must be settled so speedily? My importunities might perplex and disturb him, but could answer no beneficial end."

18. The

18. The purport of the message above stated, had a natural tendency to persuade me that his Excellency the Vizier was at length happily convinced of the necessity of his acquiescence in the just demands of our Government, with a reference to the question of reform and to all the other questions that are agitated in your Lordship's letter to his address; and therefore I deemed it to be my duty to refrain from any further importunity with his Excellency, till the result of his deliberation should be known.

19. My subsequent communications with the Vizier were accordingly limited to the object of accelerating the redress of the grievances of some sepoys and other dependants of our Government, and particularly of Mal Tewaree Naick, whose case is already known to your Lordship in Council, and whose personal attendance in Lucknow, although summoned again from Benares at the express desire of the Vizier, for the purpose of reclaiming his property, by making oath to its value and extent, has hitherto proved totally ineffectual to the redress of his manifest wrongs. The extraordinary, though characteristic pretext, on which his Excellency the Vizier has attempted to evade the fulfilment of his promise in behalf of this unfortunate Naick, is worthy of particular animadversion. The Aumil, or Deputy Aumil, by whom Mal Tewaree was imprisoned and plundered, has been dismissed from the Vizier's employment, and his Excellency is now pleased to argue that the power of doing justice to Mal Tewaree is entirely out of his hands; "for," says his Excellency, "I did not plunder Mal Tewaree, and why should I be required to compensate his loss? Let him seek his redress from Imrut Loll (the displaced Aumil), in whom I or my Government have no farther concern." It can scarcely be necessary to contrast, for your Lordship in Council's information, the words of his Excellency's promise with the argument that has thus been adduced. "When he (Mal Tewaree) attends and makes oath to his losses, his property, or the value of it, shall be restored." My further proceedings, with a view to the redress of the wrongs of Mal Tewaree, and the result of those proceedings, if necessary, shall be reported to your Lordship in Council through the medium of the Secretary to Government.

20. On the evening of Saturday, the 25th instant, I received the Vizier's reply to your Lordship's letter, and had the mortification of finding it to be written in the same perverse and unhappy disposition of mind which his Excellency has uniformly evinced for so long a period of time, and which precluded any reasonable expectation of his cordial concurrence with me in the execution of the reforms of his Government proposed by your Lordship in Council, or his willing concession of any other of the remaining points in dispute. A reluctant and compulsive assent to the system recommended by your Lordship, or an assurance that it shall be carried into effect, and a promise, as evasive as the former, of the restoration of the rights of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, are the only points in the letter which seem worthy of notice for the present. It is my intention hereafter, if it be necessary, or if his Excellency shall not see cause to recall the letter entirely, and substitute a more proper one in its stead, to submit a translation of it to your Lordship, with remarks on its general spirit and tenor, and on the extraordinary assertions which it contains.

21. Immediately on my perusal of the letter, I sent a message to his Excellency the Vizier, expressive of my serious concern at the disposition and temper of mind in which his Excellency appeared to have addressed the head of the British Government in India, and more particularly at the manifest inconsistency of the view which his Excellency had now taken of the several questions at issue, with the purport of his messages on those subjects delivered to me so recently by my Moonshee. I added my intention to wait on him on the morning of the following Monday, for the purpose of offering some remarks on the general tenor of his letter and the consequences likely to be produced by it; after which, if his Excellency wished it, the letter should be forwarded to the Presidency without any further delay.

22. The occurrence of the Eed upon Monday precluded an interview with his Excellency till the morning of the 28th instant, when he did me the honour of breakfasting with me. We had a conference of several hours; and the result was, his Excellency's expression of a desire to recal his letter, with a seeming sincere resolution to alter its general spirit, and to express at least in a more cordial manner his acquiescence in the system of reform, as well as to do immediate justice with a reference to the claims of Alee Nuckee Khan.

23. I have acquiesced in his Excellency's desire to a certain extent, by promising to suspend the despatch of the letter to your Lordship until the evening of the 30th instant, when I have declared my resolution to forward it, with such remarks as the occasion requires, unless I receive in the mean time some satisfactory demonstration on his part of a happy change in his sentiments and counsels, with regard to all the matters in dispute.

To the Right Honourable Gilbert Lord Minto, Governor-General in Council, &c. &c. &c.

My Lord:

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch under date the 29th ultimo, I have now the peculiar satisfaction of announcing to your Lordship in Council a complete, and apparently, a sincere alteration in the counsels and sentiments of the Vizier, with regard to every matter in dispute between the British Government and his Excellency.

2. The result, although not the detail, of my conference with his Excellency on Tuesday last, is already before your Lordship in Council. The nature of the arguments which I used to convince his Excellency of the danger to which he was exposing himself unnecessarily, as well as unwisely, by his continued and perverse opposition to the just demands of our Government and to your Lordship's most salutary advice, needs not to be described on this occasion.

3. His Excellency at parting with me desired that my Moonshee, Alee Nuckee Khan, should attend him on Wednesday, for the purpose of submitting his sunnuds and obtaining the restoration of his rights. When the Moonshee waited on the Vizier, his Excellency, instead of examining his sunnuds, engaged him in a conversation on the subject of the contents of his letter to your Lordship, which he concluded that the Moonshee had seen. He observed, that I was highly dissatisfied with the purport of that letter, and that he wished, if it were possible, to alter it in the manner which I had proposed. That there were four points agitated in the letter: the reform, which his Excellency had agreed to by compulsion; the Moonshee's own claim, which he had now determined to concede as a mark of his friendship for me; the demand of a provision for Hoosein Alee Khan, which, to a small or trifling extent, he was also disposed to acquiesce in; and the question of the possessions in Dehli, unjustly claimed by the Begum, whose brother, Emam-ood-Deen Khan, and his children, had a preferable right to those possessions. The Moonshee very properly answered, that he was not entrusted nor authorized by me to make any representation to his Excellency, save with a reference to his own claims; but, as an old servant of mine, that he would venture to receive and communicate any friendly proposal from his Excellency, with a certainty of its meeting with attention.

4. From the Moonshee's report of his further conversation with the Vizier, I gathered that his Excellency's principal objection in reality, though a number of others were stated, to the adoption of the system of reform, was not an objection to its principle, nor even to the general outline of the plan, as described in your Lordship's letter of the 28th December 1810, but was founded on an article of the agreement between his Excellency and me, under date the 4th of April 1811, by which he considered himself bound to submit to my inspection the whole of the revenue accounts of his dominions, and to obtain obtain my approbation of every scheme of assessment of a district before the settlement should be carried into effect; or, in other words, agreeably to his Excellency's construction, to place the power of assessment of his revenue in the hands of the British Government or its representative; and that if this objection could be removed, there was reasonable ground to expect the Vizier's cordial concurrence in the measures of reform, and his concession, partial or total, of every other matter in dispute.

5. That nothing could be more remote from your Lordship in Council's intention than the ground of his Excellency's alarm which is stated in the foregoing paragraph, was sufficiently obvious to me, and I determined to strain every nerve, to exert every faculty of reasoning, to banish this fear from his mind, and to convince him that a just and moderate assessment of his dominions for a fixed period of time, with security to the landholders and cultivators for a strict adherence to the terms of their engagements with the Government and with each other, was all that your Lordship had in view, and that no unwarranted nor unnecessary, and far less an indelicate, interference in the minute details of his Excellency's administration of his revenue was ever contemplated by me. That if no coercion were used at the time of the settlement with the landholders, the terms of it would necessarily be just and moderate, and that unless the British troops were required to coerce the Zemindars, I should never consider it to be my duty to inquire at what rate the estate of any landholder was assessed, nor even to ask information from his Excellency regarding the revenue of any portion of his dominions. That in cases where the aid of our troops might be required, his Excellency would, of course, in the first instance, endeavour to satisfy himself, and would deem it reasonable to satisfy me by the production of authenticated documents, that the demand to be enforced was a just one; and that beyond this fair and legitimate object, the British Government had no desire whatever to interfere between his Excellency or his Amils and the landholders.

6. A number of messages having reference to this particular question had passed between his Excellency and me, through the medium of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, during Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday; and this morning I waited on his Excellency by appointment, and had a conference with him of several hours. The details of this conference shall be reported for your Lordship in Council's information at a period of greater leisure.

In the mean time I congratulate your Lordship, with the most cordial and unfeigned satisfaction, on what I consider to be the happy adjustment of every important question depending between your Lordship's Government and the Vizier.

His Excellency's cordial concurrence in the general outline of reform recommended by your Lordship's letter of the 28th December 1810, and in all the essential details of it, was announced to me in a manner the most solemn; and his Excellency has promised, with every degree of apparent sincerity, to record that concurrence under his seal, in a letter to your Lordship's address, and in terms suggested by me, as soon as a letter can be prepared. Justice has been rendered to Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, by an order, under the seal of the Vizier, addressed to his Amil of Sandee, in the terms, or nearly the terms of your Lordship's letter to his Excellency. A provision of two thousand rupees per month, which I consider as liberal and ample, has been promised by his Excellency the Vizier to Hoosein Alee Khan and the other indigent members of the family of the late Hyder Beg Khan. The value of the property claimed by Mal Tewaree, Naick of the Honourable Company's service, is in train of liquidation by the displaced Amil, who plundered him; and her Highness the younger Begum's claim for the restoration of her father's possessions in Dehli has been admitted, to the extent which the Mohummudan law authorizes with a reference to her brother's rights.

7. On taking leave of his Excellency this morning he embraced me in the most cordial manner at the door of his palace, where all his native courtiers and a number of English gentlemen were assembled, for the purpose, as he stated to me in private, of demonstrating to his subjects at large the happy result of our conference, and manifesting to all around him that the uneasiness and anxiety of his mind, which had long been apparent to his courtiers, were now entirely removed.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches, dated respectively the 29th September and 2d instant, the latter communicating the gratifying intelligence of the assent of his Excellency the Vizier to the plan submitted to him by the British Government for the reform of his administration, and his Excellency's compliance with the other requisitions contained in the late Governor-General's letter to his address of the 2d of July last.

2. The contents of that despatch have afforded the Governor-General in Council a very high degree of satisfaction, and encouraged his Lordship in Council to hope that the strenuous and persevering exertions of the Government to introduce into the territory of Oude, with the concurrence of the Vizier, a system of administration calculated no less to secure his Excellency's real interests than to promote the ease, happiness, and prosperity of his subjects, may ultimately be attended with their merited success.

3. The Governor-General in Council anxiously expects the receipt of his Excellency's letter in reply to that above referred to, and his Lordship in Council trusts that the delay which has occurred in its transmission is not occasioned by any hesitation on the part of his Excellency to confirm, in a direct address to the Governor-General, those assurances which he has so solemnly conveyed to you. Until the Vizier's letter and your further communications shall be received, it would be premature to enter into any detailed remarks on the subject of your despatches. His Lordship in Council, however, cannot allow to pass this occasion of signifying to you his high approbation of the manner in which you have conducted to its present apparently favourable stage, a negotiation, in the course of which you have received the repeated acknowledgments, approbation, and applause of this Government.

My Lord :

1. I have this day received from his Excellency the Vizier, and transmitted to the Persian Department, the promised letter from his Excellency to your Lordship's address, which is referred to in my despatch of the 2d instant, expressive of the Vizier's cordial consent to the salutary reforms of his Government recommended by your Lordship in Council, and his concession, partial or total, of all the other demands which are stated in your Lordship's letter to his Excellency of the 2d of July last.

2. It was my wish and suggestion to the Vizier that his Excellency should entirely refrain from noticing, in his letter to your Lordship, any one of the various points which were formerly matters of dispute between the two Governments, but had been settled to your Lordship's satisfaction, and that his Excellency

Excellency should carefully avoid any retrospective observation or expression that could tend to qualify the harmony which seems now to be happily re-established between the British Government and himself.

3. A handsome or unqualified concession, however, is unfortunately quite inconsistent with the disposition of his Excellency the Vizier; and my knowledge of his Excellency's character has tended to excite agreeable surprize in my mind, rather than any degree of disappointment, at the terms in which his letter is conceived.

4. Any further remarks which may occur to me as necessary to be submitted to Government, on the general tenor of the letter, or particular observations contained in it, shall form the subject of a future despatch. For the present, and in the contemplation of your Lordship's early return to England, I content myself with repeating my sincere and respectful congratulations on the success of the exertions of your Lordship's Government to persuade his Excellency the Vizier, of the necessity and advantage of a reform in the administration of the revenue of his dominions.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Received the 22d October 1813.)

I have had the honour to receive your Lordship's obliging letter of the 2d of July, urging me to introduce the proposed system of reform into my reserved dominions.

Your Lordship has observed, that the delay which has occurred in the preparation of your answer to my letter, has arisen partly from the occupation of your time by other matters of public exigency, and partly by a hope that I should have been convinced of the justice of the arguments employed by Major Baillie, for the purpose of effecting an adjustment of all depending questions, and that a fair prospect would consequently be afforded of a removal of the evils of the present system of my Government, by the introduction of the plan of administration recommended to my adoption; but that your Lordship has now found yourself compelled to address me in terms of remonstrance and expostulation, which it can neither be agreeable to your Lordship to use, nor to me to hear.

The case is this:—I have no kind sympathizing friend but your Lordship, and in fact I consider my individual happiness and welfare to depend on your Lordship's kindness, and I look for the prosperity, the success, and the good of my Government, exclusively to the aid, assistance, and protection of the British Government. When, therefore, I entertained objections to the proposed system of reform, I stated them to Major Baillie, who in the course of his conferences said that he would endeavour, as far as he was able, to remove those objections; and that if any should still remain, your Lordship would remove them, and satisfy my mind in the fullest manner. I was therefore under the necessity of addressing myself to your Lordship on the subject; and the establishment of the proposed system was suspended until an answer should be received to my letter, and my doubts be removed. Now, however, your Lordship has complained of my not having carried the proposed system into effect. But let your Lordship have the goodness to consider, that if my mind had been relieved from those doubts and objections, there would have been no necessity for communicating them to your Lordship.

With regard to your Lordship's assurance, that it is impossible that the British Government should ever propose to me the adoption of a measure having the

the most remote tendency to diminish my personal consequence, or to impair the just authority of my Government, your Lordship's personal kindness and the friendship subsisting between the two Governments afford a well-grounded hope, that such will always be the conduct of the British Government towards me, since fidelity to its engagements is the peculiar characteristic of that Government; while I, on my part, am bound by treaty (as indeed it is also a pleasure to me) to conform to its advice.

Your Lordship has declared, that no lapse of time nor change of circumstances will induce the British Government to relinquish a measure, which it considers to be essential to the welfare and happiness of my subjects, to the promotion of my own substantial ease, comfort, and advantage, and to the reputation and interests of both Governments, and which it is bound by the most solemn obligations to persevere in seeing carried into effect, according to the provisions of the treaty.

I never can propose, or even desire, that the British Government should refrain from advising and adopting any measure which may be according to treaty; on the contrary, I consider the advice of the British Government to be conducive to the support and prosperity of my interests. Your Lordship's writing to me, therefore, in this manner, is an additional source of comfort to my mind.

With regard to your Lordship's remark, that by refusing to carry the proposed system of administration into effect, I shall violate an express stipulation of the treaty of 1801: the fact is, that nothing can be further from my thoughts than the violating an article of the treaty. If I were to persevere (in refusing) to carry into effect a system of administration for my country which shall be according to treaty, then I should assuredly be guilty of a violation of an express article of the treaty: but if I am disposed to introduce into my reserved dominions, through the medium of my own officers, and with the advice and assistance of the British Government, a system of administration conducive to the prosperity of my subjects, and calculated to secure the lives and property of the inhabitants, I am satisfied that the British Government will not entertain this opinion with respect to me.

Heaven forbid that I should be disposed to act contrary to treaty! I am perfectly ready to establish a system of administration by my own authority, and through the medium of my own public officers, with the advice of the British Government. My desire was, that the proposed system, after the removal of my objections and the concession of such points as appeared to affect my consequence and dignity, should be carried into effect. Now that your Lordship's kindness, and the recent conferences with Major Baillie, and the assurances afforded by that officer on his own part, combined with a promise of obtaining similar assurances from your Lordship with respect to the concession of certain trifling points in the proposed system, especially the furnishing the Resident at my Court with the papers relating to the assessment, &c. sent in by the Ameens, which would be in the highest degree degrading; also your Lordship's express assurance that the adoption of the plan of reform will secure my ease and comfort, and generally the prosperity of all my concerns, and that the aid of the British troops will be afforded me, and that the system is in every respect for my advantage, and your promise that Major Baillie will employ his exertions to uphold and support my consequence, power, and authority, have relieved my mind and inspired me with confidence; I agree to the introduction of the system proposed in your Lordship's letter of the 28th of December 1810.

As, indeed, my comfort and happiness, and the prosperity and welfare of my Government, entirely depend on the assistance and protection of the British Government, I shall cheerfully exert myself to carry into effect the proposed system by my own authority, through the medium of my own public officers, that is to say, the assessment of the lands throughout the country shall be regulated by the real assets of the several districts, to be ascertained by actual investigation, and be fixed for a certain sum, and that assessment shall be increased only in proportion to the augmentation of resources in the several districts. The revenue to be paid by the Zemindars, renters and Ryots, also, shall be fixed on a full full investigation by Ameens of the capacity of the lands, by written engagements, which shall be guaranteed by the State, that no more than what is specified in those engagements may, on any account, be exacted from the parties; and the Zemindars and others shall have the privilege of appealing to the authority of the Government against any violation on the part of the Amils, that the latter may be restrained from oppression.

All these arrangements shall be adopted in establishing the proposed system of reform. When any Zemindar shall be refractory about paying his rent, copies of his cabooleat and pottah shall, if necessary, be sent to the Resident, that he may see them, and punish such refractory individuals.

With regard to Moonshce Aleo Nuckee Khan, after exposing the real state of the case to your Lordship, and imparting to you my own sentiments on it, I, from motives of respect to your Lordship, added, that I was ready to do whatever might be your Lordship's wish; and I was expecting that your Lordship would write to desire, that after inspecting and examining his sunnuds, I would restore him to his just rights. Your Lordship having been pleased again to desire me to comply with the points relating to his case, with the view of promoting your Lordship's satisfaction, I have given orders for the execution of them.

With respect to what your Lordship has written on the subject of restoring the stipend enjoyed by the family of the late Hyder Beg Khan to his younger son Hoosein Alee Khan, the case is this:—I declared to your Lordship, in the fullest and most unqualified manner, my ignorance of the grant, the payment, or the discontinuance, of such a stipend. At the same time, I distinctly intimated to your Lordship, that if, besides the stipend, the right to which could not in any manner be proved, there was any thing else which your Lordship desired, I was ready to do it to the extent of my ability.

I never knew, nor do I know, any thing of the grant of the stipend in question; nor was it discontinued in my time. If the stipend had actually been granted, some trace of it must certainly have appeared among the records of my Government. Under these circumstances, it is by no means incumbent upon me to grant the stipend; but as I am sincerely disposed to promote your Lordship's satisfaction to the utmost of my power, I beg leave to inform your Lordship, that at the suggestion of Major Baillie, I have assigned the sum of 2,000 rupees a month for the maintenance and support of all the surviving members of the family of the late Hyder Beg Khan.

With respect to what your Lordship has written with the pen of kindness on the subject of her Highness the Bhabee Begum (Shums-oon-Nissa), and of my issuing an order for the release of her lands, houses, and gardens at Delhi, and paying the amount of the collections which I have received from them, I have to observe, that I have never been deficient in paying due respect to her Highness; but she, on her part, has not demeaned herself towards me in a manner suitable to her relationship to me, or to my dignity as sovereign. On this subject I mentioned several circumstances in my letter written at the close of the month of Shabaun (8th of September 1812); but not having been gratified by an answer to it, I have, agreeably to Major Baillie's desire, commuted the khassa (victuals) for a payment in money; and, in commutation of the jagier, I have given more than the jumma; so that I suffer a considerable loss: but out of compliment to Major Baillie, I have not made any dispute about it. If your Lordship, however, will consider justly, you will be satisfied that I am not required by the tenor of my engagements to assign any monthly or annual allowance to persons who leave my dominions. Two villages which are stated in the schedule of the muhls of the jagier to be rent-free (minhāee), and which do not belong to the jagier, remain as a separate tenure, and I have not even now taken possession of them. At the time that her Highness determined to retire to Elahabad, I endeavoured, through Major Baillie, to divert her from her purpose, by the language of conciliation and kindness, and by representation, to all which she paid no attention whatever: and when she retired from her jagier to Selimpore, and Major Baillie prepared to proceed to that place, for the purpose of prevailing upon her Highness to return, I gave a letter to Major Baillie to his own address, dated the 13th of Zeekaud, 1227 Hijjuree (19th November 1812), and asked him what your Lordship would say now ; when he said, that the blame rested not with me, but with her Highness. I have no doubt that your Lordship has received a copy of that letter, from which, and the representations of Major Baillie, your Lordship will be apprized of the conciliatory line of conduct which I have pursued towards her Highness. Major Baillie being your Lordship's representative, his word is, in fact, the same as your Lordship's. Be pleased, then, to reflect well, whether, when the representations of that officer fail to produce any effect, and are disregarded by her Highness, any conciliation or kindness on my part could succeed in making an impression on her mind. Be pleased to consider, that if, notwithstanding all this consideration towards her Highness on my part, she will not be reconciled, and will remain at variance with me, I am not in fault ; I cannot help it. None of the ladies of this family ever went elsewhere : an instance of it, therefore, occurring in my own time, is a source of deep concern to my mind. As to the villages, lands, and gardens, if any one had a claim to them, it was her Highness's brother, the late Eman-ood-Deen Khan, who had the claim, and after him her nephew, Hoosein-ood-Deen Khan. Besides, these lands have remained under the same circumstances as they were before my time. I did not resume them ; and formerly, when I made a promise to her Highness to restore them, Emam-ood-Deen Khan was alive. Emam-ood-Deen Khan, Hoosein-ood-Deen Khan, and her Highness were all here. Now that her Highness has chosen to leave this place, she solely cannot assert a claim to the proprietary right of those lands.

With regard to what your Lordship has written respecting her Highness the Bhow Begum, the case is this :—The points regarding her Highness have been settled according to the desire of Major Baillie ; but her Highness has obtained possession of several places which belong to me, and a large sum of money is due to me from her. Notwithstanding the promise of the British Government, the adjustment of this, and all other points relating to me, is suspended. The fugitives from my territories, who seek an asylum in her Highness's jagier, also go unpunished ; and her Highness pays no regard to my representations. With respect to the ladies of the khoord muhl, disgrace and dishonour have occurred. I am degraded and debased by these domestic events. I stated them fully to your Lordship ; but on that subject, also, I have not been gratified by any answer. I do not think it necessary to advert to them specifically, on the present occasion ; but I must observe, that according to the tenor of the engagement concluded between her Highness and me, the interference of her Highness in the concerns of the ladies of the khoord muhl, and in the distribution of their stipends, is subject to this condition—that, whenever requisite, she will render me kindness and assistance.

The fact however is, that at the time of Marquess Wellesley's coming (to Lucknow), I had occasion for lacs of rupees ; but I received no kindness or assistance whatever from her Highness. I did myself the honour to address your Lordship on this subject also. Your Lordship's not favouring me with an answer to that communication, or with a reply to the letter in which I expressed a desire to pay my personal respects to your Lordship, and your not furnishing me with a plan of a system of commerce, notwithstanding the promise of it, and the allowing such a length of time to elapse, certainly indicate a want of kindness.

The departure of Hyder Buksh from this place without coming to any adjustment, the non-receipt of the money due from Khanazad Khan (Mirza Jaun), and the collecting of the duties from the Subzee Munde (green market) at Delhi, contrary to usage, although it be in itself a trifling matter, with reference to the friendship subsisting between the two governments, which has identified the interests of both, are a source of regret and concern to my mind.

As my welfare and happiness, and the prosperity of the concerns of my Government, depend on your Lordship's personal kindness, and the aid and assistance of the British Government, if I were not to represent these circumstances.

circumstances to your Lordship, and were not to solicit assistance from the British Government, what should I do?

I formerly expressed an intention of travelling: I therefore wished, after obtaining your Lordship's permission for that purpose, to set out for Calcutta; and, after having the honour of paying my respects to your Lordship, and stating to you all the particulars of my situation, I proposed, if it should seem expedient, with your Lordship's approbation and sanction, agreeably to the anxious wish I have long entertained, to prosecute my travels and return: but having now heard of your Lordship's resignation and intention to return immediately to England, I have relinquished all thoughts of it.

May your Lordship's prosperity and happiness be permanent.

His Excellency the Vizier's first intimation to me of an insurrection in his district of Dureeabad was unaccompanied (from motives of diffidence, I presume, on the part of his Excellency) by any application for the aid of the British troops; but as it almost immediately followed his acquiescence in the measures of reform, I was glad to avail myself of an opportunity of manifesting a cordial desire to promote his Excellency's views, and even to anticipate his requisition, by offering the aid of our troops to quell the insurrection in Dureeabad; suggesting to his Excellency, however, the measures which appeared to be proper with the view of superseding any active military operations, and which his Excellency most cheerfully agreed to, desiring me to furnish him with drafts of the requisition to be addressed to myself, and of the mandates to be issued to his landholders.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 9th October 1813.)

I transmitted to you yesterday a paper of intelligence received from Dureeabad, containing an account of the rebellious conduct of Hurdut Sing, Talookadar of Sireegaung.

As it appears that this person has collected a considerable force, with which he has surrounded the Aumil and cut off his supplies, there is reason to apprehend the destruction of the Aumil, unless measures for his relief be immediately adopted; and therefore I request that you will write to the commanding-officer of the troops at Secrora to put a stop to the rebellious conduct of the above-mentioned Talookadar, and to prevent Goordut Sing, Daood Khan, and others, from aiding and abetting him.

An Ameen will be deputed from hence, with all practicable expedition, to investigate and settle the dispute between the Aumil and the above-mentioned Talookadar according to justice. Until the arrival of the Ameen, let the Talookadar be prevented from committing any outrage against the Aumil.

Enclosure.

Perwannah addressed to Hurdut Sing, 10th October 1813.

It has been represented to the Presence, that you have collected a force with rebellious intentions, and have actually attacked the Aumil of the Sircar Amrut Loll, whose force you have surrounded for the purpose of cutting off his supplies: It is, therefore, written to you, that an Ameen has been appointed and deputed from the Presence to proceed immediately to Dureeabad, and settle your dispute with the Aumil according to justice. Do you, therefore, refrain from your rebellious practices, dismiss your followers, and await the arrival of the Ameen; or otherwise be prepared to receive the most severe and exemplary punishment from a detachment of British troops, which has been ordered to proceed against you immediately, in case of your disobeying this mandate.

I have now the honour to inform you, that in obedience to your instructions, I have this day despatched Buctaur Sing, an intelligent sepoy, with the above mandates, and have directed him to apprize the Talookadar and Zemindars concerned, that I have received orders to march immediately with the detachment under my command, for the purpose of dispersing their followers and of supporting the Aumil, unless implicit obedience be paid to the mandates of his Excellency the Vizier.

To prevent any misunderstanding which might arise from a verbal message, I have made the above communication to Hurdut Sing and Goordut Sing, in two separate notes which I have forwarded with his Excellency's mandates, and trust my having done so will meet with your approbation.

Sir :

I have the honour to acquaint you, that Buctaur Sing, the sepoy whom I sent with his Excellency's mandates, arrived here this morning, and has reported the following particulars of his mission.

That the refractory Zemindars, with a considerable number of followers, collected together in a thick jungle impenetrable for guns, about eight coss to the southward of Dureeabad, and that going to one of their advanced posts for the purpose of delivering his Excellency's mandates, he was refused an interview with the persons to whom they were addressed. He further informs me, that the Aumil has been reinforced by another gun and about one hundred Nujeebs, and is now posted within one coss and a half of the rebels, and is endeavouring to make an amicable adjustment, but with what success I have not been able to learn.

As I understand the Ameen whom his Excellency intended to depute to that quarter has not yet arrived, and the Aumil has extricated himself from the situation of danger in which he was placed, I have been induced to postpone my determination of marching out until I am favoured with your further instructions, as the arrival of our detachment might interfere with the Aumil's plans to adjust the differences by conciliatory measures.

I have, however, warned the detachment to be in readiness to move out at a moment's notice, and shall make no delay in joining the Aumil should your orders be to that effect.

Sir :

1. I am concerned to have occasion to report to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, that since the date of my last despatch to your address, having reference to the disposal of the property of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, which the Vizier had claimed as his own, his Excellency has unhappily reverted to the same pernicious counsels that have so long dictated his opposition to the just views of our Government, and has evinced an inclination to depart not only from the positive promises expressed at his conferences with me, and reported in my recent despatches, but even from the solemn assurances which are conveyed in his letter to Lord Minto of the 12th of October last, with regard to the question of reform and to other points in dispute, that appeared to have been finally settled so as to preclude any future discussion.

2. A detail of the various circumstances and proceedings on the part of the Vizier, which have induced me, though with extraordinary reluctance, to form this opinion of his designs, shall be submitted for the notice of the Government, as soon as translations of my correspondence can be prepared ; but in the mean time I deem it of importance, that his Lordship in Council should be apprized of the Vizier's delay to fulfil, and apparent intention to evade, the promises contained in his letter of the 12th of October last, with the view of enabling his Lordship to take such notice of this conduct in his reply to his Excellency's letter, as the wisdom of the Government may suggest.

The 31st December 1813.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. A number of considerations, which it seems unnecessary to notice in this despatch, induced me to postpone the execution of the orders of Government, conveyed by your letters of the 3d and 10th of September last, having reference to the property of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, and to refrain from making any communication on that subject to his Excellency the Vizier, until Saturday the 30th ultimo, when I was impelled to commence the discussion with his Excellency, by the importunity of the relations and dependants of the deceased, and by a consideration of the great and unnecessary expense of retaining and subsisting the cattle belonging to his estate, to the prejudice of his heirs and legatees.

2. Accordingly, on the morning of the 30th ultimo, at a conference with his Excellency the Vizier, after presenting a letter from the Right Honourable the Governor-General and renewing my instances for the early commencement of the reform, which were cheerfully acceded to by his Excellency, I submitted for his Excellency's consideration translations of the orders of Government conveyed by your despatches above noticed ; and I endeavoured, by every argument of a friendly and conciliatory nature that I could use, to satisfy his Excellency's mind of the justice and expediency of his acquiescence in the disposition which Tuhseen Alee Khan had made of his personal property, and of the manifest injury which his Excellency's reputation must sustain, by any attempt or avowed inclination to oppose the execution of a will committed to the British Government by Tuhseen, on the ground of his long-established connexion with that Government, and ratified by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, who had commanded me to carry it into effect.

3. The Vizier seemed considerably agitated by the communication which I made to him on that occasion. He observed to me in general terms, that he had recently committed to my friendship the power of advising and deciding for him on every question of importance that could arise between the two States for the future; that he sincerely and deeply lamented his having ever opposed my advice, or acted without my concurrence; and that to this unhappy circumstance alone, he was now disposed to ascribe every unpleasant occurrence that had happened to him; every distressing sensation that he had known, since the date of my arrival at his Court; that for the future his determination was fixed; I was his only counsellor and friend; nay, he should consider me in the light of a brother, and whatever measures I might adopt or recommend to him, should receive his most ready acquiescence. The case of Tuhseen Alee Khan, he observed, was a case in which the most important interests of his Government seemed to him to be implicated, and the decision on which must form a precedent for essential injury or benefit on a number of future occasions, that could not be absent from his thoughts. Tuhseen Alee Khan had been the confidential servant of his brother's Government and his own for a period of forty years; and the most valuable property, as well as some of the most important offices of the State, had been committed to his custody and management. The uniform practice of this Government, and indeed of all Indian princes, with a reference to such officers as Tuhseen, whether slaves of the Government or not, was to assume or confiscate the whole of their personal property in the first instance, and to provide for their relations and dependants as circumstances might afterwards suggest. That if such public officers under his Excellency's Government as Tuhseen were to be considered as at liberty to dispose of their property by will, without any control by the Government, an opening would necessarily be given to incalculable speculation and fraud by numbers of public servants, who were never before thought entitled to make any such use of their property, and might hereafter be encouraged to combine the public property with their own, in conveyances of this nature to their dependants.

4. I answered his Excellency's remarks by expressing my grateful sense of the friendly confidence which he had now determined to repose in me, and which I assured him I was incapable of abusing. The case of Tuhseen Alee Khan, I observed, had been finally decided by the Government more than a month ago, as his Excellency would see in the papers which were now submitted to him; and all that remained for me to do was, to execute the orders which I had received; the execution of which had been hitherto delayed, with no other view, upon my part, than that of satisfying his Excellency's mind, at a favourable opportunity, of the justice and necessity of the measures which I had been instructed to adopt, and rendering the manner of executing those measures as agreeable as possible to his Excellency, consistently with the more essential purposes of justice to the heirs and dependants of Tuhseen, whose interests could not be sacrificed on any account, and to whom, in reality, as well as to the Government, I was responsible for a due administration of the will. That I saw no reason whatever to apprehend the injurious effects which his Excellency seemed to contemplate from the ratification of Tuhseen Alee Khan's bequests; nor did the case appear to me to form a precedent for that of any other officer or servant of his Excellency's Government or household, since the peculiar circumstances of Tuhseen Alee Khan's connexion with the British Government, which induced its decided interference on this occasion, were such as could never be contemplated again, save in the case of a disputed succession to the musnud of Oude; an event that I was happy to consider as far beyond the verge of probability, if not impossible, for ages yet to come. I was proceeding to reply in detail to the other arguments which his Excellency had adduced, when he interrupted me to say, that as he had not examined the papers, it was unnecessary to prolong the discussion at that time. He would peruse the translations at his leisure, and would convey to me his sentiments on them in writing; after which he should commit the decision to myself, and acquiesce in whatever I might propose to him.

6. On Saturday, the 6th instant, I received from his Excellency a paper without any official form, containing a recapitulation of the arguments which were were stated at our conference of the 30th ultimo, and deprecating, on some additional grounds, and with extraordinary earnestness and urgency, the ratification or execution of the purposes of the will of Tuhseen Alee Khan, which he declared to be totally illegal and invalid, and its enforcement by the power of our Government to be inconsistent with its own former decision in the case of Almass Alee Khan, and with his Excellency's rights as a sovereign, as well as with Tuhseen Alee Khan's condition as a slave. A copy and translation of the paper are transmitted for the notice of the Government.

7. His Excellency having announced by the bearer of this paper his intention of breakfasting with me on the ensuing Tuesday, I deferred my reply to his arguments until then; and at a conference on the 9th instant, I resumed the discussion, by observing, that the suspicion which his Excellency entertained of the combination and confusion of the public property of his Government with the personal effects of Tuhseen Alee Khan, was in my opinion totally groundless, and incompatible with the character of the deceased, as well as with the known fact of his Excellency's having gradually withdrawn from Tuhseen the custody of every article of value under his charge, and removed him from the control of every department which he superintended, during the Government of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and for some years after his Excellency's accession. But that, admitting the suspicion in his Excellency's mind to be just, there was nothing so easy as removing it, and satisfying his Excellency's mind, by a personal inspection of the whole of the effects of the deceased, which I was ready to submit to his examination whenever he thought proper to require it. I acknowledged the ancient practice of Indian Governments to resume the jagiers and allowances of public officers at their death, and occasionally to confiscate their property; but my opinion of his Excellency's justice and humanity precluded my belief, I observed, of his approving that practice in others, far more so of his following it himself, in so extraordinary a case as Tuhseen's, and in opposition to the counsels of our Government, who could have no other interest in the affair than a regard for his Excellency's reputation. That if it were the uniform practice of Indian princes to resume and confiscate, it had also been the practice of the best and wisest of those princes to restore the jagiers and allowances, as well as the personal effects of their faithful and meritorious servants, to the heirs and relations of those servants; and that as his Excellency had already resumed the jagier, and had in fact taken possession of the property, through the medium of the Honourable Company's sepoys appointed to guard it by his desire, thus observing the practice of his ancestors, and establishing his paramount right, his subsequent gratuitous and only partial dereliction of that right, supposing it to be just and indefeasible, in compliance with my friendly advice and with the desire of the British Government to give effect to the will of the deceased, could not operate in the smallest degree to the prejudice of his Excellency's claims over other public officers of his Government, nor form a precedent to establish the validity of any future testamentary deeds which his Excellency might wish to set aside. On the other hand, I begged his Excellency to reflect, that the grounds of Mohummudan law, and of a former decision of our Government in the case of Almass Alee Khan, on which his Excellency seemed to rest his opposition to the validity of the will of Tuhseen, were by no means such as to bear him out in the conclusions which he was pleased to infer from them. I asserted and proved to his Excellency, by quotations from the most celebrated legal authorities of both sects of Mohummudans, that a Mussulman eunuch could not by the law be a slave; and were it otherwise, I maintained to his Excellency, that the trust, authority, and power which had been exercised by Almass Alee Khan and by Tuhseen, under his Excellency's father and brother as well as himself, were so totally inconsistent with the real condition of a slave, and with the legal inhibitions or disqualifications of slavery, as to preclude the possibility of considering either of those persons as slaves, or as disqualified from making any use of their personal property during their life-time and disposing of it by will at their death. That, in short, if originally slaves, they must be considered as licensed or enfranchised, and as such to be fully entitled to every lawful use of their property, which the free subjects of his Excellency's Government could enjoy. That, with a reference to Almass Alee Khan, the decision of the British Government had supported his Excellency's claim to the property of that Aumil, in opposition or rather in preference to the claim of her Highness the Begum, but by no means in preference to the claims of the heirs or legatees of Almass, because no such persons existed. In reality, the property of Almass had come into his Excellency's possession as the heir of a person intestate, who had no legal successor, and by no means as the proprietor of a slave; for I had repeatedly proved to his Excellency, that his claim upon that ground was entirely illegal and untenable: and on the same principle, and in exact conformity with the decision of the Government on that occasion, I now supported the right of the eunuch, Tuhseen Alee Khan, to dispose of his property by will, and the obligation on the British Government, as well with a reference to the faithful and meritorious services of the deceased, as from a regard for his Excellency's reputation, to urge to him in the strongest terms the justice and necessity of his acquiescing in the provisions of that will. A number of other arguments were adduced and submitted to the Vizier in a friendly and conciliatory manner, but without any seeming effect, at our conference of the 9th instant, and at a subsequent conference on the 16th instant, when I had the honour of waiting on his Excellency. For a detail of the arguments which I used, I refer to a translation of a paper in answer to his Excellency's remarks, which I transmitted to him on the 20th instant, and which forms a number of the present despatch.

8. To this paper I have not yet received a reply, and the actual state of the negotiation, as well as the probable result of it, renders me peculiarly desirous of obtaining the definitive instructions of the Government on the points which I shall submit for consideration in the sequel of this despatch.

9. The Vizier's cordial acquiescence in the purposes of Tuhseen Alee Khan's will, and his consent to my official administration to the personal effects of the deceased, are, I apprehend, scarcely to be looked for. His Excellency may, perhaps, be induced to concede those provisions to the servants and dependants of Tuhseen, which are specifically assigned to them in the will, and even to grant an inconsiderable pension to the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth, on the condition of my abandoning to forfeiture the whole of the property of the deceased, which is virtually now in my possession, as being guarded by the Honourable Company's sepoy, and consequently out of his Excellency's power. Those provisions he may further be induced to assign under the guarantee of the British Government, so as to ensure their duration and regular payment while our Government shall be disposed to interfere in behalf of the several assignees, who will in this event, however, require the constant and efficient protection of the Government, and in all probability prove the innocent causes of frequent and vexatious altercation between his Excellency and the Resident at his Court.

10. The alternative, therefore, of the due and immediate execution of the purposes of Tuhseen Alee Khan's will, by my official administration to his effects, and by vesting the proceeds of the sale of them in the Honourable Company's funds, is liable, at the least, to those objections which are stated in the foregoing paragraph, as well as to others which might be mentioned; while it can be productive of but one material advantage, that of gratifying the mind of the Vizier, and preserving, perhaps but for a time, the extraordinary harmony which at present subsists, and has so very recently been established between the British Government and his Excellency. This harmony will, however, I fear, be inevitably disturbed for a time, by my administering to the property of Tuhseen Alee Khan in opposition to his Excellency's wishes. His Excellency will, in all probability, evince his displeasure on that occasion by retiring for a time from his palace, withdrawing his attention from business, suspending the progress of the reform, expressing a distaste for the exercise of sovereign authority, and a wish to depart on a pilgrimage, and by all the other subterfuges and shifts to which his Excellency is in the habit of resorting, in order to deter the British Government from prosecuting its just views. Determined mined opposition or resistance, however, on the part of his Excellency, to the measures which I have been instructed to adopt, is by no means at present in my contemplation, and indeed would be totally unavailing, since the actual possession of the property of Tuhseen Alee Khan must enable me to frustrate any intentions of that nature, if his Excellency could be supposed to entertain them. At the same time, it is worthy of remark that the Vizier has the means of circumscribing in a considerable degree the extent of the benefit to be derived by the legatees to the will of the deceased in consequence of my administration, by prohibiting the people of Lucknow from attending at the sale of the effects, or from purchasing any part of them, and thus reducing the proceeds of the sale, a measure of which his Excellency is by no means incapable, and may very probably resort to, on the principle on which he prohibited the attendance of any of his courtiers at the funeral of Tuhseen Alee Khan, with the absurd view of exhibiting to his subjects and the world his disaffection to the British Government, his only real friends and the sole supporters of his authority.

11. Under all the circumstances of the case, I consider it to be my duty to solicit the further instructions of the Government before I proceed to execute the will of Tuhseen Alee Khan by administering to his effects and bringing them to a public sale in Lucknow, or to manifest the direct interference of the British Government for the support of the relations and servants of the deceased, by conferring khillats of condolence on the widow and children of Chutra Mull Seth, as prescribed conditionally by your letter under date the 10th of September.

12. The questions submitted for consideration with a reference to all that has been stated are briefly the following: First, whether or not any arrangement with the Vizier on the basis of a dereliction by our Government of the right and duty of administering to the property of Tuhseen Alee Khan, in pursuance of the terms of his will, can be deemed to be just or admissable, with a view to his Excellency's satisfaction? And, secondly, as to the terms of that arrangement, whether the payment of the estimated value of the whole of the deceased's property by the Vizier into the Honourable Company's treasury, for the purpose of being vested in our funds, should form the condition of my surrender of the property, or an obligation on the part of the Vizier for the payment of the monthly provisions assigned by Tuhseen in his will, including a pension to the widow and grand-children of Chutra Mull to the extent of the residue of the estate, under the guarantee of the British Government, should be received from his Excellency, as an equivalent for the immediate payment of the money into the Honourable Company's treasury?

13. I take this opportunity of reporting to you, for his Lordship in Council's information, that his Excellency the Vizier has hitherto shewn no inclination whatever to depart from the assurances which were conveyed by his letter to the Right Honourable the Earl of Minto, with a reference to the subject of reform; and, on the contrary, that the preliminary measures towards a settlement of the land revenue of Oude on fair and moderate terms for a period of three years, are in a train of immediate adoption with my concurrence and advice. His Excellency's confidential minister, Raec Dya-Krishen, who is the principal revenue officer of his Government, and has been long at the head of that department, is in occasional attendance on me for the purpose of receiving my instructions; and the Vizier has repeatedly declared to me that my suggestions on the subject of the settlement, conveyed through the medium of Dya-Krishen, shall be carried into implicit effect. His Excellency, however, has on one or two occasions expressed to me his anxiety to receive a ratification by the Government of the assurance conveyed to him by me, that the exhibition of his revenue papers shall not be demanded by the Resident before the conclusion of the settlement, nor in any instance whatever save that of a requisition from his Excellency for the aid of the British troops; and, with the view of satisfying his Excellency's mind on this particular point, as well as on other grounds of more importance than this, I suggest that a reply to his Excellency's letter of the 17th of October last be prepared and transmitted to his Excellency, at as early a period as may be practicable.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 5th of November 1813.)

I have perused the copies which you sent to me of the late Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan's arzees regarding the disposal of his property by will, and the translations of the instructions of Government on that subject, and although I be particularly desirous to avoid all manner of altercation with you, yet necessity compels me to state to you the following circumstances and facts.

It is an established custom in Hindoostan from time immemorial, that the property and effects of every description possessed by slaves should at their death revert to their master, whose property they were while alive. By this rule it is obvious that all the property appertaining to the late Tuhseen Alee Khan undoubtedly and unquestionably belongs to me, and the British Government itself acknowledged my right to this property by its decision in the case of Mohummud Almass Alee Khan, which is exactly similar to the present; or if there be any difference, the latter is more in my favour. Besides, it is generally known that the whole of my jewels, wardrobe, armoury, library, farm-yards, ruth khana (bullock carriages), furiash khana (camp equipage), and in short all my establishments and property of every description, as well as those of my ancestors and predecessors during four generations, were entrusted to the care of Tuhseen. Any property which he might have considered his own, as accumulated in the service of this Government, was kept with my other property, the lists and inventories of which remained in his constant possession, so that any disposition which he could by will make of a part must be illegal and invalid from this confusion. Moreover, the disposition of property by will, and the assignment of money for post-obituary purposes, as a measure prescribed by divine law, can never be proper by a slave, without obtaining his master's consent and approbation. If Tuhseen Alee Khan wished to dispose of the property which he had saved in my service by will, he should have informed me of his intention, and after obtaining my consent he might then have bestowed his property in any manner he pleased, and there would have been no occasion for secrecy. Besides, the fact of his having been intrusted with the care of my property being incontestible, it behoved him to get a written acquittance in the first instance from me. God knows that he has frequently declared in my presence that every thing he possessed was mine; that he was my slave, and his life and property were at my disposal; and even in the arzees which accompanied his will, or in that instrument itself, he does not attempt to deny that he was my slave, had the superintendence of my household establishments, and was responsible for the charge of my property.

On the occasion of your taking leave of me, preparatory to your departure for Fyzabad, you assured and satisfied me that my just interests and rights with regard to the Begum's property should not be neglected nor infringed; and under what plea can you now suggest the violation of my right to the property of Tuhseen?

You also told me that the disturbances and vexatious discussions which had arisen regarding the khoord muhl proceeded solely from my omitting to consult you and to follow your advice on that occasion; yet I have paid the most implicit attention to all your suggestions regarding Tuhseen, and have not deviated from them in the smallest degree, relying on your assurance that every thing done with your concurrence must necessarily tend to my advantage, and that no bad effects could result to me from following your friendly advice. You even said that you had written to the Government on the subject, and expected a favourable answer. Under these circumstances, it is a natural cause of surprize that an affair which has been conducted uniformly with your advice and concurrence should terminate so contrary to my views.

You requested me on a former occasion to remove whatever property of mine might be in the Khan's house in the punj mikhla, or to appoint a person to point out the articles which belonged to me, in order that they might be removed to the Presence; but as the whole of the property was mine, I declined a compliance with your suggestion.

The

The children of Chutra Muhl Seth are Hindoos, and cannot, by any law, inherit the property of Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan, a Mussulman: and independently of this consideration, the deceased left so much property in their hands, that they can never possibly be in want nor need any further provision.

Letter
from the Vizier.

You told me, that if I gave my cordial consent to the reform and adjusted the claims of Hoosein Alee Khan and Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, there could be no further dispute between us; and now that I have settled all these matters to your satisfaction, the succession to the Khan's property is a new source of contention.

The erection of a monument to his memory, and the other arrangements proposed in his will, are all in direct opposition to the laws of our holy religion, and can never conduce to his happiness in the other world. As the object of all testamentary arrangements should be the testator's happiness in a future state, those arrangements should be conducted in such a manner as may tend to Tuhseen's eternal happiness, by according with the dictates of the law.

The erection of a monument to his memory, and the performance of the customary prayers for the repose of his soul, should, therefore, be left to my discretion; and all the servants of the deceased should hereafter serve me as they served him, and trust to my generosity to provide for them; in which case a provision may be made: while, on the other hand, by the execution of Tuhseen's purposes as prescribed by his will, no possible advantage can arise, save the loss of my property and infraction of my rights, to be publicly proclaimed to the whole world, and thus to encourage my other servants in similar practices. Such a proceeding can never obviously conduce to the Khan's happiness in the next world, but must inevitably tend to his condemnation.

I enclose a statement of the towfeer (surplus) arising from the yearly stipend assigned for the support of my brother's, the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah's women, &c.; and you will perceive that the whole of it is no more than sufficient to defray the expenses of funerals and the repairs of the buildings; so that, in fact, the Nazir's wages, and that of the other servants and the guards, is a separate charge on the Government: nevertheless you may dispose of the towfeer as you think proper.

I have had the honour of receiving the paper containing your Excellency's sentiments and wishes with regard to the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, which would seem to have been prepared by your Excellency as an answer to the instructions of Government, translations of which were submitted to you on the 30th ultimo.

The remark with which your Excellency sets out in this paper, namely, that of your general aversion to dispute, and the necessity of your agitating this question, is peculiarly applicable to the whole of my official proceedings with reference to your Excellency's person and Government; and in no instance more so than in the present. I beg your Excellency to reflect, that the positive orders of the Government for my administering to the property of Tuhseen Alee Khan and carrying the purposes of his will into effect, have been actually now in my possession for a period of several months; and that the delay in obeying those orders, for which I am responsible to the Government, could have no other object in the world than the conciliation of your Excellency's mind, by awaiting a favourable opportunity of bringing the circumstances under your consideration, in the hope of convincing your judgment of the wisdom and justice of the measures which I had been instructed to adopt, and of inducing your cheerful participation in those measures, with a view to promote your reputation. The execution of the orders referred to by the sale of the effects of the deceased, in pursuance of the terms of his will, was at all times completely in my power. Had I done so on receiving my instructions, the approbation of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council was insured to me, as your Excellency has seen; and the reputation of the British Government, as well as my own, for a due attention to the claims of our faithful dependants, might thus have been established for ever, without any participation by your Excellency, and to your prejudice in the eyes of the world; so that the pains which I thought proper to take in translating the instructions of the Government, and in reading and presenting them to your Excellency, with a view to your participation in the humane and benevolent purposes which they prescribe, should in justice have obtained for me the gratifying tribute of your Excellency's approbation of my conduct, and have induced your ready acquiescence in those purposes, without any disagreeable discussion, far less altercation or dispute. Yet as your Excellency has been pleased to overlook those friendly and conciliatory exertions, and to insist on the agitation of the question in a manner which I was so anxious to avoid; it has now become my indispensable duty to answer your Excellency's objections, and to maintain both the justice and expediency of the measures determined on by the Government to your Excellency's thorough conviction, before I proceed to the execution of those measures.

And, first, with regard to your Excellency's remark, that "it is an established custom of Hindoostan to confiscate the property of slaves," &c. I submit with confidence to your Excellency, that the slavery of Tuhseen Alee Khan, as a Mussulman eunuch, cannot be legally established; and I presume to call on your Excellency's law-officers for the grounds of their decision to the contrary, if any of them will venture to pronounce it. That the deceased was constantly in the habit of calling himself your Excellency's slave, and referring to your sovereign right over his life and property, as is stated in another part of your remarks, I am perfectly ready to admit; and so indeed is the fact with regard to every servant and subject of your Excellency's Government; nay, to your children and nearest relations, and to those of every other prince and chieftain of Hindoostan: but that a declaration or confession of this nature should be received as establishing slavery, is an inference not to be admitted. And if your Excellency's anxiety to appropriate the effects of Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan be founded merely on your peculiar deference for the ancient customs of Hindoostan, and the practice of its princes and rulers, I take the liberty of begging you to consider, that the wisest and best of those princes have more frequently remitted the forfeiture in favour of the heirs of their servants, than exacted it for their personal benefit; and, consequently, that as your Excellency has already exerted the privilege and followed the practice of your ancestors, in resuming the jagier of the deceased, your gracious remission of the trifling remainder of the forfeiture, allowing it to be legal and just, and your bestowing it on his relations and dependants, can have no other possible effect than that of promoting your own reputation, and gratifying your best friends, the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council and myself.

With reference to your Excellency's argument deduced from the decision of our Government in the case of Almass Alee Khan, I must beg your Excellency to recollect that the ground of the decision in that case was in no degree connected with the idea of Almass Alee Khan being your Excellency's slave: an assertion which I uniformly resisted, and proved to your Excellency to be groundless, on the authority of the Mussulman law. Your Excellency succeeded to the property of Almass Alee Khan as being that of a person intestate, who had no legal heir nor successor. If Almass had disposed of his property by will, and as a dependant of the British Government had communicated that disposition to me, I should unquestionably have thought it my duty to recommend to your Excellency those measures which I urge to you in the case of Tuhseen; and the sentiments and instructions of the Government on the occasion of the death of Almass were explicit, as to the great impropriety of your Excellency's endeavouring to wrest from the servants or dependants of that Aumil any part of the money or property which he was supposed to have bestowed bestowed on them in his life-time; thus clearly authorizing the inference, that a testamentary disposition of that property would have been considered by the British Government in the same light in which the will of Tuhseen has been viewed. And, indeed, the degree of authority and power which were exercised by Almass in his life-time, with your Excellency's sanction and concurrence, to an extent which induced the validity of the sunnuds of that Aumil for rent-free lands to a number of your subordinate subjects, was so obviously and totally inconsistent with the legal condition of a slave, that the assertion of such a right by your Excellency to invalidate the acts of Almass with regard to his personal property, could never on any plausible ground be admitted. The gifts and grants of Almass Alee Khan in his life-time were accordingly supported by our Government to the utmost possible extent, by an earnest recommendation to your Excellency to abstain from molesting his dependants on account of the property bestowed on them; and the remaining property of Almass was assumed and appropriated by your Excellency with the ready consent of our Government, on no other ground in the world than that of his dying intestate without any lawful heir. On the same principle exactly, but with the additional legitimate motive of the superior claims of Tuhseen Alee Khan to the decided interference of our Government in favour of his relations and dependants, the will of this person has been supported; and I have been instructed to execute, if it be possible with your Excellency's concurrence, the benevolent purposes of this will.

Your Excellency has been pleased to assert, that it is "generally known" to the world that your Excellency's valuable jewels, your wardrobe, armoury, "&c. were entrusted to the charge of Tuhseen, and that the admixture or "confusion of the personal effects of the deceased with the public property "of your Government should legally invalidate his will." Yet your Excellency cannot have forgotten, that the dismissal of Tuhseen Alee Khan from every office of the smallest importance which he formerly held, save the superintendence of the bullock-sheds and camp equipage, with the nuzarut of your Excellency's muhl and the khoord muhls of your father and brother, had but recently taken place at the period of my arrival at your Excellency's Court: that shortly after my arrival, and to my great concern and regret, this faithful and meritorious servant was superseded in the charge of your Excellency's muhl by Hoshmund, and that the superintendence of the bullocks and camp equipage became a labour without any charge or responsibility, from which Tuhseen was most anxious to be relieved. If any part of your Excellency's property had remained in the charge of Tuhseen on those occasions, is it possible, I respectfully inquire, that among the various complaints and accusations on other grounds which your Excellency was then daily conveying to me, the charge of embezzlement or of a breach of trust should never have been mentioned nor thought of? Independently of the character of Tuhseen, which for scrupulous honesty and integrity was never, I am confident, surpassed in the person of any one of your Excellency's servants, I am fully justified in asserting, that if the smallest suspicion of his retaining any part of your Excellency's property, or confusing it with his own, had ever entered into your Excellency's mind, it must have been eagerly communicated to me, as a ground of accusation against a person who had uniformly laboured under your displeasure. An imputation, therefore, of this nature, after his death, can surely never be considered by your Excellency as a fair ground for invalidating his will; and, in addition to this argument, I submit that your Excellency's repeated refusal to comply with my suggestion of the appointment of a person to examine the effects of the deceased and challenge your Excellency's property, is a fair ground for my inferring your original conviction that no charge of embezzlement could be proved. But admitting the suspicion to remain, the opportunity of proving or removing it is still reserved to your Excellency, for the whole of the effects of the deceased are exactly in the same situation as they were at the moment of his death, under the charge of the Company's sepoy: nay, his books of accounts and their vouchers, every paper belonging to the deceased, are ready for inspection by your Excellency, or by a person to be appointed for that purpose, whenever you think proper to appoint one.

In reply to your Excellency's remark, that "the testamentary disposition of property by a slave can never be proper without the consent of his master, that Tuhseen Alee Khan should have apprized you of his intention, and that there was no occasion for secrecy, &c." I have already submitted my opinion, that Tuhseen Alee Khan cannot be legally considered as a slave. The declaration of his intentions regarding his property to your Excellency might have been proper and becoming, I admit, and would in all probability have been made, but for the natural diffidence which was created in the mind of the deceased by your Excellency's constant displeasure. But I see no reason whatever to infer any particular anxiety in the deceased to conceal his intentions from your Excellency; and, on the contrary, the whole of his proceedings for a considerable time before his death tend to establish an opposite opinion. The preparation of his will and letter to my address, as well as of his arzee to the Governor-General, must have occupied a considerable time. While these documents were preparing, his servants were employed by his orders in collecting his property into one place, the house which he occupied, and making inventories of all his effects. Those measures were executed in open day, and in the presence of your Excellency's Hurkarras, in constant attendance on Tuhseen, and inquisitive regarding his proceedings to a degree which he frequently complained of. When those measures were carried into effect, Tuhseen solicited a visit from Doctor Wilson, as an old and respected friend, to be a witness of the execution of his will, and to attest its authenticity to me. This visit was particularly public, and every circumstance which attended it must doubtless have been reported to your Excellency on the day on which it took place, as indeed it appears to me to have been so intended by the testator: and, consequently, although in fact the concealment of a will be no objection to its validity, but, on the contrary, in ordinary cases, tends rather to confirm it, as a proof of the testator's complete possession of his intellects at the time of making his will; (for few persons of sound judgment reveal such purposes in their life-time, aware of the confusion which may arise from their intentions being published prematurely); yet even this objection being obviated in the mind of Tuhseen, by a consideration of the justice and power of the Government to which his will was entrusted, there was obviously no motive for concealment on his part, nor was any secrecy observed.

With a reference to your Excellency's remark, that he should have obtained a written acquittance from you, or should have stated explicitly in his will and in the arzees which accompanied it, that he was not your Excellency's slave, nor responsible for any of your property, I submit that declarations to this effect in a will are equally uncommon and superfluous.

The testator was conscious of his title to dispose of his property by will, and unaware of any legal objection to that title, and committing the execution of his will to the care of the British Government, who had constantly mediated between your Excellency and him by your mutual desire, he confided in the wisdom and justice of that Government for removing every objection that might eventually be offered by your Excellency to the disposition which he had made of his property.

Your Excellency has been pleased to allude, on the present occasion, to an assurance which I submitted to your Excellency at the time of my departure to Fyzabad, and which I have great pleasure in repeating and confirming on this occasion. The preservation of your Excellency's just rights has never been neglected by the British Government, nor has that Government ever been accessary to your loss. If the property left by Tuhseen Alee Khan could be considered to belong to your Excellency, I should surrender it without any hesitation, and should seek such provision from your bounty for the indigent dependants of the deceased, on another obvious ground, as conducive to your Excellency's reputation. But considering the effects of Tuhseen as entirely at his own disposal by law, and considering himself and his relations to be justly and eminently entitled to the support and protection of our Government, I am bound in the discharge of my duty to accomplish the purposes of his will, and secure to his relations what he bequeathed to them.

Your Excellency has next been pleased to compare the present discussion with that vexatious and unhappy altercation which arose regarding the khoord muhl, muhl, and to express your surprise and concern at the termination, contrary to your views of a question on which you asked my advice, and complied implicitly with my suggestions. The obligation on your Excellency to seek the advice of our Government, and the advantage which must ever arise to you from a cordial acquiescence in its counsels, are in my judgment peculiarly exemplified by the case of Tuhseen Alee Khan. The connexion of that person with the British Government and his claims on its protection, were such that any attempt or intention on the part of your Excellency to act with a reference to him, independently of my friendly advice, would have argued an unfriendly disposition towards the Government, and must have occasioned a most urgent remonstrance on my part, which would have been unpleasant to your Excellency's feelings. Had I, even, in dereliction of my duty, refrained from remonstrating on that occasion, and your Excellency had taken possession of the property, the question of right would not have been affected by that measure, and the final instructions of the Government must still have been executed by me in a manner distressing to my mind, because unpleasant to your Excellency's feelings, by my reclaiming the property from your Excellency, to be disposed of in the terms of the will. Let me beg of your Excellency to consider the circumstances that must necessarily have attended such an issue of the question as this, and the manner in which those unhappy consequences have been avoided; the advantage of your concurrence with me, and of your compliance with my respectful and friendly suggestions on this as on every other occasion will then be sufficiently apparent. The result of the present discussion, whatever it may be, can never interrupt the harmony which subsists between the two States; and the measures to be ultimately adopted must appear to your Excellency's subjects, as I trust they will actually prove, to be executed by mutual consent for the advancement of your Excellency's reputation.

Your Excellency's allusion to my request of the nomination of a person to examine the effects of the deceased, and to reclaim the public property of your Government, has been already satisfactorily explained. I repeat my readiness to give up every article which your Excellency may claim, without any other demonstration of your right to it than your Excellency's verbal assurance.

I acknowledge the truth of your remark, that the children of Chutra Mull Seth, as Hindoos, cannot be the heirs of a Mussulman; but the answer to this remark, in as far as your Excellency is concerned, has been given in a satisfactory manner by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, in his Lordship's instructions to me already submitted to your Excellency. The right of inheritance in those orphans has never been alleged by the Government; but their claim, on the ground of humanity and of the faithful services of Tuhseen, to the trifling residue of his effects bequeathed to them by the terms of his will, is distinct from the right of inheritance, and has been urged to your Excellency, on principles the justice of which must be admitted, because they are not injurious to the rights of any preferable claimant.

Your Excellency has recalled to my mind an observation which I had the honour of submitting to you during our discussion of the question of reform, and of the claims of Hoosein Alee Khan and Alee Nuckee, namely, that the satisfactory adjustment of those questions would relieve your Excellency's mind from the pain of altercation with our Government, and would put an end to all dispute and contention between your Excellency and me. Such, indeed, was the ardent wish of my heart, and my reasonable expectation at the time, and still continues to be so. I consider the present question, though unnecessarily agitated by your Excellency, to be one which you will never allow to interrupt the harmony between us.

Your Excellency's inference, however, from the observation above quoted on my part, would seem to require some comment. If your Excellency has been pleased to infer, that with the happy adjustment of those questions the right and duty of the British Government to take a friendly interest in your Excellency's concerns were to cease, and that no measure of your Government should in future form the subject of remonstrance or advice, this surely is an inference which no remark of mine could give ground for. The expectation which I naturally formed, and on which I dwelt with such eagerness to your Excellency, was this : that the happy result of those discussions which had lasted for so many years, to your Excellency's constant uneasiness, embittering, as you were pleased to admit, every comfort and enjoyment of your life, would of necessity tend to impress you with a due sense of the propriety, as well as the importance to your happiness and the general prosperity of your concerns, of receiving the advice of our Government in the spirit which dictated that advice, with ready and cheerful acquiescence, and preventing the recurrence of disputes which could operate only to your Excellency's prejudice, since the real object of our advice could be no other than your advantage. My remarks to your Excellency on the occasion above referred to had obviously this, and this alone, for their motive ; and it could never have entered into my contemplation that your Excellency should use those remarks to oppose the right of the British Government to interfere in a matter of so little importance abstractedly, and yet so essential to your Excellency's reputation, as the execution of the will of Tuhseen.

Your Excellency's apprehension of the evil consequences in a future state to the testator from the due execution of his will, is a subject on which I am not qualified to enlarge : yet those consequences may with confidence be committed to the judgment of a benevolent Creator, who pardons the errors of his creatures, when the motives of their conduct are just ; since there appears to be no injustice in the disposition which Tuhseen Alee Khan has made of his property, bestowing it on his needy relations and a few of his most faithful domestics, who continued attached to him until death.

With a reference to your Excellency's remark, that the erection of a monument over the deceased, and the other provisions of his will, should be left to your Excellency's discretion, that his servants should trust to your generosity, and in this case a provision might be made for them : if your Excellency will be pleased to detail the arrangements which you may feel disposed to substitute for the execution of the will of the deceased, I shall be happy to take them into consideration, and submit my sentiments in reply.

Of the injurious effects to your Excellency of the ratification of the will of Tuhseen Alee Khan, by its becoming generally known to the world, and encouraging similar practices in others, I confess that I am totally unaware. If your Excellency has been led to apprehend that the interference of the British Government on this occasion is intended to form a precedent for the general support of your servants and subjects in the disposition of their property by will, or for suspending the right to escheat as the privilege of Indian princes, I have no hesitation in assuring you that the apprehension is totally groundless. The practice of confiscating the property of public servants at their death, and reducing their posterity to beggary, is one, I am free to admit, that can never be approved by our Government, because contrary to its fundamental principles. Yet your Excellency must be perfectly aware, that various instances of it have occurred in this country since I had the honour of residing at your Excellency's Court, without any interference on my part : more particularly the case of Ruttun Chund, your Excellency's most favourite and confidential minister, which is universally known throughout India ; as also the case of Almass Alee Khan, whose property your Excellency possesses ; and even the case under discussion : for your Excellency's resumption of Tuhseen Alee Khan's jagier has proceeded with my perfect concurrence. In short, the privilege of resuming and appropriating the jagiers and effects of your Excellency's subjects and servants has never been opposed by our Government, and has been exerted in the case of Tuhseen ; and the only point in discussion between your Excellency and the British Government, with a reference to this faithful and meritorious servant, is, whether your Excellency should retain or give up to his indigent relations and dependants a few houses of inconsiderable value, and other trifling effects, in compliance with the earnest recommendation of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, your Excellency's best friend, who can have no other interest in this advice than a genuine regard for your reputation.

I have examined the statement of the allowances of the khoord muhl of Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and compared it with a former statement delivered to me by Tuhseen

Tuhseen Alee Khan. The latter exhibits a towfeer or saving from the general amount, by the death of a number of the women, to the extent of 1,758 rupees per mensem, instead of 331, as explained by your Excellency; and the application of the above-mentioned sum to increase the provisions of the survivors would put a stop to the clamour of those women, and relieve your Excellency's mind, as well as conduce to your reputation.

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch under date the 23d ultimo, I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of his Lordship in Council, the annexed translation of a paper which I have received from his Excellency the Vizier, in reply to my official note regarding the property of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, transmitted to his Excellency on the 20th ultimo.

2. This paper is by no means satisfactory. It affords the hope of a precarious provision for the servants and dependants of Tuhseen, but takes no notice whatever of the grandchildren of Chutra Mull Seth, to whom the residue of the property was bequeathed, and who were the natural objects of the peculiar regard and anxiety of the deceased, as explicitly referred to in his will, and in his arzee to the Right Honourable the Governor-General.

3. I submit for the consideration of the Government, in the case of its being ultimately thought advisable to gratify the mind of the Vizier by surrendering the property of Tuhseen to him on certain indispensable conditions, that a direct address from the Right Honourable the Governor-General to his Excellency, recommending the grandchildren of Chutra Mull to his particular favour and generosity, might be attended with beneficial effects; and further, in the case of the final resolution of the Government to support the provisions of the will, as originally and justly decided on, that a direct communication of this design from the head of the Government to the Vizier would, in all probability, preclude any further opposition or vexatious objection on his part to the measures which I am instructed to adopt.

I have perused the paper of remarks which you sent to me in answer to my communication regarding the property left by the late Tuhseen Alee Khan. In that paper it is stated, that when I detail the arrangements which I propose as a substitute for the execution of the will, you will consider them and submit a reply. Having full confidence in your friendship, I convey my wishes on that point explicitly as follows. Let the whole and every part of the Khan's effects be made over to me, and remain with my Government, to which they belong. I shall give orders for building a monument, in such a manner as to tend to the happiness of the deceased; and the monthly allowances of his servants shall also be established, and their attendance shall only be occasionally required. In this manner my just rights will be preserved, and the deceased will be saved from the punishment in a future state of defeating the just rights and exciting the displeasure of his sovereign: because thus the affairs connected with his demise will be settled to my satisfaction, which must conduce to his happiness hereafter; whereas, otherwise, which God forbid, it must be otherwise. Letter from
Governor-General.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 31st December 1813.)

The Resident at your Excellency's Court has communicated to me the result of his application to your Excellency on the subject of the will of your late faithful servant, Tuhseen Alee Khan, whose extraordinary claims to your Excellency's regard and favour, and to the consideration of the British Government as the intimate friend and ally of your house, it is unnecessary for me to dwell upon.

I will frankly avow to your Excellency, that your prompt and liberal acquiescence in the wishes of the British Government regarding the provisions of Tuhseen Alee Khan would not only have been highly gratifying to me, but would in my opinion have reflected honour on your Excellency's government and name. But as your Excellency entertains a different opinion, and the arguments and representations of Major Baillie have not produced that conviction on your Excellency's mind which was to be hoped, and as the maintenance of the family and dependants of Tuhseen Alee Khan may be equally provided for in a manner which cannot possibly appear to your Excellency to involve the objection which you state to the recognition of his will, the original proposition will, in deference to your Excellency, be withdrawn.

This resolution which originates in a proposition submitted to me by Major Baillie, has been adopted in the persuasion, and indeed with the full conviction, that your Excellency will feel it becoming your dignity, your justice, and your character for generosity, to settle on the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth a provision adequate to their maintenance, and grant suitable allowances to the servants of Tuhseen Alee Khan, mentioned by name in his will.

By this arrangement, without the hazard of any sacrifice of your authority, such as you apprehend would result from permitting Tuhseen Alee Khan's will to be carried into effect, your Excellency will enjoy the gratification of rewarding in some degree the services of a zealous and faithful officer, combined with all the credit resulting from such an act, and will promote the satisfaction of the British Government.

I refer your Excellency for more detailed communication of my sentiments to Major Baillie.

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches of the 23d ultimo, and 2d instant, reporting your proceedings, under the instructions of the Governor-General in Council, relative to the will of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, and to communicate to you the following observations and instructions in reply.

2. Before

2. Before I enter on that subject, however, I am directed to advert to a general principle which appears to his Lordship in Council to be peculiarly applicable to the state of our connection with the Vizier, and to the nature of the ordinary topics of negotiation between the British Government and that Prince, and which has materially influenced the deliberations of his Lordship in Council on the present question. It is, indeed, too obvious, his Lordship in Council observes, to require to be stated as a formal proposition, that the success of our negotiations with the Vizier, as well as with any other prince or State, will be best promoted by abstaining from the agitation of questions of minor consideration leading to no important results, but calculated to produce irritation and dissatisfaction in the mind of the opposite party, the effect of which must be to weaken and exhaust that influence which should be reserved unimpaired for objects of higher moment, and to expose to the hazard of failure, or at least to interruption and counteraction, the accomplishment of our views in affairs of real consequence.

3. The Governor-General in Council does not see any reason to apprehend that our influence in the Vizier's administration will be impaired, by yielding to his prejudices and prepossessions on points on which we are not required nor entitled to oppose them, and which do not involve any essential interest of either State, while we steadily and firmly maintain our right of interference in those which do. On the contrary, his Lordship in Council is disposed to believe, that by avoiding such discussions, or by judicious and well-timed concessions in points of the former description, and reserving the language and tone of urgent remonstrance and demand for occasions more suited to their employment, we shall be the better able to carry those measures in which our decided interposition is required by the urgency of the case, and justified by the provisions of existing engagements.

4. The instructions which I am about to convey to you are framed with reference to the principles here stated; and the Governor-General in Council confidently trusts that the course of proceeding intended to be pursued in the case of Tuhseen Alee Khan's will, accompanied as it will be by the explicit declaration of the Governor-General's sentiments on the question of reform, which his Lordship proposes to convey without delay to the Vizier, will tend to promote rather than to retard the accomplishment of that salutary and important arrangement.

5. I now proceed to the subject of your despatch above acknowledged.

6. The Governor-General in Council has perceived with concern, the determined opposition of his Excellency the Vizier to the desire which you have conveyed to his Excellency, on the part of the British Government, to carry into effect the provisions of Tuhseen Alee Khan's will, and considers the refusal of his Excellency to comply with the dying request of a person so long and faithfully attached to his family, and to whose firmness and integrity he is himself largely indebted for his succession to the musnud of Oude, to reflect discredit on his Excellency's character.

7. Whatever may be the sentiments of his Excellency in Council on this subject, however, the decision of the British Government on a question involving the independent exercise of the rights of the Vizier over his own subjects and servants must be determined, not by the dictates of personal feeling, but by considerations of public equity and good faith.

8. Entertaining the warmest sense of Tuhseen Alee Khan's merits and services, and of his attachment to both States, and convinced of the obligation imposed on the Vizier, by every principle of gratitude and honour, to fulfil the reasonable and just requests of the deceased, as well as of the right and duty of this Government to urge it to the utmost extent compatible with a due regard to his Excellency's right of final judgment in his own concerns, it still does not appear to the Governor-General in Council that the British Government would be warranted, by the considerations above stated, in endeavouring to carry this measure against the declared opposition of the Vizier. The duty of the British Government is performed by the sincere and zealous exertion of the influence which it derives from its relation with the Government of Oude in favour of the family and dependants of Tuhseen; but the interference of the British Government must be bounded by these limits, and the Governor-General in Council cannot reconcile to his sense, either of justice or expediency, the prosecution of this demand to the consequences to which it would lead, if the principle of unlimited interference were admitted.

9. The reasoning which you have so ably employed to prove the right of Tuhseen Alee Khan to dispose of his personal property under the Mohummudan law, however justly used as an argument to influence the Vizier's judgment, does not, in the opinion of his Excellency in Council, supply the want of other grounds for the authoritative interference of the British Government in this particular case.

10. Viewing the question in this light, and adverting also to the opinion expressed by you, that the cordial acquiescence of the Vizier can scarcely be looked for, his Lordship is compelled to relinquish the expectation of prevailing on the Vizier to leave the personal property of the deceased to be disposed of according to the terms of his will; and it is accordingly the desire of his Lordship in Council that the property in question may be given up to the Vizier.

11. Although this proceeding seems to be unavoidable under the circumstances of the case, the Governor-General in Council is nevertheless desirous of prevailing on the Vizier, by friendly representation and earnest appeal to his humane and honourable feelings, to make a decent and proper provision for the grandchildren of Chutra Mull Seth, and for the adherents and servants of Tusheen Alee Khan mentioned in his will.

12. The Governor-General in Council trusts that a compromise on this principle may be effected without material difficulty, as it will be free from the appearance of the objection which seems to form a principal difficulty with his Excellency, namely, that the execution of the will will publicly proclaim the violation of his rights, and encourage his other servants in similar practices. It is scarcely necessary to advert to the groundless nature of this objection, since the case of Tuhseen is singular, and it is morally impossible that a parallel one should arise in future. His Excellency's reference to the Bhow Begum is entirely irrelevant, the situation and circumstances of her Highness having no analogy to that of Tuhseen, a menial servant of the Vizier and his predecessors; you are accordingly desired to renew the negotiation on the basis above stated.

13. With a view to assist your representations, and to manifest the earnest desire of the Government to obtain from the Vizier's justice and liberality a suitable provision for the family and dependants of his deceased servant, a letter will be addressed to his Excellency by the Governor-General, to the effect of the enclosed draft.

14. The resolution for withdrawing the proposition relative to Tuhseen Alee Khan's will is stated to have originated in a position submitted by you, because this declaration, while it is consistent with the fact, the measure having been suggested in the first instance by the tenor of the ninth and following paragraphs of your despatch of the 23d of November, will impress upon the Vizier's mind the desirable conviction, that he owes this act of concession to the concurrence of your advice and recommendation with the sentiments and disposition of the Governor-General in Council. It will be highly expedient that, by the tenor of your communications to the Vizier under the present instructions, you should countenance this belief.

15. His Lordship has, you will observe, refrained from stating the precise extent of the provision to be made by his Excellency the Vizier, deeming it to be more consistent with the spirit of this proceeding and with respect for the Vizier, to leave the decision of this point to the unconstrained dictates of his Excellency's just and humane consideration of the case. At the same time, it will be proper that you should be prepared to meet any reference to you from the Vizier, with a recommendation that the provisions to be made for the persons named in the will should be regulated as nearly as possible by the declared wishes wishes of the deceased, and that the allowance to be assigned to the residuary legatees should be sufficient to maintain them in ease and comfort.

16. The Governor-General's letter to the Vizier will be transmitted to you by the Persian Secretary as soon as it can be prepared.

17. You will be pleased to combine with your negotiation of this affair a renewal of your endeavours to obtain some melioration of the condition of the members of the khoord muhl of Asuf-ood-Dowlah, whose situation was adverted to in the instructions of the 3d of September last, and which does not appear to have received that consideration which a feeling of humanity, equally with a just regard for his own reputation and the honour of his family demand. This is a subject on which it is obvious that your proceedings must be confined to representation and advice, which, however, you are authorized to offer in the name of the Governor-General in Council.

The 7th January 1814.

To John Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government.

Sir:

1. I request the favour of your submitting to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council the enclosed copies of a correspondence which has recently passed between his Excellency the Vizier and me, regarding the payment and distribution of the pension assigned to Hoosein Alee Khan.

2. It must be totally unnecessary to recall to his Lordship in Council's recollection the original object of the discussion between the British Government and the Vizier, regarding the property of the late Hyder Beg Khan and the provision assigned to his family. This object was unquestionably, in the first instance, no other than the restitution by Akbur Alee Khan to his own legitimate brother of a share of the property of their father, which the former had unjustly appropriated; and on the failure of this primary object through the contumacy of Akbur Alee Khan and the undue influence of the Vizier, my negotiation with his Excellency was directed to the only alternative which remained for redressing the wrongs of Hoosein Alee Khan, by obtaining the restoration in his favour of the provision originally assigned for the support of the whole family, and resumed by his Excellency the Vizier.

3. The partial success of my negotiation of this latter question, or the compromise effected with the Vizier, could obviously, therefore, have reference, as its direct and immediate object, to the purpose only of securing a comfortable if not a liberal provision for Hoosein Alee Khan, combined with the means of subsistence, if procurable, for the other indigent branches of his family, to the manifest and necessary exclusion of Akbur Alee Khan, whose unjust and inhuman treatment of his younger legitimate brother had alone given rise to the discussion; and, indeed, at my conference with the Vizier, when the grant of this pension was promised, I expressly declared to his Excellency that no part of the allowance should be considered as intended for Akbur Alee Khan, who had entirely forfeited his claim to the consideration or protection of our Government, and in whose behalf we should never interfere.

4. Under this view of the question, which the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council will, I doubt not, consider to be just, it must excite his Lordship in Council's surprise that his Excellency the Vizier should have been induced, not only to combat the distribution which I proposed to be made, in compliance with his Excellency's desire, of the pension assigned to Hoosein Alee Khan, but to withhold the payment of the pension for a period of two months, with the view of applying a part of it to the maintenance of the family or of Akbur Alee Khan, thus affording another unequivocal proof of the unhappy propension of his mind to oppose the views of our Government, and of his bias to the side of injustice, which he has uniformly supported throughout the course of this long and vexatious discussion.

5. It is a source of some consolation to me to add, that his Excellency has been induced in the end to make payment of the pension assigned, and in so far to withdraw his opposition to the arrangement which I had proposed to him on principles apparently unexceptionable, and in which he at first acquiesced. Yet I shall not be enabled to consider the arrangement proposed as conclusive, nor to consign the amount of the pension, which is now deposited in my treasury, to the hands of Hoosein Alee Khan, till I receive a communication of the sentiments of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council on the subject of this despatch, which I beg you to obtain and convey to me at as early a period as may be practicable.

6. The Vizier has hitherto delayed to commence the measures of reform in the manner which I deemed it my duty to suggest to him, with a view to ensure their success, or to preclude his ascribing their failure to any radical defect in the system recommended by our Government for his adoption. His Excellency has also suspended or prevented the execution of his orders for the complete redress of the grievances of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, who has, however, resumed the possession of a part of his hereditary rights, and I have some reason to hope for the gradual restoration of the whole of them. But my recent proceedings with a reference to this question, if necessary, and my proceedings and correspondence with the Vizier on the more important question of reform, shall form the subjects of a separate despatch to you in the course of a few days.

Letter

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 26th October 1813.)

Keeping two objects in view, namely, the affluent circumstances of Hoosein Alee Khan during his father's life-time, and his numerous family, consisting of thirty sons and daughters, many of them arrived at the age of puberty and marriageable, besides a number of women who depend on him for their support, I submit for your Excellency's consideration, that the provision assigned for his maintenance, and that of the other needy relations and dependants of the late Hyder Beg Khan, with the exception of Akbur Alee Khan and his family, be divided into two portions of 1,500 and 500 rupees; the former of these sums, namely, an allowance of 1,500 rupees per mensem to be appropriated to the maintenance of Hoosein Alee Khan and his numerous family; and though this sum be by no means sufficient to maintain them in that degree of ease and affluence to which they were accustomed in former times, it will supply every real want to them, and afford most of the comforts of life.

On a minute enquiry into the circumstances of the other surviving relations of the late Hyder Beg Khan, extending to the number of forty persons, as enumerated and described in the accompanying list, it appears that from a pension of a lac of rupees per annum, originally assigned to the family under the management and control of Akbur Alee Khan, an allowance of only fifteen rupees per mensem was enjoyed by each of his brothers and sisters, the offspring of concubines or slaves, and a still smaller provision to their mothers; and consequently it is obvious that a distribution of the remaining five hundred rupees of the pension assigned by your Excellency among those subordinate branches, will afford to each individual a far more liberal provision than they have ever hitherto enjoyed.

Accordingly I submit to your Excellency a statement of the distribution proposed, which I trust that your Excellency will approve, and which I doubt doubt not, in that event, will also be honoured by the approbation of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council ; and considering this point to be settled, it only remains for your Excellency's liberality to determine at what date the provision should commence. On this point I shall be totally silent, having full reliance on your Excellency's bounty and generosity for the commencement of the allowance from such a period as may relieve Hoosein Alee Khan from his embarrassments, and also for your Excellency's remission of all former largesses to the Khan.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 9th December 1813.)

A period of more than two months has elapsed since the happy adjustment of the disputed points between your Excellency and the British Government, one of which was the grant of an allowance to Hoosein Alee Khan; and on this particular question I had the honour of addressing your Excellency separately, by a letter dated the 26th of October last, to which I have not yet been honoured with a reply; and Hoosein Alee Khan being justly importunate with me on the subject of his allowance, I take the liberty of transmitting to your Excellency his receipt for two months' allowance, drawn up in the terms which I suggested in my former letter, and which your Excellency verbally approved. The payment of the amount of this receipt will be esteemed as a particular favour.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 10th December 1813.)

I have received two letters from you; the first dated the 26th of October, conveying a statement of the proposed distribution of the monthly pension granted by me for the maintenance of Hoosein Alee Khan, the younger of the two legitimate sons, and the other needy relations and dependants of the late Hyder Beg Khan; and the second bearing date the 9th instant, containing receipts from Hoosein Alee Khan for two months' pay, and requesting that the amount might be paid.

The truth of the matter is: that in order to please you I granted this pension for the maintenance of all the children and grand-children, and other relations of the deceased, each of whom, the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan not excepted, should receive a part of the money; for the relationship of these persons to the late Hyder Beg Khan cannot be denied, and they are needy, and helpless, and blameless. Their exclusion, therefore, from a share in this provision seems to me to be totally without a cause; and, further, they possess an equal right with the other descendants and needy relations of the deceased to a share of the compensation for the sayer and gardens of Gurethie. Let this matter also be arranged, and their shares of that compensation be adjusted. The commencement of the pension is the same, of course, with the date of my letter on the subject to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, Earl of Minto.

The receipts for the money are returned to you.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's letter, dated the 10th instant, and I am concerned to observe that your Excellency has been pleased to disapprove the distribution which I suggested to you of the provision assigned to Hoosein Alee Khan and the other needy dependants of his father. The nature of the protracted discussions between the British Government and your Excellency which led to the assignment of this provision, and the principle of the compromise which I agreed to with a view to your Excellency's satisfaction, are too obvious to require explanation. The original claim of Hoosein Alee Khan against his elder brother Akbur Alee Khan, which gave rise to the discussion with your Excellency, was simply a demand of his own individual share of the property left by their father, to which none of the other children laid claim, nor were their names ever mentioned in the discussion; and consequently it must be obvious to your Excellency that none of the descendants of Hyder Beg Khan could be entitled, as a matter of right, to any share of the provision assigned, in compliance with the desire of our Government, for the maintenance of Hoosein Alee Khan: so that the portion of the allowance in question which is proposed to be given to them might be considered as a gratuitous concession on the part of the British Government and of Hoosein Alee Khan for the maintenance of his indigent relations, from a fund which was exclusively his own; since the original fund for the maintenance of all the relations was not the amount of the compromise, but that of the provision compromised, namely, the sum of a lac of rupees per annum assigned by your Excellency's predecessor for the support of the family of Hyder Beg at the instance of the Marquis Cornwallis. Had this provision been continued, every one of the relations of the deceased would doubtless have had a right to a share of it; but with regard to the amount of the present limited provision the case is obviously different: and independently of this remark, I must beg your Excellency to recollect, that subsequently to the transmission of my letter, which contained a statement of the distribution proposed, on my asking your Excellency personally whether you approved or disapproved of that statement, you were pleased to reply in these words, "My business is merely to pay the money, and whatever you suggest I approve." Your Excellency's sentiments on that occasion were certainly different from those which are conveyed in your letter before me, and it is a source of real disappointment to me to observe so material a change in your sentiments in so short a period of time.

With a reference to your Excellency's remark, that the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan are poor, and needy, and blameless, it seems sufficient that I recall to your Excellency's recollection the proceedings of the Adawlut at Lucknow on the claim of Hoosein Alee Khan against his brother, in the course of which the defendant's usurpation of the whole of his father's property was proved to your Excellency's satisfaction; thus precluding the belief of his poverty, which was subsequently rendered still more incredible by his voluntary offer to me of the sum of two lacs and a half of rupees in satisfaction of the claims of his brother, and more recently by the offer of a considerable sum of money by the wife of Akbur Alee Khan, with a view to her husband's enlargement. How these several offers can be reconciled with a belief of the poverty of this branch of the family I leave it to your Excellency to judge.

Your Excellency has been pleased to suggest, that the rents and duties of Gurethie be also distributed among the whole of the relations of Hyder Beg, and that the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan have a share of them. The decision of the British Government on this question, with regard to the arrears of the compensation adjudged to the family of Hyder Beg, was that a moiety of the sum should be paid to Hoosein Alee Khan as his own share, and a moiety as the share of his brother, in part of his established demand on account of the inheritance of their father, these two brothers being considered as the only legitimate sons or lawful heirs of their father. With regard to the future rents and profits of Gurethie, a consideration of humanity induced the British Government to decree that some portion of those rents should be assigned for the support of the subordinate and illegitimate branches of the family, in the proportion in which they were maintained from the provision of a lac of rupees under the original management of Akbur Alee Khan. But the amount of the rents was so small as to preclude a distribution on the principle above stated, with any material advantage to the subordinate branches of the family, and therefore the application of the whole was committed to the justice and humanity of Hoosein Alee Khan, on which the British Government was disposed to rely; and it has become my duty to take care that this reliance shall not be disappointed. If your Excellency, on the same principle, had been pleased to commit the distribution of the pension (which your bounty has assigned) to the justice and liberality of Hoosein Alee Khan, under my guidance and control, your confidence would not have been misplaced, and the present discussion might have been avoided.

With regard to the commencement of the pension, which your Excellency has been pleased to make coeval with your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, instead of assigning to ~~it~~ a much earlier date, as I confess I was led to expect, or even the date of our conference, at which the grant of the pension was declared to me, I can only express my concern at the disappointment of my natural expectation, and submit to your Excellency's pleasure. I entreat your Excellency to inform me whether or not the pension is to be paid, that I may report the matter to Government, which I am anxious to do without delay.

I have received your letter dated the 17th of Zeehijj (11th December), in answer to mine of the 16th of Zeehijj (10th December), containing a denial of the right of Akbur Alee Khan's wife and children to any share of the pension assigned to the family of Hyder Beg, in compliance with the desire of the Governor-General, by your suggestion and advice, and stating that my former letter had disappointed your expectations. The truth of the matter is this: that what I wrote to you coincides exactly with the sentiments of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, as expressed in his letter to me, and therefore I see no reason why it should disappoint your expectations. It is my wish to avoid all dispute regarding matters that are already settled. I have granted an allowance of 2,000 rupees per mensem to Hoosein Alee Khan, and all the other children, grand-children, and needy dependants of Hyder Beg Khan, by your advice, in compliance with the desire of the Governor-General. The right of all the dependants of Hyder Beg to a share of the allowance in question may be inferred from the words of the Governor-General's letter, which are as follows: "I call upon your Excellency to restore to this unfortunate family the means of subsistence, of which they have been so long deprived, without any ground of alleged misconduct, excepting in the case of the elder brother, whose disgraceful and inhuman conduct towards his brother only constitutes an additional and most powerful argument for the restoration of the stipend in favour of the latter, and of those branches of the family who are left in a condition of distress by Akbur Alee Khan's unjust appropriation of the property of their deceased father."

If these words include all the relations and dependants of the deceased, it is proper that all of them be included in the distribution of the allowance, and otherwise I have no wish to depart from the object of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter. I send the sum of 4,000 sicca rupees, being the amount of the allowance for two months, from the 15th of Shuvvaul till the 14th of Zeehijj inclusive, as due to Hoosein Alee Khan.

To

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written 16th December 1813.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter of yesterday's date, and after a most attentive consideration of the words of the Governor-General's letter, to which your Excellency has referred, I have no hesitation in assuring your Excellency that they seem to me to bear a different meaning from that which your Excellency has been pleased to assign to them. The expression "a condition of distress," in the first place, conveys, to my judgment, an express and particular exclusion of the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan from any share of the provision assigned, since it is obvious, and has been demonstrated in my former letter to your Excellency, that the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan are by no means in a condition of distress nor in any want of a provision. Secondly, I submit to your Excellency that as "the disgraceful and inhuman conduct of Akbur Alee Khan towards his brother" is stated by the Right Honourable the Governor-General as the most powerful argument for your Excellency's restoration of the pension, if a part of this pension were assigned to the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan, for whose maintenance he is bound to provide, it would follow that his personal crime must prove the source of a provision for his family, or in other words, for himself; a conclusion which your Excellency must admit to be as far from my Lord Minto's intention as justice can be from the reverse. In short, the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan, though, as your Excellency has justly observed, they be perfectly innocent and blameless, are by no means in a condition of distress; but, on the contrary, by Akbur Alee Khan's usurpation and crime, have been rendered totally independent of this provision, and therefore are expressly excluded, from the obvious intention of the words in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, to which your Excellency has been pleased to refer. But even admitting them to be needy, they can have no possible right to a share of an allowance assigned in compliance with the desire of the British Government for the support of Hoosein Alee Khan, whose condition alone formed the subject of the protracted discussion with your Excellency, which has thus at length been concluded, and in the whole course of which not the smallest notice was taken of the women or children of Akbur Alee Khan. If your Excellency be pleased to assign a separate provision for them, our Government can have no objection; but the distribution of the pension assigned, namely, that of two thousand rupees per mensem, can in my judgment be no otherwise arranged with justice to Hoosein Alee Khan, than in the manner already submitted. On these grounds I repeat my respectful suggestion, that your Excellency will be pleased to confirm the distribution which I had the honour of proposing, and to accept the receipt of Hoosein Alee Khan in token of your final approbation. This acquiescence on the part of your Excellency will put an end to vexatious discussion on a point that I considered to have been settled, and will supersede the necessity for any further reference to the Government before distribution of the pension can take place. It must otherwise become my duty to suspend the payment of any part of the money which your Excellency has been pleased to send to me, until a reference on the subject be made to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, and I receive his Lordship's commands regarding the distribution of the pension.

Sir :

Shortly after the apparently happy and final adjustment of the principal questions in dispute between the British Government and his Excellency the Vizier, it was proposed to his Excellency by me, with a view to the satisfactory conduct of the system of reform in his administration, that we should have weekly conferences at the palace, or alternately at the palace and Residency, for the purpose of concerting and deciding on the course of measures to be pursued and the support to be afforded to those measures. Accordingly, during the whole of the months of October and November last, this salutary arrangement was observed, and at every meeting with his Excellency I had the satisfaction of perceiving and inferring from his Excellency's remarks, that the advantages of the new system of administration were more and more impressed upon his mind, and that he was fully resolved to adopt the measures which I had proposed to him on a perfect conviction of their expedience.

2. At one of my conferences with the Vizier, in the beginning of the month of November, his Excellency requested me to commit to writing, for his guidance, the purport of the suggestions which I had offered to him, and assured me that they should be carried into effect; and I complied with his Excellency's requisition, by transmitting to him the paper of suggestions which forms a number of this despatch, and which I request the favour of your submitting to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council. This paper was accompanied, or preceded, by a Persian translation of one of the most important and comprehensive of the Regulations of our Government for the guidance of Collectors and Tehsildars, namely Regulation XXVII. of 1803 for the Ceded and Conquered Provinces, which I begged his Excellency to peruse with attention, and to compare with the suggestions which I had offered to him on various former occasions for the better administration of his revenue. The Vizier at a subsequent conference, and more particularly by a message through my Moonshee, expressed his general approbation of the principal measures which I proposed, assured me that the proclamations and instructions to Aumils and Ameens were preparing in the terms which I had suggested; and with a reference to some subordinate points, on which his Excellency desired explanation, he directed his Dewan and chief revenue officer, Dya-Krishen, to attend me, for the purpose of stating his doubts and receiving my explanations.

3. A conversation with Raae Dya-Krishen had long been the object of my desire. This person had originally used his influence with the Vizier to prevent his Excellency's acquiescence in the system of assessment and collection of the revenue recommended by our Government; and as the particular nature of his office, as well as the degree of his master's confidence which he was supposed to possess, rendered it important to satisfy his mind of the advantages of the system recommended, I was anxious to have an opportunity of doing so before the measures of reform should commence. The result of my first conference with Dya-Krishen was satisfactory in the extreme. He appeared to be thoroughly convinced of the propriety of all the measures proposed, assured me that the Vizier was sincerely desirous to carry them into effect with my concurrence and support, and that he himself saw no obstacle whatever to the conclusion of a triennial settlement of the revenue in every district of Oude during the current fusly year, which he should accordingly recommend to his Excellency.

4. Within a fortnight from the date of my conversation with Dya-Krishen, I had the mortification of perceiving a manifest change in the disposition and conduct of the Vizier, whose jealousy of his minister, Dya-Krishen, would seem to have been excited by the sinister practices and false reports of Hukeem Mehdee, Aumil of Khyrabad, a person whose disaffection to the British Government, and the general vices of his character, have frequently fallen under my observation, and have been brought to the notice of the Government by my predecessor, as well as by myself. This person had been apparently removed from the Vizier's confidence and favour, on two or three recent occasions, for a considerable period of time, during all which his Excellency seemed particularly attentive to my advice, and I have frequently had occasion to remark that the restoration of Hukeem Mehdee to favour, has been the forerunner of untoward proceedings on the part of his Excellency, with regard to every question in discussion between his Excellency and me. On the present occasion, it is obvious to my judgment that his Excellency's inclination to depart from the promise conveyed in his letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, Lord Minto, as well as from his assurances to me, regarding the progress of the measures of reform, the provision assigned to Hoosein Alee Khan, and the restoration of the rights of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, has been induced in a principal degree by the pernicious counsels of Hukeem Mehdee, and by the false reports of intriguing agents employed by this person at the Presidency, as well as in the city of Lucknow.

5. About

5. About the beginning of this month it was reported to me that a scheme had been suggested to the Vizier for defeating the objects of reform, by the deputation of a few Ameens to the most disorderly district of his dominions, under circumstances which were calculated to preclude even the partial success of their deputation, and with secret instructions to represent the obstacles that opposed their proceedings immediately on their arrival in the district. The particulars of this scheme and its objects were explained to me by an indirect communication on the part of Raee Dya-Krisben, and the truth of the reports which had reached me was confirmed by a manifest change in the disposition and conduct of the Vizier, who had ceased, without any pretext, to pay his usual visits at the Residency or to communicate with me in a friendly manner, as formerly, on the subject of reform or on any other. The discussion, in particular, regarding the property and will of Tuhseen Alee Khan, which had hitherto proceeded in a friendly and conciliatory manner, notwithstanding our difference of opinion, was no longer attended to with patience on the part of his Excellency the Vizier, who seemed disposed to take advantage of my known inability to gratify him by the unconditional surrender of that property, as a pretext for rejecting my advice on every other question that occurred, be the nature of it ever so trifling.

Lucknow,

6. Perceiving this unhappy alteration in the temper and disposition of the Vizier, and particularly apprehensive of its effects on the progress of the reform in his administration, I deemed it to be my indispensable duty to guard against the commencement of the reform, under circumstances that were calculated to frustrate the salutary objects in view, or to afford to his Excellency a pretext for ascribing the failure of those objects to any defect in the system proposed; and accordingly, on the 11th instant, I addressed a letter on this subject to the Vizier, a copy of which is enclosed for his Lordship in Council's perusal, and will, I trust, receive his approbation. A short reply to this letter, a translation of which is enclosed, was received on the same day; since which I have had no communication with his Excellency on the subject: but I have heard, through another channel, that the few miserable Ameens who were actually appointed by his Excellency, and had received an advance of salary at the rate of fifty rupees per mensem, with instructions to proceed to Purtaubgurh, have been recently dismissed from their employment, and required, under pain of imprisonment, to refund the amount which they received, and which many of them had expended for their subsistence. This circumstance, of itself, seems decisive of the fact of their total incapacity for the trust which was nominally reposed in them, and of the view of his Excellency the Vizier in selecting such persons for employment in a turbulent district, and peculiarly difficult to settle, because subjected to extraordinary oppression for a great number of years.

7. I cannot with certainty predict the nature of the excuse which will be offered by his Excellency the Vizier for this departure from his solemn engagement with a reference to the question of reform. That his Excellency is at a loss to assign any plausible pretext for his conduct, may be inferred from his delay to reply to my letter, and from his anxiety to avoid a conference with me since the date of his receiving that letter, which he has manifested by complaints of indisposition on every subsequent occasion of our meeting. His reply, however, cannot be withheld much longer, and it shall be transmitted to you as soon as I receive it, with such remarks as the purport of it may suggest.

8. It must be obvious to his Lordship in Council, that the partial commencement of the reform under such circumstances as those that have been stated, and in the disposition of mind and with the views, which I have ascribed to his Excellency the Vizier on grounds that appear to be unquestionable, could have no other possible effect than that of frustrating the objects proposed, and affording a pretext to his Excellency for imputing the failure of those objects to a cause the most remote from the true one. This effect has been necessarily precluded by the tenor of my letter to the Vizier, while his Excellency's responsibility for the performance of his solemn engagement to our Government remains unaffected, as before, in the terms of his letter to to Lord Minto of the 12th of October last, namely, "to regulate the assessment of his dominions by the real assets of the country; and to fix that assessment for a term of years, to be afterwards increased in proportion to the augmentation of resources in the districts;" and further, "to fix the amount of revenue to be exacted from the landholders by written engagements under the guarantee of the government, so that no more may be demanded than what is specified in those engagements, and that the landholders and others may be relieved from oppressive or arbitrary exaction."

9. The performance of this solemn engagement, which was voluntarily contracted by the Vizier, is all that our government can require, and we are obviously entitled to demand it. If it be performed in a satisfactory manner, and in the spirit of existing treaties, with our uniform concurrence and advice, we are bound and disposed to support the whole course of his Excellency's measures, and thus to ensure their success, to the improvement of his revenue and resources; but if the measures adopted by his Excellency, with even the ostensible view of fulfilling his engagements to our Government, be such as we are bound to disapprove, or be adopted without our knowledge and concurrence, the responsibility for the success of those measures, and for the increase or diminution of the public revenue of the country, must rest with his Excellency alone, and he can never hereafter ascribe the failure of any of his measures to a defect in the general system recommended by our Government to his adoption, nor to the want of our support to those measures which may be executed without our knowledge or advice.

Suggestions regarding the Reform, submitted to his Excellency the Vizier on the 10th of November 1813.

The present season of the year is, of all others, the best adapted to the commencement of the salutary reforms in the administration of your Excellency's revenue. The seed-time of the Rubbee crop being over, the landholders and cultivators of the ground can have no possible pretext for refusing or delaying to attend the Tehsildars for the purpose of settling the revenue, and the facility of military operations at so favourable a season of the year must deter the disaffected and refractory from refusing to attend the Tehsildars, or must readily tend to their suppression. Further, the easy and accurate ascertainment of assets, or of the probable produce of the lands, by ocular inspection of the cultivated fields, is another manifest advantage at the present season of the year, unattainable at any other season. During the hot weather, the difficulty of moving the troops to keep in awe the disaffected and refractory, who might refuse to attend the Tehsildars; during the rains, the necessary occupation of the landholders and cultivators in the progress of husbandry; and, during both those seasons in common a number of other disadvantages oppose the settlement of the revenue, to which at this season no obstacle occurs. I therefore earnestly recommend, that the proclamations and instructions to Aumils and Ameens, in the terms which were suggested to your Excellency at our conference of Saturday last, be prepared and dispatched to all the districts with the least practicable delay, and that the several public officers in the districts be directed to publish the proclamations, and commence the preparatory measures for the triennial settlements of the revenue immediately on the receipt of those orders. If copies of your Excellency's proclamations were also to be furnished to me, to be dispatched to the commanding-officers of stations for the purpose of more general information, I have no doubt of the advantage of this measure.

The Aumils already in authority, whom your Excellency may be disposed to continue under the new system in consequence of their good character and conduct, as also the new officers who may now be employed, should be instructed, instructed, after publishing your Excellency's proclamations throughout all the villages of their districts, to assemble the different Seghadars, and prepare, in concert with them, an accurate statement of the collections, or juma-wāsil baukee account, for the last three years if it be possible, or for as many years as may be readily procured, with a dowl (scheme) of a moderate assessment for the present year, to be formed by comparative estimates of the probable produce of this with the actual collections of former years, and adjusted with the strictest impartiality. Those schemes, with their necessary accompaniments, to be forwarded to the Presence without delay, and to be carefully examined by your Excellency, or by some of your ablest officers of revenue and most confidential servants; and if the schemes be approved by your Excellency, and no complaints against them be received from the districts, let them be sent back to the Aumils and Ameens, with instructions to take cabooleats (agreements) from the several landholders and Malgoozars for the amount of their respective assessments for a term of three years, under their seals and the signature of the Seghadars, and send those agreements to the Presence: after which the puttahs (engagements) of the Government to the landholders for a term of three years should be forwarded from the Presence to the Aumils and Ameens, to be by them delivered to the landholders, whose receipts for their puttahs should be obtained, to shew that the Aumils have delivered them.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

As the greatest part of your Excellency's dominions is already divided into large districts of ten, twenty, and thirty lacs of rupees of revenue each, under the charge of considerable farmers or Ameens, some of whom must be worthy of your Excellency's confidence and of employment under the new system, it seems advisable that, in such cases, the triennial settlement of those districts on the new plan be committed to the present incumbents, in the character of collectors or Zillahdars, they nominating and instructing their subordinate Tehsildars or Ameens to collect the revenue papers and transmit schemes of the settlement, as above explained, in the first instance to the collectors or Zillahdars, who should submit them with their remarks to the Presence, whence, after final investigation and approval, the orders should be issued for concluding the settlement, by receiving the cabooleats or agreements of the landholders and delivering the puttahs in exchange.

But all engagements with the landholders should be in the name and bear the seal of the Government, whatever degree of authority may be otherwise vested in the Zillahdars.

When the settlements are finally adjusted, security for the largest instalment of the revenue of each district or Zillah should be required from the officer in charge: and this may be executed in either of two ways, namely, first, the collector or Zillahdar of a large division of territory may have the power of nominating his own subordinate Tehsildars, giving security in his own person for the largest instalment of the whole of the revenue of his district, and receiving for himself the established per-centage of the whole (which I recommend for the present to be ten per cent. of the clear revenue), out of which his subordinate Tehsildars, and all their expenses, as well as his own, are to be paid; or, secondly, each subordinate Tehsildar to receive the per-centage of his own particular district and furnish the security required, the Zillahdar or collector of each division having an adequate salary and establishment for the general superintendence, without any per-centage on the revenue of the whole: and this latter arrangement I consider to be preferable to the former, as well as more consistent with the terms of the Governor-General's letter to your Excellency, which is the basis of the system proposed.

Letter
from Resident at

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 11th December 1813.)

A considerable time has elapsed since your Excellency has been pleased to consult or communicate with me regarding the appointment or deputation of Ameens, and reports conveyed to me through various channels have ascribed to your Excellency a design, which is calculated to excite my apprehension of the failure of those salutary measures that were determined on by our mutual consent. I understand that your Excellency has recently nominated Ameens, with salaries of fifty rupees per mensem, to divisions of the district of Purtaubgurh, yielding a revenue each of a lac of rupees, and that those Ameens are about to depart, with instructions of the nature of which I am uninformed.

Although I can scarcely believe that, after the recent most happy adjustment of every depending question between your Excellency and the Company's Government, a measure of the nature described, or indeed any measure whatever having reference to the reform of your administration, should be adopted without my knowledge and advice, yet a report of this nature having reached me, it is a duty of friendship, on my part, to submit to your Excellency without reserve the sentiments with which I have received it.

It must be obvious to your Excellency's judgment, that persons who are worthy of confidence, and capable of performing the duties which were meant to be committed to the Ameens, could never undertake to perform them for salaries so inadequate to the trust; and that the employment of such persons as those who are reported to me to have been entertained, unless they be placed under the superintendence and control of a person of rank and respectability with an adequate salary, in the character of collector or Zillahdar, can be productive of no benefit whatever, but on the contrary must bring your Excellency's Government into disrepute, at the very commencement of the new system of administration, which your Excellency has been pleased to adopt in compliance with the counsels of our Government.

I formerly suggested to your Excellency, and I now repeat my suggestion, that the officers to be selected for the duty of investigating the state of the country with a view to the triennial settlement, should be persons of great respectability, and should have salaries at the least of two hundred rupees per mensem, and that, with this view, the districts or divisions to be committed to their charge might with propriety be extended to a territory yielding from two to three lacs of rupees; and further, that the general superintendence and control of the conduct of every ten of those Ameens should be vested in an officer of high rank, and of the greatest respectability and integrity, with an adequate salary and establishment, in the character of collector or Zillahdar.

Under such an arrangement as that described, there can be no doubt of your Excellency's finding trust-worthy and respectable persons to undertake the duties of Ameens, and to perform them with ability, integrity, and zeal, giving ample security for their good conduct and for the largest instalment of the revenue, in the ultimate situation of Tehsildars, which your Excellency will be disposed to entrust to them when the settlement of their districts shall be concluded.

Your Excellency cannot but be aware, that the concession which I recently made to you with regard to the revenue papers, and my promise of the ratification of that concession by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, proceeded on the natural expectation, and indeed on the obvious condition, that every measure of your Excellency's Government having reference to the new system of administration of the revenue should be executed with my concurrence and advice, and that, in fact, the support of those measures, in as far as the power of the British Government is concerned, must depend on my previous knowledge of their justice and expedience, since without this particular information my assistance can never be afforded, and the success or failure of your Excellency's measures undertaken without my advice must depend on your Excellency alone.

It therefore seems to me to be advisable, and I recommend to your Excellency's most serious consideration, with a view not only to the support and success success of your measures, but also to the ease and tranquillity of your mind, that the measures which may now be in agitation, and all others having reference to the reform, be communicated without reserve to your Excellency's well-wisher in the first instance, either personally or in writing, or through the medium of your Excellency's confidential servant, who was recently ordered to attend me for this purpose, and through whom my suggestions were conveyed.

from the Vizier.

I have received your letter of this date, informing me that you had heard of the nomination of Ameens, and repeating your suggestion that the Ameens should have an allowance of two hundred or two hundred and fifty rupees per mensem, and that a Zillahdar of respectability and integrity, with a high salary, should be appointed over every ten of the Ameens. The truth of the matter is, that eight Ameens, with instructions drawn up in the terms which you formerly advised, had obtained their leave and were about to depart : but now that you have written to me so, I have recalled those Ameens, and shall reply to your letter hereafter.

Ordered, That a letter be prepared in the office of the Persian Secretary, addressed to the Nawaub Vizier, in conformity to the terms of the following draft, and be forwarded to the Resident at Lucknow, for the purpose of being presented to his Excellency.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 7th of January 1814.)

Letter from
Governor-General.

Major Baillie has communicated to me his correspondence with your Excellency, relative to the payment and distribution of the pension which, at the repeated representation of the British Government, your Excellency was pleased to assign to Hoosein Alee Khan, and which was intended for the support of himself and of his own immediate family. That family, as your Excellency knows, had been reduced to distress, not solely by the resumption of the pension originally granted for the maintenance of the family of Hyder Beg Khan, but in a greater degree by the unjust and cruel conduct of his eldest son, Akbur Alee Khan.

When the strong claim which the situation of Hoosein Alee Khan had upon your bounty was urged to your Excellency, the British Government could have no interest in the step, but that which it ever must take in all that involves your Excellency's known justice and honour.

I may say that the representation of the British Government to your Excellency was not spontaneous. It was invited by a reference which your Excellency had made to the Governor-General on the subject : a reference which indicated that your Excellency contemplated the matter correspondently to our view of it. On this overture the British Government could not but earnestly encourage your Excellency's disposition.

It felt how much the general opinion of your Excellency's and of the Honourable Company's subjects would necessarily be swayed by your procedure towards that family, and the British Government thence thought itself entitled to persevere strenuously in pressing the adoption of a measure so highly calculated to advance a reputation which we wish never to separate from our own.

Your Excellency having referred to the late Governor-General's letter of the 2d of July, as countenancing a pretension on the part of the family of Akbur Alee Khan to share in the pension, it is incumbent on me, in the name of the Government

Governor-General.

Government which I represent, to assure your Excellency, that the letter was never meant to bear such a construction. Major Baillie, in his letters of the 11th and 16th of December, has demonstrated that the terms of Lord Minto's letter cannot, by any just interpretation, be applied to the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan. They were in comparative affluence, and did not need the interposition, if Lord Minto could have used any for the family of a man whom his Lordship reprobates so decisively as he does Akbur Alee Khan in that very letter. But it would, moreover, in our contemplation, have tainted all the grace and elevated humanity of your Excellency's munificence to Hoosein Alee Khan, had you at the same moment extended a similar beneficence to the oppressor and persecutor of him and his offspring; therefore it never could have entered into the thoughts of Lord Minto and the Council, to solicit what would tarnish the lustre of an act advised by them wholly out of regard to your Excellency's fame.

I must indulge an earnest hope, that after this explanation your Excellency will deem it consonant to your exalted character, to confirm and issue the provision for the family of Hoosein Alee Khan in the manner requested by Major Baillie, without making any allotment out of it for the family of Akbur Alee Khan.

Your Excellency's answer to a letter of my predecessor's, dated 2d July 1813, expresses a distinct acquiescence, on the part of your Excellency, in the plan of reform recommended in the system of your Government, and conveyed the assurance that it should be immediately undertaken. Major Baillie has since informed this Government that your Excellency appears to have abandoned that salutary intention, and that you have shewn a marked disinclination to listen to any of his suggestions referring to that momentous concern.

It is my anxious desire, and it is equally the solicitude of those with whom I have the satisfaction to be associated, that every testimony of attention, and every procedure which can uphold your dignity, should be manifested by the British Government. Your Excellency's interests, however, and ours are so inseparably interwoven, that it would be criminal in us, did we not offer to you our best advice in any conjuncture which we may think pregnant with evil for you. It is on this ground that we have urged your Excellency to adopt arrangements of reform in your dominions (a right of interference secured to us by treaty), as the only mode of avoiding a convulsion not to be quelled but by applications of our force that would be discreditable for us, and which we consequently could not make for your support.

The manner in which our troops have often been called upon to act, in order to dissipate commotions occasioned by the misrule and oppressive conduct of those entrusted with the details of your Excellency's affairs, has extorted frequent remonstrance from this Government. We feel it dishonourable for the British arms to be employed in supporting injustice, and we must guard against such disgrace.

A sense of mutual interest has forced the British Government to press this point strongly. There will not be wanting men around you, whose advantages would suffer from such a reform. It is natural that they should attempt to discipline your Excellency to the measure, and to the British Government for urging it. They would have no chance of succeeding, were it not that your Excellency's mind might imagine the effect of disregard of our counsels would be merely temporary coldness. Such a coldness could not exist, without soon degenerating, first into estrangement, and then into jealousies and misconstructions of the most dangerous description. The ultimate result would be matter of the deepest grief to us: to your Excellency it would be ruin. That a contingency so dreadful may be precluded, let me entreat your Excellency to co-operate with me in manly confidence, to maintain the united interest of the two Governments firm and unshaken.

It shall be my study to forbear, as far as my duty will permit, any minor interventions which may be unpleasant to your Excellency, provided I find,
on

on the other hand, that your Excellency enters in earnest on these arrangements, and cordially maintains that conduct whence we may have the gratification to estimate you as an efficient and zealous ally of the Honourable Company. The object is so serious, that I assure myself your Excellency cannot misinterpret the frankness with which I have exposed our relative situations for your reflection: on the contrary, the unreserved manner in which I speak ought to satisfy you, that no doubtful sentiment remains concealed, and your Excellency should thence feel your security in a perfect reliance on this Government.

Major Baillie, who possesses my full confidence, is instructed by me to make this principle the guide of the communications which he has the honour of holding with your Excellency, and I ardently hope that your Excellency will prove your correspondence to my dispositions, by the liberal and sincere trust which you will repose in that gentleman.

Ordered, That a copy of the foregoing draft be transmitted to the Resident at Lucknow, together with the following letter.

To Major J. Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th ultimo, enclosing a translation of your correspondence with the Vizier on the subject of the payment and distribution of the pension assigned to Hoosein Alee Khan.

2. It is satisfactory to the Governor-General in Council to state his entire concurrence in the justice and propriety of the distribution of the pension proposed by you, which is in strict conformity to the object of the British Government in urging the grant, namely, the support of Hoosein Alee Khan, who has been deprived of his just rights and of the means of comfortable subsistence, by the injustice of his elder brother, countenanced and encouraged by the Vizier, combined with the means of enabling him to relieve the indigent branches of the family of Hyder Beg Khan, reduced to absolute distress by the resumption of the pension originally assigned for their support.

3. The Vizier cannot, at any period of the negotiation, have misunderstood the views and intentions of the British Government, as is evident from the whole tenor of the correspondence and verbal discussions which have passed on the subject, and his Excellency's endeavours to divert from its proper objects a portion of the allowance, which he at last yielded to the urgent representations of the British Government in behalf of this unfortunate family, and the suspension of the payment of the pension for two months, with the view of applying a portion of it to the maintenance of the family of Akbur Alee Khan, are matters of equal surprise and concern to the Governor-General in Council.

4. It has appeared to his Excellency the Governor-General in Council proper, on this occasion, to point out, in a direct address to his Excellency the Vizier, the erroneous interpretation which his Excellency has given to that passage of Lord Minto's letter of the 2d of July which relates to the case of Hoosein Alee Khan, and to confirm and enforce the arguments employed by you in your letters to his Excellency on this subject. The English draft of a letter which will be addressed by the Governor-General to the Vizier is accordingly enclosed, and you will receive the Persian letter from the proper department as soon as it can be prepared. From that draft you will distinctly learn the opinion of the Governor-General in Council, not only on the subject of the above-mentioned pension, but on the more important points to which your letter alluded. The sentiments expressed by his Lordship to the Vizier afford so marked a line for your guidance in further negotiation, that it is unnecessary for me to add any detailed observations on your statement.

The 21st January 1814.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch under date the 22d ultimo, I transmit to you, for the notice of the Government, the inclosed copy and translation of a letter received from the Vizier, in answer to my friendly remonstrance on the nature of his Excellency's proceedings, with the ostensible view of commencing a reform in the administration of his revenue. A copy, with a Persian translation of my reply to his Excellency's letter, is also transmitted by this despatch, and appears to supersede the necessity of my offering any additional remarks on the character of his Excellency's proceedings, or of the arguments by which they are supported. With a reference to the observations which I have submitted to his Excellency respecting the conduct of his Aumil of Purtaubgurh, and the actual condition of that district, I subjoin to the documents above noticed some extracts from letters from Colonel Frith, commanding our troops in Purtaubgurh.

2. By information which I have recently obtained, it is fully established in my mind, not only that the dismissal of the Ameens, whom the Vizier professes to have recalled in consequence of my letter regarding them, had never actually taken place, but that the instructions and proclamations to which his Excellency has alluded in his letter had never been delivered to the Ameens, nor had the districts to which they were to proceed been specified to any one of them. Two of those persons have declared to two of my confidential servants, that the purport of the instructions which they saw in the hands of his Excellency's Moonshees was totally different from that which I had suggested to his Excellency.

Letter

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 30th December 1813.)

On the 17th of Zeehijj (11th December), in answer to your letter of that date, it was written that a detailed reply should be given thereafter. The truth is this :— In your letter above stated, you have written that "I had not made any communication to you regarding the appointment or deputation of Ameens, and that "reports had reached you," &c. You will recollect that before this, on an occasion of our meeting, you asked what was done respecting the Ameens, and I answered that they had been selected and should be despatched ; and Racee Dia-Krishen also informed you, that proclamations and instructions, corresponding with the draft which had been settled between us, were prepared, and that Ameens were about to be despatched. With regard, again, to your suggestion respecting Zillahs and Zillahdars, the case is this :—That in the paper of suggestions which you sent to me, it is no where written that Zillahdars should first be appointed, and therefore I proposed to depute Ameens in the first place to Purtaubgurh, where Koodrut Oolla Khan is already in the station of Zillahdar.

In

In answer to your remark, that after the recent happy adjustment of every depending question you could scarcely believe that any measure of this sort should be adopted without your knowledge and advice, the case is this:—that although the present was not the time for deputing Ameens, I resolved to appoint them, and gave them their dismissal, with instructions and proclamations, merely at your request; and as to informing you or asking you what Ameen should be deputed, or who should not be deputed, or any other matter of detail, I had long ago expressly refused to make any such communications. The receipt of your letter, to which this is a reply, has been the cause of suspending the deputation of Ameens. Consider how much this has been a cause of slight among the people, what a bad appearance it has, and how much it has grieved my mind.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
21 Jan. 1814.

Letter
from the Vizier.

You have written that you formerly suggested that the districts committed to the charge of the Ameens should be extended to a territory yielding from two to three lacs of rupees. This suggestion I do not recollect, and it is not contained in the plan which you sent to me. I inquired for persons who had been employed in the Company's territories and were acquainted with the system that is prevalent there, and the object of limiting their districts to a lac of rupees was merely that of hastening and facilitating their preparation and transmission of the papers, while their allowance was established at the rate which you yourself originally proposed, namely, a hundred rupees for every lac.

With a reference to your suggestion, that a person of high rank, respectability, and integrity, with an adequate salary, should be appointed to superintend the Ameens;—as the settlement of the country and appointment of Zillahdars was dependent on the proceedings of the Ameens, and the investigation of the papers which they might furnish to exhibit the state of the districts, and the conduct of the present Zillahdars (after which in the case of established misconduct another Zillahdar might be appointed in the room of the officer who misbehaved), therefore the selection of new Zillahdars for the present was unnecessary.

In answer to your remark, that "the concession regarding revenue papers" proceeded on the natural expectation that every measure having reference to "the system of reform should be executed with your concurrence and advice," &c. The case is this:—That in the manner which you stated and advised, the measures of reform were commenced, and instructions and proclamations in the terms which you had suggested were written, and given to the Ameens; consequently, the only measure on which it was necessary to consult you was not adopted without your advice, and therefore your exoneration from responsibility, for any failure which might have occurred, could not be admitted.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 4th January 1814.)

I have had the honour of receiving two letters from your Excellency, dated the 6th of Mohurru (30th ultimo), in reply to my respectful addresses of the 17th and 22d of Zeehijj (11th and 16th ultimo), on the important subject of reform, and on the question of the distribution of the pension assigned to Hoosein Alee Khan. Copies and translations of both your Excellency's letters having been submitted to the notice of the Government, whose deliberate and impartial consideration the arguments contained in them will receive, I might, perhaps, with propriety have refrained from submitting any remarks to your Excellency on the tenor of either of those letters, until the judgment of the Government should be known; and, with a reference to one of the questions, namely, the distribution of the pension of Hoosein Alee Khan, I have determined, from respect for your Excellency, to await in silence the result of the reference which I had previously made to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

Letter

With regard, however, to the more important subject of reform, it appears to be proper to recall to your Excellency's recollection a few of the circumstances which which occurred before your Excellency's seeming resolution to depute Ameens to Purtaubgurh, in a manner, and with instructions and commands that, in as far as they were imparted to me, could not receive my approbation.—And, first, I submit to your Excellency, with particular reference to your statement of our conversation regarding Ameens, that the object of my inquiry on that occasion could not possibly have been limited to the single district of Purtaubgurh, but must have comprized every Zillah and Purgunnah in the whole of your Excellency's dominions, since your Excellency must perfectly recollect that a partial introduction of the new system of assessment and collection of the revenue was a measure against which I had uniformly remonstrated, with an eagerness proportioned to the interest which I feel in the successful progress of the reform and of your Excellency's general administration. Indeed, my written and personal suggestions to your Excellency, on every former as well as recent occasion, demonstrate that the universal introduction of the system, at the same instant of time, by proclamations to be issued by your Excellency and circulated throughout your dominions, through the medium of your Excellency's Aumils and of the commanding officers of our troops, was considered by me to be indispensable to the successful progress of the reform. Nay, your Excellency on more than one occasion, and particularly that of our meeting at Baroun, had assured me that copies of the proclamation should be furnished for circulation by the commanding officers of our troops, under my immediate authority, as soon as they were prepared for distribution among the several Aumils and Ameens; and, consequently, I could never have calculated on the commencement of any measures of reform, or on the deputation of a single Ameen by your Excellency, till I should be furnished with copies of the proclamation, as well as particularly apprized of the instructions which were meant to be given to the Ameens. Dia-Krishen was deputed by your Excellency, in the terms of your message to me, for the purpose of receiving detailed explanations regarding measures which I had previously recommended to your Excellency, and which you had generally promised to adopt. He informed me, it is true, that proclamations and instructions were preparing, and that he had been ordered to select Ameens, with the view of commencing the reform in every district of your Excellency's territory; of the propriety and necessity of which, and of all the measures that I proposed to him, he appeared to be perfectly satisfied, and promised to satisfy your Excellency's mind; but his conversation could never have led me to suppose that the measure, which your Excellency would now seem to have meditated with regard to the district of Purtaubgurh, was at that time in your Excellency's contemplation, nor that any measures of reform could have been executed or commenced by your Excellency without my previous concurrence and advice.—Secondly, I submit to your Excellency, with a reference to your remark respecting Zillahs and Zillahdars, that the division and subdivision of your dominions into Zillahs and smaller districts, with a view to the more efficient administration of the revenues, was the first measure recommended by me to your Excellency, during our discussions of two years ago; and, consequently, that no written nor verbal proposal of mine, having a reference to the new system of assessment, could ever be considered as unconnected with the necessary appointment of Zillahdars. Nay, your Excellency would seem to have been aware of the truth of this observation, and to have anticipated it in a manner the most singular, by the remark (inconsistent with the preceding one) of Koodrut Oolla Khan, the Aumil of Purtaubgurh, being employed as a Zillahdar in that district. Yet when I beg your Excellency to recollect the purport of our repeated conversations on the character and conduct of this Aumil, the letters of a British officer so respectable and intelligent as Colonel Frith, demonstrative of Koodrut Oolla Khan's extraordinary misconduct and oppression, and your Excellency's avowed determination, in concert with me, to remove him, it must be unnecessary to express my surprize at the mention of such an officer as this in the important character of a Zillahdar, to superintend and control the Ameens to be deputed to the scene of his oppression.

That your Excellency, after avowing this fact, should have been pleased to consider and describe the intended deputation of Ameens to the district of Purtaubgurh as a measure adopted with my advice, is a circumstance still more surprising; and the ultimate suspension of that measure, if indeed as your

your Excellency observes you had determined to carry it into effect, and were prevented by the receipt of my letter, instead of causing grief to your Excellency's mind, should form, in my opinion, a source of consolation ; since the measure itself must inevitably have brought your Excellency's Government into disrepute, and must have strengthened the hand of oppression, in the person of Koodrut Oolla Khan, over the unhappy population of Purtaubgurh, who have long been the victims of his extortion.

With a reference to your Excellency's remarks, that I had never recommended the extension of the districts to be committed to Ameens to a territory yielding two or three lacs of rupees, and that the salary fixed for those Ameens was at the rate which I had previously suggested, I admit that the expression in my letters respecting the division and subdivision of the country contains the minimum and maximum of the districts at one lac and three lacs of rupees ; but the medium of these two extremes, I submit, might have naturally occurred to your Excellency as the point to which I referred : and, at all events, the superintendence and control of an able and respectable officer in the charge of a grand division or Zillah, would have provided against any defects in the detail of subordinate arrangements.

With regard to all the remaining points of your Excellency's letter, and to the general subject of this address, I submit, as a concluding and conclusive remark, to which in the genuine spirit of friendship and conciliation I entreat your most serious attention, that the result of our protracted discussions on the important question of reform, and the express and explicit tenor of your Excellency's letter to Lord Minto, have fixed on your Excellency a solemn and unequivocal obligation to operate an universal, and by no means a partial change, in the assessment and collection of your revenues: that is to say, and to use your Excellency's words, have established a promise to regulate "the future assessment of your dominions by the real assets of the country, and to fix that assessment for a term of years to be afterwards increased in proportion to the augmentation of resources in the districts, and further to fix the amount of revenue to be exacted from the landholders, by written engagements under the guarantee of the Government, so that no more may be demanded from the landholders than what is specified in their written engagements," &c. This change in the administration of the revenues, which your Excellency has admitted to be indispensable, and which our government is entitled to demand, may be ostensibly attempted by your Excellency in either of two ways : the one strictly conformable to the spirit of existing treaties, and with the happy disposition which your Excellency evinced, at the date of your letter to the Governor-General, in uniform concert and concurrence with your Excellency's cordial well-wisher, the British Resident at your Court, whose constant and zealous support must in this case ensure the success of the whole of your Excellency's measures, the security and ultimate increase of the revenue and resources of your country, and the ease and happiness of your mind. The other it is unnecessary to describe, as being that which is unhappily evinced by your Excellency's recent proceedings : but its consequences, however obvious in themselves, I shall, from motives of friendship, detail to you ; the failure of your Excellency's measures, if such as have been recently meditated, from their own radical defects, as well as from the want of that support which our Government must ever withhold from such measures as its judgment disapproves ; the probable loss and the decrease of your Excellency's revenue and resources ; and the ultimate regret, as well as constant anxiety of your mind, from the conviction of your resistance to councils so pure and disinterested as those of the Honourable Company's Government. From this simple statement of facts, the reality or imaginary nature of the responsibility, to which your Excellency has alluded at the close of your letter to my address, must be apparent to your Excellency's mind.

Sir :

Though unwilling to trouble you with private letters, I think it is proper on the present occasion, to give you some information regarding the state of this country, the management of which, I am very sorry to say, is no way improved since the time of Asuf-ood-Dowla. Indeed the inhabitants are rather more oppressed now ; for formerly the Aumils were infinitely more liberal than they are at present, and occasionally allowed deductions, which is never done at present, nor are they under any kind of fear or restraint.

I enclose the report made by the people I sent into the Gurh Amet, hy district with the letters for Sheo Golam Sing and Seetulla Bux, from which you will perceive that many villages have been deserted, that forts are under repair, in short, that all the vices of the old system continue in full vigour, and that the Nawaub's Officers and Government are in the highest degree unpopular. But how can it be otherwise in a country where there are no fixed laws, no police, nor no court of civil or criminal justice, to which the injured can appeal for relief? In fact, the whole of the inhabitants of this country are in the highest degree discontented with the Nawaub, with all his public officers, and with his system of government. They see in all the neighbouring countries under the Company's Government the property of every individual protected, and that from the highest to the lowest every man enjoys in peace and security the fruits of his industry ; but they cannot conceive or comprehend why the English forcibly maintain a Government which acts upon principles diametrically opposite to our own system. The Nawaub's Government would not last a month, no not a week, if we were to withdraw our support : all the crimes of oppression and injustice committed under his Government, therefore, rest at our door. When I was first stationed in this part of the country, in the year 1800, I recollect the Zemindars boasting that Seetul Persaud was the first Aumil who escaped justice for many years and returned alive to Lucknow ; and that he would not have got off but for the protection of our troops. Thus are we placed, to countenance and support the perpetration of crimes on one hand, and to prevent their punishment on the other.

I hope this system will not last much longer.

Sir :

At the request of Hurdial Sing, the vakeel of Dewan Zubber Sing, I have the honour to enclose for your information his arzee, detailing the particulars of a very unfortunate affray which took place two days ago at Zubber Sing's residence, about four coss from hence.

Gumber Sing, who is mentioned in the arzee, is a substantial Zemindar in the neighbourhood, and is security for the payment of Zubber Sing's revenue.

Hurdial Sing was formerly a Subadar in the Company's service, and is a respectable well-behaved man. He was with Koodrut Oolla Khan, on the part of Zubber Sing, at the time the affray happened.

In a country where there is no fixed system of Government, no courts of justice, civil or criminal, to which the injured can resort for relief, where there is no police to take cognizance of crimes, and where the most despotic authority is confided to persons of low rank, without education, moral instruction, talents, or any qualities to fit them for their situation, it is rather surprising that such affairs do not more frequently occur, than that they occur only occasionally. The fact is, that the respect and awe which the inhabitants have for the Company's troops is a considerable check on the commission of crimes, and the only one in this country. The declining state of all the districts round is such as might be expected expected under such circumstances ; the hopes of the people are fixed on the British Government relieving them ere long from their present misery.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch of the 17th instant to your address, I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of the Government, a copy and translation of a letter received from his Excellency the Vizier, in reply to my letter to his Excellency under date the 16th instant, on the question of the distribution of the pension assigned to Hoosein Alee Khan.

2. The purport of his Excellency's letter seems to me to be totally destitute of any solid argument on the question of the pretended right of the family of Akbur Alee Khan to a share of the provision assigned to the needy dependants of his father ; and the style of his Excellency's letter is, in my judgment, both offensive and indecorous, more particularly in its commencement, where his Excellency has been pleased to ascribe to me a disposition to contend with him idly, on a question on which it must be obvious to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council that my respectful suggestions to the Vizier have been wilfully and unnecessarily opposed, and my appeal to his justice and liberality has been treated with marked disregard. It is, however, my intention to refrain from making any reply to the letter, and to await the result of my reference for the final instructions of the Government regarding the distribution of the pension.

3. I solicit his Lordship in Council's particular attention to the concluding paragraph of his Excellency the Vizier's letter, in which his Excellency has declared his resolution to render nugatory the provision for Hoosein Alee Khan, by demanding repayment of the sums which were formerly granted, at my request, to protect this unfortunate person from absolute beggary or want. Among the sums which are referred to by his Excellency, I have every reason to believe that a loan to Hoosein Alee Khan by the late Almass Alee Khan of the sum of forty-eight thousand rupees, which was afterwards declared to be a gift, is intended to form a primary demand ; and if this demand be admitted, the amount of it, principal and interest, with the sums advanced by his Excellency, must engross the whole of the pension for a period of several years, to the the utter ruin of Hoosein Alee Khan, who must thus be precluded from profiting by the humane and generous exertions of the British Government in his behalf. I therefore submit for consideration, that the proof of the intended cancellation of Hoosein Alee Khan's bond by Almass, which the former is prepared to adduce, if the bond be still in existence, with such other arguments as the nature of the case may suggest, be pleaded to his Excellency the Vizier, in bar of his eventual claim against Hoosein Alee Khan for the money which was lent to him by Almass; and further, in the case of his Excellency's persisting in this most illiberal demand, that the gradual liquidation of the amount be arranged in such a manner with the Vizier, under the authority of his Lordship in Council, as to preclude the utter ruin of the debtor, by securing a provision for him in the mean time. A retrospective operation of the compromise which was recently effected with the Vizier might with perfect justice be demanded, for the purpose of extinguishing those claims which his Excellency has thought proper to prefer on this occasion, with a view to the ruin of Hoosein Alee Khan, for no other reason, in my opinion, than the countenance afforded to this person by the Honourable Company's Government.

4. It is a matter of the most serious public concern, that the unhappy disposition of a prince with whom the British Government is so closely allied as with his Excellency the Vizier, and who is obviously indebted to that Government for a condition of opulence, splendour, and security, unknown by any sovereign of Hindoostan since the decline of the Mohummudan empire, should thus prove the unavoidable source of endless and vexatious disputes on a variety of questions, both trivial and important in their nature, in which the British Government can have no other interest than a regard for his Excellency's honour and reputation, for the true interests of his Government, the happiness of his own mind, and the essential purposes of justice with a reference to the points in discussion.

5. With this letter from his Excellency the Vizier on the subject of Hoosein Alee Khan's pension, I received another letter of the same date from his Excellency, on the more important subject of reform. The latter, I am sorry to add, is like the former, a tissue of erroneous statements without any solid argument whatever. But I am occupied in translating and replying to this letter, and I shall have the honour of addressing you again on the subject of it in the course of a very few days.

from the Vizier.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 30th of December 1813.)

I have received your letter, dated the 22d of Zeehijj (16th December), in reply to mine of the 21st of that month, regarding the distribution of the provision of 2,000 rupees per mensem, assigned to the family of the late Hyder Beg Khan. It is idle for you to dispute on this subject. I wish to avoid dispute on any point if it be possible, and it is better that you excuse me on this occasion.

With regard to the monthly allowance, what you said was agreed to, and my conception of the sense of Lord Minto's letter was explained to you. You may give it any construction that you think proper; and with regard to your arguments to prove the want of title in the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan, the eldest son of Hyder Beg Khan, to a share of this provision, it is obvious that the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan must be included among the dependants of Hyder Beg, and that the right of all his dependants is established by the passage in Lord Minto's letter that has been quoted. I have no concern nor interference in the matter.

You have written that the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan are not in a condition of distress, as was proved by your former letter. In reply to that former letter, I told you that I knew nothing of the matter.

In

In answer to your observation, that if "a part of this pension were assigned to the wife and children of Akbur Alee Khan, for whose maintenance he is bound to provide, it would follow that his personal crime must prove the source of a provision for his family, or in other words for himself;" the truth of the matter is this: that I did not propose to associate Akbur Alee Khan in the pension, but merely his wife and children, who are not excluded from the list of Hyder Beg Khan's dependants, and are certainly innocent and blameless, as you yourself have acknowledged, and they were, in fact, proposed to be associated in the distribution of the pension by me, with no other motive whatever than a regard for the Governor-General's suggestion.

With a reference to your remark, that the wife and children of "Akbur Alee Khan can have no possible right, in the opinion of the Governor-General, to a share of this particular allowance," as the allowance in question was granted in compliance with your request, if those persons be not entitled to a share of it, in the opinion of your Government, you may do whatever you think proper.

I have already sent you four thousand rupees, the amount of the pension for two months, without taking any notice of the money which is due by Hoosein Alee Khan to the Sirkar, regarding which I shall say nothing for the present, but hereafter the proper steps shall be taken for the recovery of this amount from the Khan.

Sir:

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches, dated the 31st ultimo and 7th instant, in answer to my several letters and reports of the 23d November, 2d, 13th, and 22d ultimo, having reference to the property and will of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, to the distribution of the pension assigned by the Vizier to Hoosein Alee Khan, and to his Excellency's recent proceedings regarding the reform of his administration. The English copies of letters intended to be addressed to the Vizier by his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General on the subjects above noticed, have also been received, and are satisfactory in the highest degree.

2. The general principle which his Lordship in Council has been pleased to lay down for my guidance in future negotiations with the Vizier shall be adhered to with the strictest attention, and the particular instructions of the Government on the immediate subjects of your despatches, shall be carried into effect with success, if the utmost exertion of my zeal and ability can induce it, on my receipt of the Persian letters to the address of his Excellency the Vizier.

3. The concession of the original purposes of the Government regarding the property and will of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and the unconditional surrender of that property to his Excellency the Vizier, cannot fail to afford the highest gratification to his Excellency's mind, and will, I trust, have the salutary effect of producing his cheerful acquiescence in the object of the appeal to his generosity in behalf of the relations of the deceased, as well as of inducing his Excellency to listen to the more powerful arguments which are contained in the Governor-General's letter regarding the momentous question of reform, and the distribution of the pension of Hoosein Alee Khan.

4. It shall be my particular study to aid and maintain the impressions which his Lordship's letters to the Vizier are so well calculated to produce, and to refrain refrain from urging his Excellency on questions of inferior moment, or of a nature to irritate his mind. There are, indeed, comparatively but a few points of inferior moment depending between his Excellency and me, and the nature of them is generally such, that the accomplishment of our just views with regard to them would be comprehended under that of a reform in the system of his Excellency's administration, because the vices of the present system alone have given rise to those injuries and complaints of individuals entitled to our protection, as the subjects and servants of the Government, which have induced my intercession in their behalf.

5. Some questions, however, have arisen, and are likely hereafter to arise, in which the difference of sentiment between the British Government and the Vizier is ascribable rather to his Excellency's unhappy disposition, than to vices in the system of his administration. His unnatural conduct, for example, to his mother and sister-in-law, and his repeated encroachments on their rights; his jealousy and vindictive resentment, manifested to all such of his subjects and dependants as have merited and obtained our intercession in former times in their behalf; his general disinclination, founded on a perverseness not unfrequently observed, but particularly striking in the Vizier's character, towards the power which raised him from obscurity, to which the weight of his obligation is irksome, and on which his state of dependence is mortifying; all these are sources of disagreement between his Excellency and the Resident at his Court, which it seems impossible or very difficult to avoid, without a compromise, on the part of the latter, of some just and essential principle of the alliance between the two States; and with a reference to questions of this nature, the effect of repeated concession on such a mind as his Excellency the Vizier's would appear to deserve consideration.

6. I shall take an early opportunity of submitting to the notice of the Government a statement of all the subordinate questions which are now in discussion, or are likely to arise with the Vizier, and I shall observe the greatest possible caution in agitating any of those questions till I be honoured with a special communication of the sentiments of Government regarding them.

7. On one particular point connected with the orders of the Government for the surrender of the property of Tuhseen Alee Khan, I am desirous of obtaining instructions before I make over the estate to the Vizier. A sum of money exceeding 5,000 rupees has been already expended by the widow of Chutra Mull Seth, for the subsistence of cattle, the wages of servants, and other indispensable charges, with a view to the preservation of the property; and in the case of the Vizier's refusal to grant a suitable provision to the widow and grandchildren of Chutra Mull, it seems just and reasonable that his Excellency should bear all the charges of the estate from the day of the death of Tuhseen Alee Khan, or at all events that the residuary legatees should be relieved from the burthen of those charges.

The 4th March 1814.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. The enclosed are a copy and translation of his Excellency the Vizier's reply to my letter of the 4th instant on the important subject of reform; a copy of which was transmitted to you in my despatch of the 6th instant.

2. The tenor of the letter now transmitted does not appear to my judgment to require many remarks.

From

From its general scope it is obvious that the real intention of the Vizier, in deputing Ameens to Purtaubgurh, was a partial commencement of measures erroneously ascribed to my advice, with a view to the failure of those measures, to be afterwards used as a pretext for defeating the views of our Government in the reform of his Excellency's administration, on the ground that they were not to be accomplished, or that their accomplishment was incompatible with the exercise of his Excellency's independent authority.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
4 Mar. 1814.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

3. The observation in his Excellency's letter regarding the difficulty of selecting Ameens to be deputed to all the districts of his dominions, and his description of the universal introduction of the system of reform at one time as "a burden not to be borne," are sufficiently demonstrative of the design which I have thus been compelled to ascribe to him; for his Excellency must be perfectly aware, that the introduction of the system proposed into the whole of the ceded territory was accomplished with perfect ease immediately on its cession to the Company, and was attended with the most salutary effects; and his Excellency is further aware, that at the time of his selection of eight persons as Ameens to be employed in the district of Purtaubgurh, there were hundreds of more respectable persons in attendance at this place desirous of employment, if it could be had, on terms that were compatible with their condition.

4. The Vizier has thought proper to disavow his having promised to furnish me with copies of the proclamation to be issued to his subjects, for the purpose of circulation by me through the only satisfactory medium of the commanding officers of our troops; and he has been further pleased to assign as a reason for not imparting to me the terms of his proclamations and instructions, that they were the same with those of the drafts originally prepared with my concurrence. The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council will not suspect me of referring to a promise by his Excellency the Vizier which his Excellency had never conveyed to me; but the words of his repeated assurance on the point being still in my perfect recollection, are submitted on the present occasion, that his Lordship in Council may judge of the candour with which his Excellency has interpreted them. When I first recommended to his Excellency the circulation of his proclamations through our officers, he answered in these words, "Very well, what you advise shall be done:" and on every subsequent occasion his reply was to a similar effect, or that "the papers were in hand and should be sent to me."

5. His Excellency has, in one or two passages of this and his former letter, objected to the season of the year at which the commencement of the reform was proposed to him, forgetting, or seeming to forget, that the date of my written suggestions on the subject was the 10th of November last, and that I had urged the deputation of Ameens during the whole of the month preceding; that particular season of the year, in the opinion of every person conversant in revenue affairs, which is most favourable to the execution of the measures that his Excellency was advised to adopt; though in reality there be nothing in the character or tendency of those measures which could render them improper or inapplicable at any season of the year, if undertaken with a desire of their success.

6. His Excellency has been pleased in this letter to bring a charge of inconsistency against me, by comparing my recommendation of the employment of some of the best and most efficient of his present officers of revenue, under the new system, and in a new and more efficient character, with my remonstrance against the continuance of Koodrut Oolla Khan in Purtaubgurh, the scene of this person's established and acknowledged oppression. His Excellency has further attempted to obviate the manifest inconsistency of his own measures in Purtaubgurh with my respectful advice on the subject of them, by declaring, rather late in the discussion, his original intention to have removed Koodrut Oolla Khan from that district, and to have appointed a new collector in his room, when the Ameens should have commenced their proceedings. That nothing could be more consistent with my recommendation above quoted than the immediate and indispensable removal of so rapacious and oppressive an officer officer as the present Aumil of Purtaubghur is surely sufficiently apparent; and the true object of Koodrut Oolla Khan's continuance in that district, as stated to me on authority which I have every reason to believe, was no other than his impeding and opposing the progress of the measures of reform, and preventing by clandestine practices, under secret instructions from his Excellency, the admission of the Ameens into his district, or the attendance of the landholders on those Ameens.

7. The succeeding paragraphs of the Vizier's Letter are deserving of notice, as they develop that unhappy frame of mind in the Vizier which has ever led his Excellency to reject or to evade the counsels of our Government when they oppose his personal views, on the pretext of their impairing his authority; which he conceives that we are bound to support, without reference to the justice or expediency of his measures, or to be persuaded of the propriety of his measures by his own assertions alone. I have frequently had occasion to comment on the Vizier's misconstruction of that essential principle of the alliance subsisting between the two States, which prescribes his universal consultation with the officers of the British Government in the ordinary exercise of his authority, and his regulating his proceedings by their advice; and the exposition of this principle by Lord Wellesley in his negotiation with the Vizier at Lucknow, to which I have often solicited in vain the dispassionate attention of the Vizier, seems to afford the most satisfactory reply to his Excellency's observations on this occasion.

8. At a conference on the 15th instant with the Vizier, when I submitted to him the reports which had reached me subsequently to the transmission of my letter of the 11th of December last, as referred to in my despatch of the 6th instant, namely, that his Excellency's instructions and proclamations had never been given to the Ameens, and that the papers intended to be given to them were different from what I had suggested, his Excellency inadvertently admitted that they did differ in one most important respect, that of conveying a positive order for a general measurement of the lands, which he knew to be utterly impracticable in the time prescribed for its execution, as well as most injurious, if it were practicable: so that, by this inadvertent admission on the part of his Excellency at our conference, it became obvious that the real design of deputing Ameens to Purtaubgurb, was no other than an expedient to frustrate the objects of reform, and ascribe their failure to our Government: and his Excellency, aware of this inference, has endeavoured, towards the close of his letter, to remove it, by observing that he would have waved the order for actual measurement of the lands, if I had objected to it in my letter of the 11th, that is, before I could possibly have known that such was his Excellency's intention; since he had carefully avoided to furnish me with copies of his instructions to the Ameens, and my uniform remonstrance against measurement in the early stages of this discussion, more particularly in the memorial which I submitted to him on the 29th of August 1812, precluded my suspicion of such an order being contained in those instructions.

9. The Vizier's concluding remark regarding the pension assigned to Hoosein Ale Khan will not escape the observation of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council. At my conference with his Excellency above noticed, I laboured, by every respectful and conciliatory argument that I could use, to convince his Excellency's judgment of the extraordinary nature of his misconception of the meaning of Lord Minto's expressions on the subject of this provision. The result of my exertions is apparent, and I am sorry to have occasion to add, that my instances on a number of other subordinate questions, equally just in their nature, have been treated with similar disregard.

10. The Vizier has been manifestly led to believe, by the vague and unfounded reports of designing persons around him, that the sentiments of the present Government are favourable to his views of absolute independence, uncontrollable by the Resident's advice; and till this misconception be removed, I have no expectation of a change in those unhappy and pernicious counsels which have guided his recent proceedings.

from the Vizier.

I have received your letter, dated the 13th Mohurru (written the 4th of January), in answer to my two letters dated the 6th of Mohurru (30th ultimo), regarding the distribution of the pension assigned to the family of Hyder Beg Khan, and the deputation of Ameens.

You state that "copies and translations of both my letters have been submitted to the notice of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, whose deliberate and impartial consideration the arguments contained in them will receive," &c. As the due arrangement and prosperity of all the concerns of this Government depend on his Lordship's kindness and cordial friendship and support, I have full hope and confidence that his Lordship will peruse what I have written with the greatest attention and care, and will determine the question in such a manner as to promote the immediate and future advantage of this State, the maintenance and duration of my authority and power, and the reputation of the Honourable Company's Government; and you, also, in your representations to his Lordship on the subject, will have aided and assisted the observance of the relations of friendship and amity subsisting between the two States. You submit, with particular reference to our conversation regarding Ameens, that "the object of your inquiry on that occasion could never have been limited to the single district of Purtaubgurh but must have comprized every district in my dominions." The truth is this: that the nomination of Ameens to Purtaubgurh in the first instance, or as a beginning, is no proof whatever of my design to limit the deputation of Ameens to that district alone; for the appointment of persons properly qualified to all the districts at once, was a measure by no means free from difficulty, or rather was impossible: and as the observance of the rule to take the most important things first was intended, and no district required attention sooner than Purtaubgurh, where the disaffection and rebellion of the landholders, in consequence of the non-employment of British troops to suppress them, are obvious, and where it was originally stated that Ameens should on this account be sent; therefore, notwithstanding that the present was not the proper time, in compliance with your repeated desire, Ameens were deputed to that district; and it was also desirable that time should be had for perusing the papers, and other matters relating to the settlement, with care. If all these considerations induced the precedence of Purtaubgurh to other districts in the deputation of Ameens for its settlement, this measure could not be deemed irregular. Further, in your written suggestions which were sent to me on the 10th of November last, you advised that, "in cases where the continuance of former Aumils under the new system might be intended, the settlement of their districts on the new plan should be entrusted to those Aumils, in the character of collectors or Zillahdars." Now as I had all along intended to displace Koodrut Oolla Khan, Aumil of Purtaubgurh, I deputed Ameens to that district in the first instance. Had I wished to continue this Aumil, I should have sent the proclamations and instructions directly to him, as your suggestion authorized, instead of committing them to the Ameens.

With regard to your remark, that "the universal introduction of the new system at the same instant of time, by proclamations to be issued and circulated throughout my dominions, through the medium of my Aumils and the commanding officer of the British troops, is indispensable." The case is this: that the universal introduction of the system at one time is a burden not to be borne, and can produce no other good but disorder and confusion, which are always attendant on haste; more particularly at a time like the present, which is not the proper time for those measures, and at which the deputation of Ameens was occasioned by no other cause than your urgent remonstrances on the subject, which admitted of no delay. The circulation of the proclamations through the commanding officers of your troops was never promised by me; and with regard to your remark, that "you could never have contemplated the commencement of any measure of reform, or the deputation of a single Ameen, till you should be furnished with copies of the proclamation," &c. The case is this: that the drafts of the proclamations and instructions were originally prepared with your advice, and copies of them were kept by you at that time, consequently there could be no necessity for sending them to you again.

You submit, with reference to Zillahs and Zillahdars, that "the division and subdivision of my dominions into Zillahs and smaller districts was the first measure recommended during our discussions of two years ago, and consequently that no proposal of yours could be unconnected with the appointment of Zillahdars;" yet, in your written suggestions of the 10th of November, it is stated, that "such of the present Aumils and Tehsildars as are worthy of confidence should continue in the charge of their Zillahs, under the new system, as collectors, nominating their subordinate Tehsildars to collect the revenue papers, and transmit schemes of the settlement, as above explained, to the Zillahdars, who should submit them with their remarks to the Presence," &c. Consider this sentence with the preceding one quoted from your letter, and you will see that they are inconsistent with each other; for you recommended the continuance of such of the present Aumils as were worthy of confidence, not the appointment of new Zillahdars, and therefore as there are several Aumils who have given satisfaction to the landholders and peasantry, and kept their districts in a flourishing state, paying their revenue regularly, while there are others also equally deserving, though the state of their districts and their collection of the revenue be less satisfactory, owing to the disaffection and disobedience of the landholders whom they are unable to punish, it seemed consistent with your written suggestions to continue all those Aumils in their districts, and it was unnecessary to appoint new Zillahdars; whereas, in the districts of Purtaubgurh and others, to which Ameens were intended to be sent, the object of doing so was this: that whenever Koodrut Oolla Khan, who was long acquainted with the landholders and Seghadars, should place them in attendance on the Ameens, and the Ameens should commence their proceedings, Koodrut Oolla Khan should be removed from the district, and another Zillahdar should be appointed in his room. The appointment of Ameens at this time was most certainly in compliance with your verbal and written suggestions, and their suspension in consequence of your letter; and as such things are manifestly a cause of slight in the eyes of the people, my grief on the occasion cannot be said to be misplaced.

With a reference to your concluding remark, that "the result of our protracted discussions on the important question of reform, and the express and explicit tenor of my letter to Lord Minto, has fixed on me a solemn obligation," &c. The truth is this: that whatever is written in the said letter, and in whatever manner it was written, I have not the smallest idea of departing from, and for the reasons above set forth. It is no where established nor to be inferred from my proceedings, that a partial introduction of the reform into some districts was all that I had in my view. As the British Government, in consequence of their friendship for me and in the terms of established treaties, as well as from motives of justice, which is their peculiar attribute, are ever disposed to give advice for the better management of my affairs, the prosperity of my country, and the preservation of my power and authority, which are maintained by their assistance alone; under these circumstances, a measure which they have recommended with a view to the advantage of my Government, the prosperity of my country, and the preservation of my authority and power, how is it possible that in the progress of such a measure, any departure or transgression should take place?

You have written, that "the execution of this measure, which is indispensable, may be attempted in either of two ways," &c. to which I reply, that communication, concurrence, and advice in the general concerns of the Government, in the manner established by treaty as well as by uniform practice, since my accession to the musnud, with former Residents at my Court, have never been departed from with you, and shall not be departed from in future; and the British Government, too, from a consideration of the decrease of my authority and power, which are maintained by their assistance alone, will never admit of a departure from that practice, as I have repeatedly written and told you in the most express terms that it can never be agreeable to my mind, and that I will not on any principle consent to it.

With

With a reference to your remark at our conference of the 22d of Mohurram (15th instant), that "the cause of your remonstrance against the deputation of Ameen was your conviction of the injury that must arise from my order for the measurement of the lands." The case is this: that I would not have refused to acquiesce in this particular if it had been mentioned in your letter of the 11th of December, which was the cause of my suspension of the Ameen; but in that letter no such cause is assigned, and the grounds of your recommendation are very different.

Letter
from the Vizier.

You have stated in the beginning of your letter to which this is a reply, that "you might with propriety have refrained from answering either of my letters till the judgment of the Government should be known, and that on one subject, namely, the case of Hoosein Alee Khan, from motives of respect you would be silent." Yet, notwithstanding this remark, you spoke to me on that subject at our last conference, and therefore I write to you again, that in my letter to the Governor-General of the 12th of October last, I mentioned particularly that I had granted at your suggestion a pension of 2,000 rupees per mensem for all the dependants of Hyder Beg, and that I will never consent to any departure from that arrangement; consequently, the children and wife of Akbur Alee Khan cannot be excluded from the provision assigned. As you have sent copies and translations of my former letters to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, it is necessary that this letter should also be submitted to his Lordship.

Sir:

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. The original Persian letters from his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General to the address of his Excellency the Vizier, which are noticed in your despatches of the 31st December and 7th January last, were received from the Persian department on the 11th instant, and I had the honour of presenting them to the Vizier on Tuesday the 15th instant, when I requested a conference with that view.

2. The remarks with which I prefaced the delivery of his Lordship's letters to the Vizier were conciliatory and friendly in the extreme. I observed to his Excellency that it had become my duty, during a residence of nearly seven years at his Court, to present a number of letters to him from the head of the British Government in India on various subjects of equal and inferior importance to those which I held in my hand; but that the circumstances attending the preparation and delivery of those letters, the spirit in which they were conceived, and the questions to which they had reference, gave a peculiar interest, in my mind, to the occasion of this conference with his Excellency, which I had never experienced before, and which I was satisfied that his Excellency would ascribe to it on perusing the letters before him.

3. At the close of Lord Minto's administration, it was a source of the most cordial satisfaction to the members of the Government and to me, that the several questions depending between the British Government and his Excellency had been brought to a happy adjustment, and that no difference of opinion remained to be obviated or reconciled. A question had subsequently arisen, of which the view that was taken by our Government, and its instructions on the subject to me, though framed with the most cordial desire to promote his Excellency's reputation, had proved unsatisfactory to his mind, and the consequence, not unnatural nor uncommon, of a difference of opinion on this point, had been that of the revival of discussions which appeared to have previously terminated in a friendly and satisfactory manner. The question to which I alluded, namely, that of the application of the personal property of Tuhseen Alee Khan, with the discussion to which it had given rise, and also the other discussions the renewal of which it had occasioned, had been reported by me me to the Government, and had received its consideration at a time when the sentiments and feelings towards his Excellency of a new Governor-General of India must necessarily have influenced the decision in a very considerable degree, and when the collective decision of the Government, as tending of necessity to develop the sentiments and feelings of the personage who was now at the head of the administration, with a reference to the state of Oude and to his Excellency's person and Government, could not fail to excite a peculiar interest in his Excellency, and to make a lasting impression on his mind.

4. Under such circumstances as these, I observed, it must be satisfactory and gratifying in the extreme to his Excellency as well as to me, to perceive in the letters which I presented to him a sentiment of cordial friendship, a feeling of personal regard, a disposition to soothe and conciliate, to concede when concession might be practicable, and to abstain from unnecessary interference in the concerns of his Excellency's Government, as well as from controversial discussions, to the utmost possible extent, combined with a resolution to give advice on occasions which might require interference, with a view to the mutual benefit of both States, or to his Excellency's honour and advantage, and to urge that advice on such occasions (since to refrain were a dereliction of duty) in terms of dignified firmness, but in the spirit of cordial friendship, and with expressions of the sincerest regard.

5. Of all those benevolent intentions on the part of the present administration of the British Government in India, the two letters from Lord Moira, which I was now to present to his Excellency, were demonstrative in an equal degree, in reality, though the concessionary terms of the one, and the firmer tone of the other, might appear at first sight to his Excellency to authorize a different construction. The first I proceeded to read to him; and after doing so, I took a retrospective view of the character and services of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and of the circumstances which brought that person originally to the notice of the British Government and its representative at the Court of Lucknow.

6. Tuhseen Alee Khan, I observed, was the favoured and confidential servant of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, a necessary and perhaps an involuntary instrument of the gratification of many of his master's propensities, the depository of most of his secrets as well as of much of his personal wealth, more particularly of his wardrobe and jewels. In the exercise of those trusts he had proved himself a most zealous and faithful servant, and worthy of the confidence reposed in him. On the accession of Vizier Alee Khan to the musnud, through an honest though erroneous conviction on the part of the British Government of the justice of his title to that station, Tuhseen was precluded from affording the particular information which he possessed regarding the spurious birth of Vizier Alee Khan, by considerations of the most imperious nature which he was totally unable to control; but his attachment to the Government of Oude, and a sense of his duty to the State, as the confidential servant of its former ruler and depository of much of his wealth, induced him to act in such a manner as to incur the implacable resentment of Vizier Alee Khan, to the imminent danger of his own life, (which was preserved by the intervention of our Government,) and subsequently, on a proper occasion, to afford that information to the Government, which by demonstrating the defective title of Vizier Alee conduced to the happy establishment of his Excellency in the sovereignty of his hereditary dominions, through the influence of the British justice and power. By such conduct as this, I observed, Tuhseen Alee Khan had originally obtained the notice and favour of our Government, and had established a manifest claim to the gratitude and kindness of the Vizier; and both had been constantly merited, in a degree which no other servant could boast, by a series of faithful and zealous attachment and services, which had ended only with his life. The liberality of his disposition had prevented him from amassing any personal wealth, and the integrity of his conduct while in office had precluded his relations or subordinate officers and servants from profiting by the situation which he held, to secure their future independence, so that his household-furniture and his wardrobe, with a few houses which he had purchased or built, formed the only only property that he possessed, or considered as at his personal disposal; and this he had bequeathed by a will, not strictly conformable, it was admitted, with the dictates of the Mohummudan law, nor with the practice of Mussulman countries, but justified, in the opinion of the testator and in that of the British Government, by the peculiar circumstances of his case, and entitled in an extraordinary degree to the indulgent consideration of his sovereign. The British Government or its representative at Lucknow had no knowledge of the terms of Tuhseen Alee Khan's will till the near approach of the death of the testator. We could have no interest whatever in the accomplishment of the purposes of the will, save a feeling of regard for the character and memory of the deceased, and of humanity for his needy dependants, which must be felt in common with us by his Excellency; and the gratification of those just and natural feelings, on both parts, appeared to be so easily consulted by our Government's acceptance of the trust which Tuhseen Alee Khan had reposed in it, and by his Excellency's recognition of the will, that no objection occurred to a decision of the question on this basis, and to the instructions which had been issued to me and communicated to his Excellency for that purpose. His Excellency would be disposed to admit, on a calm and dispassionate reflection, that there was nothing contained in those instructions, which the peculiar circumstances of the case, and the intimate nature of the connection subsisting between the two States, would not have justified in the opinion of the world and of the subjects of his Excellency's Government; and more particularly with regard to myself, that I must have been justified, and my conduct have been approved by the government whose instructions I had received, in proceeding to execute its commands without any hesitation or delay, and in applying the property of Tuhseen Alee Khan to the purposes for which he had bequeathed it. The opposite conduct which I pursued with a view to his Excellency's satisfaction, and the result of the reference which I had made, as demonstrative of the wish of the Government to gratify his Excellency's mind, to yield even to his prejudices and prepossessions in every practicable case, would, I doubted not, be viewed by his Excellency in the only suitable light, and would produce corresponding sentiments in his mind, not only with a reference to the question which was the immediate subject of this letter, but to every other point in discussion between the British Government and himself.

7. The Vizier interrupted me here, to express the sense which he felt of my friendly and considerate conduct with regard to the property of Tuhseen Alee Khan, the acquisition of which he ascribed to my acquiescence in his original desire to suspend the sale of the property, and my ultimate intercession with the Government, which gave rise to the present arrangement. "Had you sold the property," said his Excellency, "as you were instructed and empowered to do, this arrangement could not have taken place, and my views must of necessity have been defeated: you are entitled to my thanks for your consideration." I replied, that a similar result might always be expected by his Excellency when he reposed his confidence in me; that the gratification of his Excellency's mind was ever my leading desire, and that my best advice and exertions should always be directed to this end, when the accomplishment of his Excellency's wishes should seem consistent, as on the present occasion, with the purposes of essential justice, and conducive to his honour and happiness.

8. We now reverted to the consideration of the extent of the provisions to be assigned to the relations and servants of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and I submitted to his Excellency's liberality, that the amount which was fixed by the deceased, and recommended in fact by the Governor-General, though his Lordship, from motives of delicacy, had delegated the expression of his wishes to me, should not be diminished by this arrangement; and with a reference to the grandchildren of Chutra Mull, that his Excellency would be pleased to consider both his own name and the name of Lord Moira, as well as the services of Tuhseen, in assigning a provision for those orphans. His Excellency desired me to state to him what I wished to propose for the children; observing, however, that it was notorious that they needed not any provision, and that his only inducement to give them any thing was a desire to gratify me. I proposed that the aggregate amount of the provisions assigned in the will, namely, 575 rupees per mensem, should be extended to 1,000 rupees, giving 425 rupees per mensem to the family of Chutra Mull Seth; and on his Excellency's objecting to this, I restricted my proposal in their behalf to an allowance of 300 rupees, which his Excellency, though he did not promise to grant, seemed disposed, as I thought, to consent to, and the final adjustment of the question was suspended till a future occasion.

9. I now presented to the Vizier, and read to him from a copy in my hand, after some appropriate introductory remarks, the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter under date the 7th of January, having a reference to the question of reform. His Excellency, after hearing with attention the whole of the contents of that letter, inquired if his letter to my address of the 20th January last had been submitted to the notice of the Government before his Lordship's letter was written. I answered, that it certainly had not; but that a translation of his Excellency's letter, which I had lost no time in forwarding to the Presidency, must have been received before this was dispatched; and if the contents of his Excellency's letter had suggested the necessity of alteration in the tenor of the Governor-General's letter, or had occasioned any change in the sentiments of his Lordship in Council on the subject of it, that alteration would certainly have been made. Any change in the sentiments of the Government would unquestionably have been signified to me. I added, that this was a subject on which his Excellency would, of course, be disposed to meditate and deliberate by himself, before he made any communication to me, and that I would no longer intrude on his time. He replied, that he would peruse the letter with attention, and appoint an early day to converse with me further on the subject. On taking leave, he again expressed the joy and satisfaction which he felt, and which was manifest, as I thought, in his countenance, at the decision by Government in his favour of the question regarding Tuhseen Alee Khan's property, and the unconditional surrender of that property, which I declared my readiness to make over to him whenever he should be pleased to desire it, relying on his own liberality for a favourable result to the appeal which I had offered in behalf of the relations of the deceased.

10. On Wednesday the 16th instant, the day following our conference, I received a message from his Excellency the Vizier to this effect; that he was disposed to follow my advice implicitly on all the questions depending; that he considered me as his best friend, and was persuaded of the justice and truth of every remark that I had made to him at our conference on the foregoing day; that he was preparing a letter to the address of the Governor-General on the subject of the provisions to be assigned to Tuhseen's relations and servants, which he wished to get rid of, in the first instance, in such a manner as to satisfy me, and with this view he requested me to send to him, in writing, my proposal in behalf of the family of Chutra Mull Seth. I returned an appropriate answer to his Excellency's message above quoted, and sent a written statement on the subject of it to the following effect. "My first proposal to " your Excellency, in behalf of the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth, was " that an allowance of 425 rupees per mensem should be assigned to them,
" making the whole of your Excellency's bounty to the relations and servants
" of the deceased the sum of 1,000 rupees per mensem, which I was satisfied " that our Government would think liberal: but observing your Excellency's " reluctance to this grant, and most anxious, on every occasion, to consult your
" Excellency's pleasure in preference to every object of my own, I immediately " restricted my proposal to the aggregate sum of 875 rupees per mensem, " giving a monthly allowance of only 300 rupees to the family of Chutra
" Mull Seth, and I pledged myself to satisfy the Government that this provi" sion would be sufficient for their support."

11. The Vizier took the statement from my Moonshee, and promised a satisfactory reply to it. On the evening of the following day he transmitted to me by a confidential servant a letter to the address of my Lord Moira, communicative of his his final resolution in favour of the servants and relations of Tuhseen Alee Khan, which announces the confirmation of all the deceased's bequests in favour of the former, on the condition of their attendance on his Excellency, and a grant of 200 rupees per mensem to the latter, in compliance, as his Excellency has been pleased to observe, with the desire of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and with my concurrence and advice. The letter to his Lordship's address has been transmitted to the Persian department.

12. With this letter to the address of my Lord Moira, the Vizier sent me a letter, a translation of which is enclosed; and I have thought it my duty to reply to that letter in the terms of the accompanying document, which I have used the precaution of submitting to his Excellency as a draft, without official signature or form, to ascertain that it meets with his approbation, or to enable me to gratify his wish regarding the terms of it, if the alteration which he proposes be practicable consistently with candour or truth.

13. I am sorry to have occasion to add, with a reference to the concluding paragraph of your despatch of the 31st of December last, that the Vizier has expressly refused his consent to the smallest increase of the allowance of the members of the khoord muhl of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and that a number of those unfortunate women continue to be clamorous in the extreme. Understanding by a message from his Excellency that they meditated a predatory attempt against some houses containing valuable property in the neighbourhood of the place where they reside, I have complied with his Excellency's requisition of a guard of the Company's sepoy to protect his property from their hands: but I see no immediate prospect of their desisting from their clamorous proceedings, unless their demand of an additional allowance be complied with.

14. The Vizier has not hitherto made any communication to me on the important subject of reform, or on the question of the pension of Hoosein Alee Khan; but I am disposed to augur the most salutary effects and impressions on his Excellency's mind from the tenor of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter to him on these subjects, and from the friendly and conciliatory observations, on my own part, with which the delivery of that letter was accompanied, in obedience to his Lordship's commands.

15. I take this opportunity of reporting, for his Lordship in Council's information, that another vexatious discussion between his Excellency the Vizier and myself, regarding the terms of the receipt to be granted by her Highness the younger Begum for the amount of her monthly stipend in lieu of her jagier and provisions, has been brought to a satisfactory conclusion, by his Excellency's ultimate acquiescence in a proposal submitted to him by me, and to which he announced his consent in a very gracious manner by a letter of yesterday's date.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 19th February 1814.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's gracious letter on the subject of the provisions assigned to the relations and servants of Tuhseen Alee Khan, accompanied by a letter from your Excellency to the address of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, which I shall forward to his Lordship without delay : and if your Excellency will be pleased to appoint some person to take charge of the property of the deceased, and direct the attendance of that person on me, I shall immediately instruct Lieutenant Fortune, the commanding officer of my escort, and Sheikh Shubbun, the confidential servant of the deceased, to accompany your Excellency's servant to his dwelling-house, to deliver over the whole of the property, and to remove the Honourable Company's sepoy's who are placed as a guard at the house.

As your Excellency has been pleased to express, in your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, that the provision for the family of Chutra Mull Seth had been fixed in concurrence with my advice, and as the statement which I submitted to your Excellency contained the sum of 425 rupees as the maximum, and 300 rupees as the minimum of a provision for those indigent orphans, it has occurred to me as a possible circumstance, that the sum of 200 rupees in your Excellency's letter to Lord Moira may have been inserted by a mistake of the transcriber. But should it be otherwise, as the satisfaction of your Excellency's mind is the constant object of my desire, and predominant over every other consideration, I am ready to take upon myself the responsibility for the smallness of this provision, and to acquiesce in its ascription to my advice. There are, however, two or three other subordinate matters, having reference to the will of the deceased, which your Excellency has omitted to notice in your letter to his Excellency Lord Moira, and which I am persuaded that your Excellency will pardon my recommending to your favourable consideration, should they not have been present to your mind while preparing your letter to the Governor-General, more especially as in fact they were agreed to in the earlier stages of this discussion, namely, first, the construction of a monument over the grave of your Excellency's faithful servant, Tuhseen Alee Khan ; and, secondly, the propriety of the grant of two of the provisions particularly specified in his will, those of Sheikh Shubbun and Moonshee Aftaub Raee.

Your Excellency is doubtless aware, that the maintenance of the elephants, horses, and other cattle, belonging to the estate of the deceased, and the wages of several servants, have been defrayed by the widow of Chutra Mull Seth, under my particular orders, since the demise of Tuhseen Alee Khan ; and the amount of these several charges, which is stated at 6,000 rupees, is a burden on this unfortunate person, from which the generosity of your Excellency's mind may perhaps dispose you to release her, as the whole of the property is your own. This point I submit to your Excellency without any further remark, because I have stated it already to our Government, and await the communication of its commands.

The date of the commencement of the pensions does not appear to be specified in your Excellency's letter to Lord Moira, nor in your gracious letter to me ; and therefore I beg to be informed of your Excellency's intentions on this point, that I may report it to the Right Honourable the Governor-General.

from the Vizier.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's obliging letter of the 31st of December, stating that Major Baillie had communicated to you the result of his application to me on the subject of the will of the late Mohummud Tuhseen Alee Khan; and that, as Major Baillie's representations have failed to produce conviction in my mind, and the maintenance of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan's family and dependants may be equally provided for in a manner which cannot possibly appear to me to involve the objection which I opposed to the recognition of his will, the original proposition will, in deference to me, be withdrawn; intimating, at the same time, your Excellency's conviction that I shall feel it becoming my dignity, my justice, and my character for generosity, to settle on the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth a provision adequate to their maintenance and that of the servants of the deceased mentioned by name in his will.

I at all times, and in every situation, hope to experience your Excellency's kindness and regard, and I am perfectly satisfied that through the influence of your Lordship's kindness, all my affairs will prosper and flourish. I desire to offer to your Excellency my grateful acknowledgments for what your Excellency, in the benignity of your disposition, has been pleased to determine in the present case, with a view to combine the promotion of my reputation and your own satisfaction, with the maintenance of my independent authority.

In compliance with your Excellency's recommendation, and with a view to promote your satisfaction, I have assigned a provision for the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth, and monthly allowances for the several dependants and servants of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, regulated by the advice of Major Baillie. They will accordingly remain near my person under circumstances of ease and comfort, in the enjoyment of their allowances, and I shall take due care of them.

The particulars of the allowances granted for their support will be made known to your Lordship by the enclosed statement, and by the communications of Major Baillie.

Sir :

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch of the 19th instant, I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for the notice of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, the enclosed copy and translation of a paper of remarks, which I have received from his Excellency the Vizier, on the draft of a letter which I submitted to him regarding the provision assigned to the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth, and some other purposes of the will of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan.

2. On receiving this paper from the Vizier, as I considered it in the light of an answer to the draft of my letter above noticed, I requested his Excellency to inform me whether or not he wished me to consider it in that light, and to submit it to the notice of the Government, or to give official form in the first instance to the draft which I had submitted to him, and to await his official answer.

3. The Vizier replied to my message, that this note was intended for my own information alone, as explanatory of his Letter to Lord Moira, and that he did not wish either my draft of a letter to himself or his remarks on the subject of it to be entered on the official records; but that I might impart the substance of it to the Government, if I thought proper. His Excellency's wish, as he added, and repeated with seeming earnestness to my Moonshee, was to avoid all further discussion on this subject in particular, and to preclude the possibility of a difference of opinion between us on any subject whatever: that we had differed unfortunately on many subjects already, but he hoped that all difference was at an end, and he was resolved to follow my advice implicitly on every future occasion, whether of great or inferior importance.

4. From the tenor of his Excellency's written communication enclosed, it is obvious that his Excellency has resolved to limit the extent of his bounty to the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth to the sum of 200 rupees per mensem, and to consider the pensions assigned to the Vakeel and the Moonshee of Tuhseen Alee Khan as no more than life grants, or as resumable perhaps at his pleasure. Yet, under the instructions of the Government to me, I have not considered myself as at liberty to urge those questions any further, nor to delay the surrender to the Vizier of the property of Tuhseen Alee Khan, which has accordingly been made over to his Excellency.

5. It is satisfactory that his Excellency adheres to his promise of constructing a monument over the grave of his faithful servant, and also that he has agreed to to repay the charges of subsisting the cattle, &c. from the day of Tuhseen Alee Khan's demise.

from the Vizier.

With a reference to the draft of a letter which you sent to me for perusal on the 26th of Suffer (19th instant), in order to ascertain my sentiments on the points which are stated in it, and to have the alterations suggested which I might wish, the state of the matter is this: that I formerly refused to give any allowance whatever to the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth, and that my present consent to give any thing has been occasioned exclusively by the letter of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, my Lord Moira, and by your verbal representations.

The construction of a monument over the grave of the deceased shall certainly take place, as it was promised, but I never made any promise of the perpetuity of the grant to those persons; and the expenses of feeding the cattle from the day of the death of Tuhseen, shall also be refunded by my Government. The date of the commencement of the pensions, and the date of my letter to the Governor-General, are one and the same.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 22d January last, enclosing a copy and translation of his Excellency the Vizier's reply to your letter to his Excellency on the important subject of the reform.

2. His Excellency the Governor-General in Council forbears to make any remarks on the subject of the Vizier's answer to your letter, until his Excellency's determination on the questions to which it relates shall be made known in the reply which his Lordship in Council awaits to his letters addressed to the Vizier, both on the subject of reform and of the distribution of the pension to the family of Hyder Beg Khan.

3. With respect to the latter question, I am directed to take this opportunity of acknowledging the receipt of your two despatches on that subject, under dates the 31st December and 28th January last, and of stating to you that, for the reasons above stated, it is not considered necessary to make any particular observations on the conduct of his Excellency with regard to Hoossein Alee Khan, as reported in the former of those despatches, until the effect of his Lordship's letter, above adverted to, shall appear by the tenor of his Excellency's reply.

4. I am further directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 19th ultimo, reporting the delivery of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier, above adverted to, and the substance of your communication to his Excellency on that occasion, and to signify to you his Lordship in Council's approbation of the tenor of the observations which you made to his Excellency, and generally of the manner in which you have executed the instructions of Government to which your despatch refers. With respect to the grant of 200 rupees assigned by his Excellency for the support of the relations of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, although it would have been more satisfactory if his Excellency had assigned the larger sum proposed by you; yet, as his Lordship in Council does not consider this point to be one on which the Vizier should be urged further, he approves the tenor of your letter to the Vizier signifying your acquiescence in that arrangement.

5. It is satisfactory to his Lordship in Council to learn that the question respecting the terms of the receipt to be granted by the younger Begum, alluded to in the 15th paragraph of your despatch of the 19th ultimo, above acknowledged, has been settled by his Excellency the Vizier's acquiescence in your proposal on that subject.

6. It is also satisfactory to his Lordship in Council to observe by your letter of the 22d ultimo, the receipt of which I am now directed to acknowledge, that the Vizier has consented to construct a monument over the grave of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and has agreed to repay the expenses of subsisting the cattle, &c. alluded to in your despatch of the 19th of the same month.

7. Your letter of the 15th January, on the subject of the instructions of Government of the 31st of December respecting Bustee Ram, the news-writer, has also been received and laid before the Governor-General in Council, and I am directed to signify to you the satisfaction with which his Lordship in Council has learnt his Excellency's determination to recall the news-writer in question from Elahabad.

EXTRACT BENGAL POLITICAL CONSULTATIONS,

The 25th March 1814.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. On the evening of the 6th instant I had the honour of receiving from his Excellency the Vizier a letter to my own address, giving cover to his Excellency's reply to the letter from Lord Moira to His Excellency, under date the 7th of January, on the important subject of reform, and regarding the distribution of the pension assigned to Hoosein Alee Khan and his family.

2. A copy and translation of the Vizier's letter to me are transmitted by this despatch, and with a view to facilitate and expedite the deliberation and decision of the Government on the matter and manner of that letter, and of his Excellency's letter to Lord Moira, a translation of the latter document has also been hastily prepared, and is submitted for his Lordship in Council's perusal.

3. I am concerned to have occasion to state, that I cannot see cause to give credit, so ample and implicit as I could wish, to those professions of a cordial desire to concur and co-operate with our Government, which are contained in this letter from the Vizier to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General. I recognize in that document, with regret, a considerable degree of the same unhappy disposition to evade, which has uniformly marked his Excellency's conduct with a reference to the question of reform, since the first agitation of that question, excepting, indeed, for the short period of a month after the date of his last letter to Lord Minto, during which an opposite spirit was indicated, whether genuine or pretended I know not.

4. It seems unnecessary to comment in detail on the tenor of his Excellency's letter to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General. I have submitted my sentiments to the Government on a number of such letters as this during my residence at the Court of the Vizier, and my several despatches to the Government, containing those sentiments and remarks, having received the approbation of the Government, my opinion of his Excellency's proceedings and designs, with a reference to the reform of his administration, may be said to have been adopted as its own.

5. There are two questions arising out of the tenor of the documents enclosed, on which the early decision of the Government appears to be required for my guidance, namely, first, the expediency of acquiescing in the manner of conducting the reform, which is stated in his Excellency's letter to my address address and referred to in his letter to Lord Moira, and which is manifestly intended to preclude any useful interference on my part; for his Lordship in Council will observe, that while his Excellency expresses his acquiescence in one of the suggestions which were conveyed to him by my letter of the 11th of December, he is totally silent on the subject of the concluding paragraph of that letter, and has not even expressed a design to communicate to me the contents of his proclamation and instructions to Ameens, far less to furnish copies of the proclamation for the purpose of being circulated by me through the medium of the commanding-officers of our troops. As a part of this question, it is to be considered whether or not our acquiescence in his Excellency's plan should be accompanied by a solemn declaration that the Government cannot be responsible for the failure of his Excellency's measures adopted without its knowledge or advice, and that his Excellency's eventual reproaches or complaints on this point will be entitled to no consideration. A declaration to this purpose, on the part of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, might perhaps have the salutary effect of inducing His Excellency the Vizier to seek the concurrence of the Resident in the most important details of the reform, to ensure the success of his measures.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
25 Mar. 1814.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

6. The second question relates to the employment of British troops in support of the measures of the Vizier, having for their professed object a reform in the administration of his revenue, without reference to the justice and expediency, or to the real object of those measures. The question may thus be stated: is the declaration of the British Government to the Vizier, prescribed by my instructions of the 2d of August 1811, and conveyed by me to his Excellency in my letter of the 15th of January 1812, forming a number of my despatch of the 27th of February in that year, to be considered as abrogated by the Vizier's consent to the reform, declared in the manner in which he has declared it? and are his Excellency's requisitions in future for the aid of the British troops to be complied with, unaccompanied by the assertion of a right to investigate and arbitrate the demands which our power may be required to enforce?

7. With a view to facilitate a decision on the merits of the questions which I have stated, I take the liberty of referring the Government to my despatches of the 27th of February and 12th of May 1812, and to the answers to those despatches under dates the 20th of March and 25th of June in that year.

8. I have deemed it to be my duty to refrain from offering any remonstrance to the Vizier on the tenor of his letter to Lord Moira, partly from an idea combined with a feeble expectation that the view which I have taken of it in this despatch may hereafter appear to be erroneous, and partly from a fear of interrupting the harmony which at present subsists between his Excellency the Vizier and myself, and which has been manifested on the part of his Excellency by his voluntary and unexpected concession of a few subordinate points, on which I had ceased to urge him since my receipt of your official despatch of the 31st of December last and your private letters connected with it. A continuance of the same disposition on the part of his Excellency the Vizier, which it shall be my study to cultivate and improve by every effort of conciliation on my own part, may lead his Excellency to distinguish me by a greater share of his confidence, with a reference to the measures of reform, than his letter would seem to prognosticate.

9. It will be satisfactory to his Lordship in Council to observe that the Vizier has been pleased to acquiesce in the distribution of the pension of Hoosein Alea Khan, which I proposed to his Excellency, and which the Government did me the honour to approve.

From His Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 6th March 1814.)

I transmit my reply to the friendly letter of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, my Lord Moira, for your perusal, and for the purpose of being despatched. On a perusal of it you will understand the contents. Regarding the introduction of the plan of reform, refusal and delay were not my objects formerly, nor are they now. As you proposed, in your letter of the 17th Zeehijj (11th December), that each of the districts to be committed to the charge of Ameens should be extended to a territory yielding two lacs, or two lacs and a half of rupees with the view of increasing their salaries, and that, at all events, the superintendence and control of the proceedings of every ten or twelve of those Ameens should be vested in an officer of high rank and of great respectability and integrity, with an adequate salary, as a Zillahdar, I shall accordingly search for and select suitable persons for the office of Ameens, and persons of distinction to be Zillahdars, in the districts and divisions of which the present Aumils should be removed; and having done so, I shall instruct these new officers, and also such of the present Aumils as are to be continued in office, to publish the proclamations and prepare the revenue papers as you desired.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Vizier to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General. (Dated the 12th Rubbee-ool-Avvul 1229, 6th March 1814.)

Your Lordship's friendly letter dated the 7th of January (corresponding with the 14th of Mohurram), replete with expressions of kindness, desiring me to issue the provision for Hoosein Ale Khan and his family, without making any allotment out of it for the family of Akbur Ale Khan, and recommending the plan of reform in the settlement of my country, has arrived at an auspicious time, and as conveying the assurances of your Lordship's favour and kindness with expressions of cordial friendship, has rendered me joyful and happy. My friend, the provision which was fixed for the subsistence of Hoosein Ale Khan, in regard to the distribution of that provision, I wrote to the Resident, Major Baillie, what appeared to me to be the sense of the passage of Lord Minto's letter; but as I wish to consult your Lordship's pleasure in all things, I have now issued the provision as you desired, because I prefer the satisfaction of your Lordship's mind to every other consideration. Let Hoosein Ale Khan attend upon me: he shall be treated with every degree of favour, and shall receive the provision assigned to him.

It has been written, that "my answer to Lord Minto's letter, dated 2d July 1813, expressed a distinct acquiescence in the plan of reform, and conveyed "an assurance that it should be immediately undertaken; but that Major "Baillie has informed the Government that I appear to have abandoned that "salutary intention, and that I have shewn a marked disinclination to listen to his "suggestions referring to that momentous concern." My friend, your sincere well-wisher has shewn no disinclination whatever to adopt the plan of reform; but, on the contrary, although the season was unfavourable to such measures, with a view to the performance of my promise, I deputed Ameens to two districts, which of all my dominions required a settlement the most, and was preparing to issue my orders with regard to all the other districts in my country, when a discussion regarding certain matters which were subversive of my power and authority occasioned a delay, as will have appeared to your Lordship on a perusal of my letter to Major Baillie, dated the 27th of Mohurram (20th January), which was sent to that gentleman with a desire of its being forwarded to your Lordship before my receipt of your friendly letter to myself.

To your Lordship's enlightened mind it cannot be concealed, that the settlement of my country may certainly be accomplished by degrees, and is practicable in process of time; but that the immediate execution of such a work could never have been stated by me, and was very remote from my intention.

What has been written with the pen of kindness, that "it is your Lordship's "anxious desire, and equally the solicitude of those with whom you are associated, "that

"that every testimony of attention, and every procedure which can uphold my dignity, should be manifested by the British Government." My friend, your well-wisher entertains exactly this hope and expectation from the British Government, that the testimonies of attention and consideration for his dignity should daily increase; that the prosperity and splendour of his Government, the permanency of his power and authority, which depend on the favour of the British Government alone, should be constantly augmented and confirmed, more particularly under the administration of your Lordship, whose reputation for every laudable quality, for kindness and benevolence of heart, as well as for magnanimity and extraordinary consideration for princes, is celebrated all over the world, and whose auspicious arrival in these climes I have hailed with peculiar joy, as the source of advancement, prosperity, and splendour to all the concerns of my Government. I am certain that during your Lordship's administration, not one of the affairs of my Government can be subjected to loss or decline.

Letter
from the Vizier.

What has been written in the spirit of friendship, that "there will not be wanting men in my durbar whose advantages would suffer from such a reform, and it is natural that they should attempt to disincline me to the measure and to the British Government for urging it:" the truth is this; that your Lordship's sincere well-wisher acquired the Government of his hereditary dominions through the aid of the British justice alone, and therefore is so cordially disposed to maintain on every occasion the relations of amity and friendship with the British Government, as to preclude his receiving or admitting the interference of any person's advice between himself and that Government, in the cultivation of whose friendship and good-will he is constantly absorbed; so that were any person to engage in an attempt so wicked and abominable as that of disinclining your well-wisher to the British Government, your well-wisher would consider him as his enemy. By no means, and again by no means. By the mighty Creator I swear, that such an idea has never entered into my mind: and from your Lordship's friendship I hope that if any person should ascribe such a thought or report a suspicion so groundless to your Lordship with relation to me, you will blot it at once from your heart, the abode of purity and candour.

Your Lordship has written, that "you entreat me to co-operate, in perfect confidence with you, to maintain the united interests of the two Governments firm and unshaken, and that it shall be your study to forbear, as far as duty will permit, any interference in minor concerns which may be unpleasant to me." My generous friend, your sincere well-wisher, of old, and since his accession to his hereditary power, has ever most earnestly desired a co-operation with the British Government, as the source of the stability of his own country and dominion; and now that this auspicious word has so happily flown from the pen of an exalted chief like your Lordship, adorned with every virtue and grace, and has been applied through excessive kindness to me, I am gratified and rejoiced beyond measure. I am certain that all my just views and concerns must be accomplished and advanced as I could wish them; and I am prepared, whenever your Lordship shall inquire into my other concerns, to give a full and unreserved explanation. With regard to the adoption of the plan for the settlement of my country, I have neither refusal nor delay. But let it be adopted and executed in such a way as to occasion no loss nor diminution of my authority and power, and in the manner explained by my letter of this date to the Resident, which will be submitted for your Lordship's perusal, when the doubts, if it please God, and the apprehension in the mind of the British Government, that unjust exactions on my part occasion the disaffection and rebellion of the landholders, and my demand for the aid of the British troops, will be totally obviated and removed; for, in reality, my disposition is so inimical to all manner of unjust exaction and oppression of my subjects, that I could never tolerate for a moment the smallest departure from engagements on any pretext whatever; and during the whole period of my Government the ruin of a single Zemindar, which is the necessary consequence of oppression, has not in any instance occurred, so that the country, comparatively with former times, is now populous and fertile, as your Lordship will shortly perceive, when with the aid of Almighty God the soil of my dominions shall be refreshed by your Lordship's presence.

It has exuded from your gracious pen, that "the object of your address is so serious, that you assure yourself I cannot misinterpret the frankness with which your Lordship has exposed our relative situations for my reflection; and, on the contrary, the unreserved manner in which your Lordship has spoken ought to satisfy me that no doubtful sentiment remains concealed." Of a truth, it is as your Lordship has stated. Your well-wisher is fully persuaded that as your Lordship has been the first to commence with such purity of heart the language and manner of kindness, frankness, and unreservedness, this circumstance cannot fail to give me the greatest pleasure and joy: and with a reference to what has been written, that "Major Baillie is instructed by your Lordship to make this principle the guide of his communications, and that your Lordship ardently hopes that I will prove my correspondence to your disposition by my liberal and sincere trust in that gentleman." This assurance on the part of your Lordship is, as it were, the conclusion of my comfort and the perfection of my joy. I have never hitherto been wanting in any of those observations to Major Baillie; and now that your Lordship has thus written on the subject, how can I fail to be still more attentive to them in future? Let your Lordship's august mind be perfectly satisfied on this point in as far as I am concerned; and I am certain that Major Baillie too, on his part, aware of the friendship subsisting between the two Governments, and apprized of your Lordship's kind intentions towards me, will implicitly follow your instructions.

J. BAILLIE,
Resident.

Ordered, That the following letter be sent to the Resident at Lucknow, together with a copy of the English draft of the letter to his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier below recorded.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

To Major J. Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir:

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 8th instant, inclosing the translation of a letter from his Excellency the Vizier, in reply to that addressed to his Excellency by the Governor-General under date the 7th of January.

2. Although the general tenor of that letter is sufficiently friendly, and professes a disposition on the part of the Vizier to listen to the advice of the British Government, the Governor-General in Council cannot but perceive that his Excellency entertains a decided repugnance to the particular plan of reform which, in consequence of his Excellency's own request, was submitted to him by the Earl of Minto, in his Lordship's letter of the 28th December 1810, and to any modification of it commensurate with the sentiments and wishes of the British Government on that important point. Every mode of argument, exhortation, and warning, every appeal to his Excellency's pride, judgment, and humanity, has been resorted to in vain, to obtain his acquiescence in that particular plan of reform which the British Government has considered and declared to be, according to its belief, the only effectual remedy for the disorders of his Excellency's administration. It is obvious, then, that no hopes can be entertained of success from any further endeavours short of compulsion, to carry that measure in the precise form in which it has hitherto been urged.

3. While the Governor-General in Council laments the perverse and unenlightened policy which induces the Vizier to reject that system of administration recommended to his adoption by the British Government, and which his own experience of its success in the Ceded Provinces might enable him correctly to appreciate, it does not appear to his Excellency in Council that, under a just and fair construction of the obligations of the alliance, we are entitled to proceed to the only measure of a compulsive nature which was ever suggested, namely, a renewed and direct demand, founded on the stipulations of the treaty, accompanied by a menace of withholding the aid of the British troops in support of his Excellency's authority in case of his refusal.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
25 Mar. 1814.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

4. The arguments employed in Mr. Edmonstone's despatch of the 6th of July 1811, on a like occasion, are precisely applicable to the state at which the negotiation has now arrived, and they are strengthened and confirmed by the renewed failure of every attempt to influence the judgment or feelings of the Vizier. Even admitting that his Excellency were induced by a repetition of our demands, whether accompanied or not by such a menace, to give a reluctant assent to the measure generally, it is obvious that no vigilance or care would suffice to prevent him from frustrating it in detail, without a complete infraction of that part of the stipulation which provides that the reform shall be carried into effect by his Excellency and through his own officers.

5. The conclusion appears to the Governor-General in Council to be inevitable, namely, that the specific plan of reform proposed to the Vizier by Lord Minto must be relinquished, or insisted on as the alternative of a resolution on our part, which would amount to a dissolution of the existing relations between the two States.

6. The principles of justice and good faith, as well as of political expediency, appear to the Governor-General in Council to forbid the adoption of the latter course, and thus to impose on the British Government the necessity of desisting from the further prosecution of the object.

7. While, however, the relinquishment of the specific plan of reform, above referred to, is unavoidable, it by no means follows that the hope of introducing a reform into his Excellency's administration, from which considerable practicable benefit may arise, need be abandoned.

8. There is, indeed, no doubt that a plan abstractedly of inferior ability and efficacy, in which the Vizier shall cordially concur, will in practice produce the beneficial results contemplated by the British Government, better than the most judicious system of regulations which his Excellency might ostensibly adopt and secretly counteract.

9. The Governor-General in Council has the satisfaction to think that the tenor of the Vizier's letter to the Governor-General affords an opening for renewing the negotiation on this footing, and the Governor-General has accordingly addressed a reply to his Excellency, conceived in terms which are calculated to encourage his Excellency to open his mind to you, and to state his own views in such a manner as to lay a foundation for the discussion and eventual adoption of a plan, which though not embracing the full scope of the wise and beneficial system which has been recommended to him, may yet combine the advantages of a considerable practical improvement in the conduct of his administration and the condition of his subjects, with a cordial disposition on his own part to give it full effect.

10. An English copy of the Governor-General's letter is enclosed for your information, and you will receive the original from the Persian Secretary.

11. You will be pleased to accompany the delivery of the letter with a discourse, on your own part, adapted to the spirit of its contents, and endeavour, by every method of courtesy and conciliation, to engage his Excellency to throw off that reserve which must ever be an obstacle to the success of any plan, and appears to have been fostered by the controversial turn which the former discussions concerning the reform unfortunately but unavoidably assumed.

12. The footing on which it is desired by the Governor-General in Council that the negotiation should be recommenced, will not tend, as the former naturally did, to generate asperity both of sentiment and expression, which, unknown to the parties engaged in the discussion, must imperceptibly and unavoidably mix in a long protracted controversy, animated on one side by a sense of wounded pride, jealousy, and apprehension of the loss of independent authority, and of the means of gratifying the passion of cupidity, and, on the other, by the more honourable feelings of ardent and honest zeal for the reputation of the allied Governments and the interests of humanity.

Consultations,

13. The object of your endeavours should be, and his Lordship in Council is satisfied will be, to acquire the Vizier's confidence, by shewing him that you are not seeking to force any particular measure on him, but are desirous of knowing what the Vizier himself suggests, that you may co-operate with him in the details, if the general system be calculated to meet the object in view, or state to him frankly the inefficacy of his plan if it be really delusive.

14. It is particularly desirable to abstain from the expression of any suspicions of the Vizier's sincerity. The indication of such a feeling must necessarily destroy all confidence, while, by awakening his pride and interest to the importance of acting up to the professions which he has made in his letter to the Governor-General, the ends of Government may be attained, if not to the utmost desirable extent, at least to such a degree as to ensure considerable practical benefit.

15. While the Governor-General in Council is prepared to give up the attempt to prevail on the Vizier to adopt the particular system of administration which Government was desirous that he should adopt, and to be satisfied with one of a more imperfect character, it will still be essential to maintain in its full force the right of the British Government to satisfy itself of the propriety of affording the aid of its troops in support of the authority of his Excellency or the officers of his Government. The objections to the abandonment or compromise of this right, under any circumstances short of the actual introduction into the Vizier's dominions of a plan of administration which would preclude the hazard of the British troops being called on to act in support of oppression and injustice, are too obvious to require to be stated.

16. The Governor-General in Council relies on the exertion of your utmost skill, address, and discretion, for the accomplishment of the views of Government, described in the foregoing paragraphs, and in the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier.

Letter from
Governor-General.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 25th of March 1814.)

The answer which I have had the honour to receive from your Excellency to my letter has been truly gratifying. In the first place, I feel sincerely the eagerness with which your Excellency seized the opportunity of doing what you believed would be acceptable, in my contemplation, respecting the family of Hooscin Alee Khan; and I will say that I have real satisfaction in the measure adopted by your Excellency, because I know it must redound to your reputation.

I am equally thankful for what you are pleased to say on the subject of the reform in the administration of your affairs. When you meet me with such liberal frankness, I must be quite confident in your Excellency's disposition; and as I only wish the adoption of that spirit of government which has been recommended to you, I should ill meet your generous assurances, did I urge any particular provision to which you had shewn repugnance. The precise system of arrangements suggested to your Excellency by my predecessor was pressed upon your consideration, because we ourselves had experienced all the practical benefits of it in our territories, and we had reason to imagine that a noble pride would have made your Excellency remain unsatisfied, if you had found that you had made a settlement in your dominions less calculated to draw upon you the applause and blessings of your subjects than what exists in our provinces. If, in the acceptance of our counsel on that head, there be ought that that can appear to your Excellency a derogation from your dignity, be persuaded it never could be our wish to subject you to a painful feeling. I do not attach exclusive importance to the special terms of the reform proposed, although I think it the most efficacious: all I wish from your Excellency's wisdom is, that you will explain fairly and undisguisedly to Major Baillie your objections to any of the intended articles, that you will condescend to state to him that which in your judgment would be preferable, and that you will methodise with him a plan that may be practically expedient. Only let us get rid of a necessity which cannot but be as mortifying to the feelings of your Excellency's as it is to ours: I mean the constant call for employing troops to extort the revenue, amid the clamour of the multitude against harshness and oppressions. Nothing can be more remote from the disposition of your Excellency than such extremities; and it is our perfect confidence in the rectitude of your mind in that respect, which has made us represent so repeatedly and so strongly the abuses committed by those acting under your orders, but pursuing a course utterly irreconcilable to the elevated dictates of your heart.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government.

Sir:

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch under date the 25th ultimo, in answer to my letter of the 8th ultimo, and conveying a copy of a letter to be addressed to his Excellency the Vizier by his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General on the important subject of a reform in the administration of His Excellency's Government.

2. His Lordship in Council must be aware, as the records of my proceedings at this Court, in a number of instances demonstrate, that the object of my negotiation with the Vizier has never been exclusively that of obtaining his Excellency's acquiescence in the specific plan of reform recommended to his adoption by Lord Minto, the details of which were submitted to his Excellency by me in compliance with his particular desire, but on the contrary, that the alternative of devising a plan of his own has been uniformly in his Excellency's choice, and that he has been repeatedly and earnestly entreated to communicate his sentiments with freedom on every objectionable part of the system proposed by Lord Minto, under an assurance that they should all be withdrawn, and that the cordial concurrence of his Excellency in the establishment of any system of Government by which the condition of his subjects might be improved, and the revenue of his country collected, without the constant employment of our troops in support of rapacious Amils, was all that our Government desired.

3. It has hitherto appeared to my judgment, that the Vizier's repugnance to reform has been chiefly to the principle, not the plan or the details, of the system proposed to him, and that the exercise of justice and moderation in the settlement and collection of his revenues, especially as influenced by our advice, has been the object of his Excellency's aversion, more than any particular system or plan.

4. Under this view of the subject, which my experience would indicate to be just, I cannot with confidence predict any immediate beneficial result from the renewal of the negotiation with his Excellency on the footing prescribed by the Government; although his Lordship in Council may be assured that every faculty of my mind shall be exerted to the utmost possible extent, to give effect to his benevolent purposes, in the manner explained by my instructions.

5. One advantage, and an essential aid, will be afforded to my future negotiations with the Vizier, by the terms of his Lordship's letter to his Excellency, and of the instructions of the Government to me. The alternative of his Excellency's proposing a plan of his own for the better administration of his affairs and improving the condition of his subjects, although suggested repeatedly before in the course of my discussions with his Excellency, had never yet formed the the subject of a direct address to the Vizier from the head of the British Government, and I am disposed to augur happy effects from the impression on his Excellency's mind of an offer so liberal and friendly, conveyed directly to his Excellency by the Right Honourable the Governor-General, more particularly as accompanied by a resolution to adhere to the spirit of the declaration which was formerly conveyed to his Excellency, regarding the employment of British troops in supporting the demands of his Aumils.

6. On my receipt of the Persian letter I shall accompany the delivery of it to the Vizier, with a suitable discourse on my own part adapted to the spirit of its contents, and I shall not fail to employ every power of conciliation that I possess for the accomplishment of the purposes described in it.

7. With a reference to the pension of Hoosein Alee Khan, I am concerned to have occasion to report to you that no payment of this pension has been made since the 15th of December last, and that his Excellency the Vizier has declared to me his intention of suspending future payments on this account till the amount of his former advances to Hoosein Alee Khan shall be liquidated. On my receipt and perusal of the Vizier's letter to Lord Moira, in which the personal attendance of Hoosein Alee Khan was required, I directed this respectable person to commence his attendance on the Vizier, with a view to his Excellency's satisfaction, and Hoosein Alee Khan has been regular in the performance of this duty to his sovereign for a period of nearly two months.

Ordered, That the following private letter from the Resident at Lucknow to the Secretary be here recorded.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government.

My dear Adam :

I beg the favour of your reporting to Government that I presented Lord Moira's letter to the Vizier on Wednesday last, and made a suitable speech to his Excellency on the occasion. He complained of indisposition so much that I could not detain him long at the conference, nor could I urge him to make any communication in answer to the Governor-General's letter or to my remarks on the subject of it. He observed merely, after I had read the letter, that it contained happy tidings, and that he ascribed those happy tidings to me. I understand, however, that shortly after I quitted the palace, his Excellency made a handsome present to Hukeem Mehdee, to demonstrate his Excellency's sense of the fortunate termination to which the Hukeem's counsels have at length brought the question of reform.

The complaint by which his Excellency is occasionally afflicted does not by his own account affect his appetite or his vigour in the smallest degree, and the general opinion ascribes it to be a desire in his Excellency's mind of suspending all business with me till the approach of my Lord Moira to this country.

I have myself been very unwell since Wednesday last, and this is the first day that I could have sat up long enough to write to you what is here written.

There is no matter for an official letter, and therefore I trust that this will be received in its stead.

I am, &c.

To John Monckton, Esq., Persian Secretary to Government.

Sir :

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you an arzee to the address of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General received from Mirza Hoosein Alec Khan, son of the late Nawaub Ameer-ood-Dowlah Hyder Beg Khan.

2. The principal subject of the arzee having been treated at considerable length in the 3d paragraph of my despatch to the Political Department, under date the 31st December last, it seems unnecessary to renew it on this occasion. The eventual demand by his Excellency the Vizier of the sums of money which were given or lent to Hoosein Alec Khan, for the purpose of subsisting his family till the ultimate decision of the question depending between the two Governments regarding him, unless compensated in the manner which he suggests in his arzee to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, must be productive of the greatest distress to this respectable person and to his family, and motives of humanity impel me to recommend the prayer of his petition to the favourable notice of the Government.

I have, &c.

(Signed) J. BAILLIE,
Resident.

From Hoosein Alec Khan. (Received the 30th March 1814.)

Through the boundless kindness of the British Government, I have obtained from his Excellency the Vizier, in consideration of the claims of my late father, an allowance of 2,000 rupees per mensem; namely, 1,500 for myself, and 500 for the support of the other members of my father's family. Every due consideration has, indeed, been shewn towards me, and I am utterly unable to express my gratitude for the favours which I have received. May the Almighty long preserve your Lordship on the seat of power and greatness, to rule over the world and relieve the wants of mankind. I have transmitted for your Lordship a nuzzur of five gold mohurs, your acceptance of which will confer the highest honour on me.

From the tenor of some conversation which lately passed between his Excellency the Vizier and Major Baillie on the subject of my debt, it may be inferred that it is in contemplation to deduct the amount of my debt from my monthly allowance.

The real state of the case is as follows: His Excellency the Vizier has advanced money to me at different times to the amount of 10,000 rupees, as a loan to be repaid at my convenience; but, on the other hand, the gardens, bazars, and other valuable possessions of my late father, have been under attachment for a period of nearly ten years, and the revenues of them during that time have been received by his Excellency. It will, therefore, be an act of justice, and one which I confidently hope from the liberality of the two Governments will be carried into effect, if his Excellency the Vizier would pay to Akbur Alec Khan and myself, in equal shares, the amount which has been received from the above-mentioned possessions, in the same manner as the British Government paid to us, in equal proportions, the amount of arrears due on account of the compensation for the Sayer of Garhettie. This would enable me to discharge the debt in question.

Moreover, adverting to the conversation above-mentioned, I am apprehensive that hereafter I shall not experience the favour of his Excellency the Vizier: I therefore hope from your Lordship's kindness, that you will be pleased to give strong injunctions to whoever may be the Resident at this Court to afford me his assistance, in order to ensure to me the payment of my fixed stipend, and in all other affairs in which his interference may be required; so that having no cause of anxiety, I and my numerous family may be unceasingly occupied in prayers for the prosperity of the British Government. Further particulars will be communicated to your Lordship by Major Baillie.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir:

1. A translation of the arzee addressed to the Governor-General by Hoosein Alee Khan, and transmitted to the Persian Secretary's Office with your letter of the 21st March, having been submitted to the Governor-General in Council, I am directed to communicate to you the following remarks and instructions on the subject of his representation, referring at the same time to your despatch to my address, under date the 28th ultimo, which was duly received and submitted to Government.

2. The resolution expressed by the Vizier to withhold payment of the stipend granted to Hoosein Alee Khan until the amount of the advance made to that person by his Excellency at various times shall be replaced, has excited the regret of the Governor-General in Council, who was led to hope, from the tenor of his Excellency's last letter to the Governor-General, that it would be paid without deduction from the date on which his Excellency had agreed that it should commence.

3. His Lordship in Council infers, from the tenor of your letter of the 28th of April and from Hoosein Alee Khan's arzee, that his Excellency does not mean to demand payment of the amount of the bond to Almass Alee Khan, mentioned in a former despatch from you under date the 31st December 1813, and that his Excellency's present views are limited to the recovery of the sums advanced for Hoosein Alee Khan's subsistence, amounting, as the latter states, to about 10,000 rupees. Although even this deduction is considered by the Governor-General in Council to be, under all the circumstances of the case, oppressive and unjust, and at variance with the spirit of his promise to the Governor-General, it is still a sum which may be paid by instalments by Hoosein Alee Khan without material pressure upon him.

4. The Governor-General in Council, however, is pleased to desire, that you will take some favourable opportunity of representing to the Vizier the disappointment which you fear may be experienced by the Governor-General in Council at this demand, and of insinuating the degree in which the enforcement of it may diminish the reputation of generosity and humanity which should attend his Excellency's late boon. On this ground you will endeavour to prevail on his Excellency to reconsider his resolution, if his Excellency cannot be prevailed on to remit the demand altogether, which however the Governor-General in Council trusts may be the case. You will endeavour to obtain his consent to an arrangement for the gradual liquidation of the debt by small instalments, which may still leave to Hoosein Alee Khan the means of comfortable subsistence on the remainder of the stipend, until the whole shall be paid off. The Governor-General in Council is not aware on what ground of equity and fairness his Excellency can oppose an arrangement of this nature.

5. Referring to your despatch of the 28th April, I am directed to inform you that the Governor-General in Council suspends any observations on that part of it which relates to the question of reform, until he shall receive a further communication from you, after the Vizier shall have made known the result of his deliberations on the subject of the Governor-General's letter to his Excellency of the 25th March.

To his Excellency the Right Honourable Francis Earl of Moira, K.G., Governor-General, &c. &c. &c.

My Lord :

1. No event of material importance has occurred in this city since my despatch to your Lordship's address of the 12th instant at noon.*

2. My Hurkarras and news-writers, who were placed in attendance on the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah and Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, and in several quarters of the city, as well as with the principal commanders of troops in the service of this Government, have transmitted hourly reports to me of the most satisfactory nature; and though I have received no intelligence hitherto of the proceedings of Aumils at a distance, I have every reason to believe that the peace and tranquillity of the country have not suffered any interruption, and are by no means likely to be disturbed by the change in the head of the Government.

3. Under this promising aspect of affairs, I have addressed another letter to General Stafford, a copy of which is enclosed; and I have authorized the removal of the greatest part of our troops from the palace, leaving five companies of sepoys as a guard of honour to the Nawaub, and for the protection of the public treasury and other property of the State.

4. I returned from the palace myself at two o'clock in the afternoon of yesterday, after adopting every necessary precaution for the safety of his Highness's person, and for the regular exercise of his authority over all the branches of his household, in the manner suggested by myself and readily acquiesced in by his Excellency, with a view to satisfy and give confidence to the minds of his brothers, relations, and dependants.

5. I had the honour of breakfasting with his Excellency to-day, and found every thing at the palace as I wished it. The Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, however, evinced an extraordinary design of retaining the keys of the treasury which were formerly entrusted to his charge; and refused to deliver them to a person whom his eldest brother had deputed with my concurrence to receive them. This circumstance connected and combined with the former conduct of Shums-ood-Dowlah might have created a necessity for the adoption of measures which I was most anxious to avoid; and it is satisfactory to me to be enabled to add, that this necessity has been entirely superseded by the subsequent delivery of the keys to a native servant of my own, and by a message from the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah demonstrative of implicit submission, and of his reliance on the justice of our Government.

6. I have genuine pleasure in reporting to your Lordship to-day, what should properly have been mentioned to you yesterday, that the deportment of his Excellency the present Vizier in the elevated rank and station to which it has pleased Providence to raise him, through the aid of the British Government, and under the influence of its principles of justice, has since the moment of his father's demise been dignified and becoming in the extreme, and has evinced a sincere disposition to be guided in every respect by your Lordship's friendly advice, and to do nothing without my approbation till your Lordship's pleasure be known.

7. I had

7. I had a conference with his Highness this morning which lasted from nine o'clock until one, and much of the public business which had lain over for several months, in consequence of his father's indisposition, was settled to our mutual satisfaction. Among the topics of discussion at our conference, the payment of the pension of Hoosein Alee Khan without deduction, and of the provisions for the dependants of Tuhseen Alee Khan, was cheerfully agreed to by the Nawaub. His liberality was also extended to the women and nominal children of the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, whose clamours are happily at an end : and as a spontaneous act of grace and benevolence, a proposal which I had intended to submit for the release of many hundreds of prisoners confined in the jails of Lucknow unjustly, or without any adequate cause, was anticipated to my joy by the Nawaub, and will be carried into immediate effect. A most vexatious and oppressive tax which had recently been imposed by the Vizier on the transit of money in small sums for domestic purposes through the capital to interior districts of the country was abolished, at my suggestion, and some improvements in the police of the city were no sooner hinted at by me than they were cheerfully and eagerly acquiesced in.

8. In short, it appears to my judgment, on the strongest and most satisfactory grounds, that the elevation of the Nawaub Refaut-ood-Dowlah to the musnud is destined by Providence to prove a blessing to the hitherto greatly oppressed and unhappy people of Oude, and to every description of its inhabitants, as well as to facilitate in an extraordinary degree the accomplishment of your Lordship's just views with a reference to the Vizier's Government and to the future administration of its affairs.

9. I take this opportunity of submitting to the notice of your Lordship a copy and translation of a purwannah which was circulated to the Aumils and other public functionaries, civil and military, in Oude, on the accession of the present Nawaub to the musnud. A copy of my circular instructions to the commanding-officers of our troops at the several distant stations is also transmitted by this despatch.

10. An appropriate arzee has been addressed by the Nawaub Refaut-ood-Dowlah to her Highness the Bhow Begum, and forwarded in a letter to her Highness from me by a messenger whom I deputed for that purpose to Fyzabad.

11. I shall have the honour of addressing your Lordship again when any thing occurs to be reported, and I have the honour to be, &c.

ing the police of the metropolis, and of some other subordinate arrangements which I suggested to his Highness the Nawaub, are already very apparent. The reports of the commanding-officers of our troops at the several stations in the interior, which have hitherto reached me, are also of a nature the most favourable.

2. I breakfasted with his Highness the Nawaub yesterday by appointment, to assist him in receiving visits of condolence from the two brothers of the King, who reside in the metropolis, and who offered their visit thus early in cheerful compliance with my request.

3. The ceremonies of the seyoom, or third day after the death of a Mussulman, were performed at the grave of the late Nawaub Vizier in the morning, and the principal personages and persons who attended at that ceremony were afterwards admitted to breakfast in the palace, and received assurances of protection and favour from me, in the name of the young Nawaub, and by his own particular desire.

4. His Highness seems desirous, indeed, of making your Lordship's representative at his Court the organ as well as the adviser of all the public measures of his administration, and the medium of conveying his wishes and commands to his brothers, relations, and dependants, as well as to the servants of his Government, addressing me frequently by the appellation of his uncle and protector, and entreating my assistance as indispensable to the successful conduct of his affairs.

5. When the princes and other visitors had taken their leave, his Highness and I had a conference for the transaction of public business which lasted till one in the afternoon; and almost all the minor questions that depended between the British Government and the late Vizier, and had heretofore proved so vexatious to both, have now been most happily adjusted, in the spirit of your Lordship's commands and to my entire satisfaction.

6. This morning I rode out with the Nawaub to Constantia, the house of the late General Martin, to assist his Highness in directing the arrangements proposed to be made for your Lordship's accommodation at Constantia, where he had heard me announce to his father that your Excellency wished to reside. We returned to the palace on the same elephant by the Nawaub's particular desire; and after breakfast his Highness held a darbar, for the purpose of conferring khillats of encouragement on his brothers, relations, and dependants, and on all the public servants of the State.

7. The darbar was universally attended by every individual who had been summoned to it, with the single exception of Shums-ood-Dowlah, who persisting with apparent sincerity in his professions of submission to our Government and of compliance with my wishes and desires, has declared his unalterable resolution of avoiding the presence of his brother, and disavowing any other superior than your Lordship or your representative at Lucknow.

8. It appears to my judgment at present, though my mind be not entirely made up on the subject, and cannot be so of course till I have personal communication with Shums-ood-Dowlah, that the removal of this Nawaub to some place within the Honourable Company's provinces may be ultimately found to be expedient, if not indispensable to the peace of his own mind and to his elder brother's satisfaction; but I do not feel the smallest apprehension of the public tranquillity being disturbed by his continued residence in this city, where he has no longer any partizans or adherents. Hukeem Mehdee, on whom he chiefly relied, has confirmed the opinion which I had long formed of this Aumil, by deserting the cause of his protector, and professing himself the willing slave of our Government. His professions and personal interests coinciding on the present occasion, I believe the former to be sincere, and have received them as such from him in person.

9. The retirement of Shums-ood-Dowlah from office may be considered to create a necessity, and affords a favourable opportunity for the appointment of an efficient minister of subordinate rank to conduct the details of this Government in in concurrence with the Resident; and I shall take an early opportunity of ascertaining the sentiments of the Nawab on this important question, and submitting them with my own opinion for your Lordship's mature consideration.

10. The highly becoming conduct of the Nawab Nuseer-ood-Dowlah from the moment of his father's demise, and particularly his professions of attachment to the British Government, on the sincerity of which I have reason to rely, combined with the knowledge which he possesses of such of the concerns of this Government as have hitherto been entrusted to his charge, suggest the expediency of his continuance in the discharge of his present duties, for which he seems sufficiently qualified, and which his brother seems disposed to consign to him.

11. Nothing further occurs to me at present as deserving of particular report or requiring your Lordship's consideration. I deem it proper to submit to your notice the enclosed copy of a letter which I addressed to Colonel D'Auvergne, commanding the troops at this station, on the occasion of my authorizing his recall of the British troops from the palace.

1. The important and momentous object, for the successful accomplishment of which I considered it to be my duty to require your attendance with the troops under your command at the palace of his Excellency the Vizier, being now happily effected by the elevation of the Nawab Refaut-ood-Dowlah to the musnud, and the establishment of his Highness's authority in the city and neighbouring districts, you will be pleased to withdraw the troops to cantonments, leaving five companies of sepoys as a guard of honour to the prince, and to protect the public property of the State which is deposited in apartments of the palace.

2. I take this opportunity to convey to you the high sense which I entertain of your zealous and judicious conduct in the command of the troops at Lucknow on the recent momentous occasion, and to solicit your acceptance of my best and most grateful acknowledgements for the essential aid and support which your conduct has afforded to my measures.

3. You will be pleased to convey, in my name, to Lieutenant-Colonel Lyons, your second in command, and to all the other officers and soldiers, the expression of my entire approbation of their conduct, and of the exemplary discipline and good order which they evinced while employed on duty at the palace.

4. The just tribute of approbation and applause of the general state of discipline of the troops under your command has been already conveyed to you, on more than one occasion at Lucknow, by the most respectable military authorities; and it may be gratifying to your feelings, though unimportant to your professional reputation, to be assured of my entire and cordial concurrence in the sentiments expressed by those authorities.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches dated the 13th and 15th instant, containing a continuation of your report of events and transactions at Lucknow since the demise of the late Vizier and the establishment of his successor on the musnud of Oude.

2. The accomplishment of the latter event without the slightest interruption of the public tranquillity, and the general satisfaction with which it appears to have been attended, are circumstances which have afforded a high degree of gratification to the mind of his Excellency the Governor-General, while the favourable disposition and character of the new prince, manifested in the early acts of his Government, and his apparent determination to regulate his public conduct by the salutary counsels of the British Government, afford the most flattering prospects of the wisdom, prosperity, and success of his future administration.

3. The Governor-General receives the early and willing compliance of his Excellency with the wishes of the British Government, on several of the questions which were so long and fruitlessly agitated with the late Vizier, as a strong and gratifying proof of his friendship and regard for the Honourable Company.

4. I have already had the honour to signify to you, in general terms, the approbation with which your conduct and proceedings during the late crisis have been viewed by the Governor-General. His Lordship directs me to repeat the assurances of his high approbation of the vigilance, foresight, and circumspection of the measures adopted by you at the moment of the late Vizier's demise for the preservation of the public tranquillity, which must speedily have checked and overawed any disposition which might have existed to insurrection, or opposition to the establishment of the legitimate successor. Your personal exertions at the same time and subsequently, as reported in your despatches, equally demand the expression of his Lordship's approbation.

5. I now proceed to state to you the observations which have occurred to the Governor-General on a point which appears to his Excellency to be of most urgency, in point of time, among those adverted to in your despatches, namely, the expediency of his Excellency the Vizier addressing an arzee to his Majesty the King of Delhi, announcing his accession to the musnud of Oude under the auspices of the British Government.

6. You will have observed, that in the letters of condolence and congratulation which the Governor-General has transmitted to the Nawaub Refaut-ood-Dowlah, his Lordship has addressed him by the title of Vizier of the empire. In addressing the Nawaub by that title, his Lordship was influenced both by his conviction of the propriety of that prince's immediate assumption of a title which has become virtually hereditary in his family without awaiting the result of any communication with the Court of Delhi, and by the corresponding line of conduct recommended to the late Vizier on his accession. His Lordship presumes that the Nawaub Refaut-ood-Dowlah will have assumed the title of Vizier.

7. It will be proper, nevertheless, as an act of courtesy, for his Excellency to address an arzee to the King, announcing his elevation to the musnud and honours of his ancestors, under the aid of the British Government, but carefully avoiding any expression which will bear the construction of seeking or acknowledging the necessity of his Majesty's confirmation of his title.

8. It

8. It may be expected that the King will proffer the grant of the title of Vizier in the usual forms ; in which case it is not judged expedient that his Excellency should decline it. After what is above stated, it would be superfluous to add any injunctions regarding the care and attention to be observed in drawing up his Excellency's letter to the King, which will, of course, be done in concert with you.

9. The Governor-General has derived peculiar satisfaction from observing the perfect cordiality which subsists between you and the Nawaub, and the confidence which his Excellency reposes in your friendship and advice. His Lordship is assured that it will be a primary object of your endeavours to preserve that cordiality and confidence unimpaired ; and the judgment which his Lordship has been enabled to form with regard to the character of the Vizier from the first acts of his Government permits his Lordship to indulge a hope, that he will continue to perceive his own true interest and the welfare of his people to be best consulted by a liberal, frank, and ingenuous attention to the counsels of the British Government, conveyed through its representative at Lucknow, delivered with firmness, but with respect and moderation, and with invariable regard to the relative situations of the parties, and to the limits of independence on the one side and control on the other, prescribed by the treaty and by the result of the subsequent negotiation at Lucknow. By a course of conduct framed on the foregoing principles, aided by your zealous, able, and cordial co-operation and advice, his Excellency the Vizier cannot fail to obtain the love of his people, the respect of surrounding States, and the approbation of his own conscience.

10. Since the preceding paragraphs were written, your despatches dated respectively the 18th and 23d ultimo, have been received. The submission of the Nabob Shums-ood-Dowlah to the authority of the Vizier, and the reconciliation effected between the two brothers, have afforded his Excellency great satisfaction. Any observations which may be suggested by this event, or which may occur to his Excellency generally concerning the conduct and situation of the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, are reserved for a future occasion.

2. Considerable balances of revenue for the current and preceding Fusly years having been stated by his Excellency the Vizier, on the authority of unquestionable documents submitted to my personal investigation, to be justly due to his Government in several districts of his dominions, particularly in those districts which are contiguous to the stations of Sultanpore and Purnauburh, I have deemed it to be my duty to offer the support of our commanding-officers at those stations, and eventually the aid of our troops for the recovery of those balances of revenue; and the measures which I have adopted with this view, as detailed in the accompanying copies of my correspondence with Colonel Frith and Major Richards, will, I trust, receive the approbation of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General.

3. I take this opportunity of apprising you, for his Lordship's information, that a battalion of regular sepoy, and also a battalion of nujeebs in the service of his Excellency the Vizier, which were stationed in the district of Khyrabad, having mutinied against their officers and the local authority of the Government in the district to which they belonged, and proceeded in a disorderly manner to Lucknow, have been, at my suggestion, dismissed from his Excellency's service, and required to surrender their arms, with the ordnance and military stores attached to the regular battalion. I am happy to be enabled to add, that the measure of the disbandment of those corps, recommended by me to the Vizier, has been carried into complete effect in the most satisfactory manner, without any material resistance on the part of the mutinous troops, and unattended by the smallest disturbance in the city.

Sir:

1. My letter (circular) under date the 22d ultimo, and the proclamation conveyed by that letter, will have necessarily served to apprise you of the general nature of the arrangements proposed by his Excellency the Vizier for the settlement and collection of his revenues.

2. I have now the honour to inform you, that with a view to carry those arrangements into effect, his Excellency has been pleased to appoint the undermentioned persons Ameens to the several districts of his dominions which are contiguous to the station of Seetapore, and comprehended in the Zillah of Khyrabad, which remains, as heretofore, under the general superintendence and management of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, late Aumil of Khyrabad and Mohumdee, viz.

3. Those Ameens have been severally furnished with explicit and particular instructions for the guidance of their conduct in preparing and submitting a scheme of a just settlement of the revenue for the ensuing Fusly year, and they have been directed to proceed to their districts, with the least practicable delay.

4. I transmit for your information and guidance the enclosed copy and translation of a second circular edict, under the seal of his Excellency the Vizier, addressed to the revenue officers and landholders of the districts to which Ameens have been appointed; commanding their attendance on the Ameens, and conveying conveying such further orders as seem necessary for the speedy and successful accomplishment of the objects committed to those Ameens.

You will be pleased to afford your support to the persons above-named in the proper discharge of their duties, and to comply with their eventual requisitions for the aid of detachments of the troops, in such cases as may appear to require it, with a view to maintain their authority in the districts committed to their charge.

6 A separate letter of introduction to your notice has been given to each of the principal Ameens above-mentioned, who will present the letter in person or transmit it by a confidential agent, to be deposited for the purpose of conveying to you every necessary degree of information regarding the state of the district at large, and a particular explanation regarding the circumstances which may eventually appear to require the employment of the British troops in support of the authority of the Ameen.

Proclamation.

Be it known to the Chowdries, Canoongoes, Zemindars, Putwarries, cultivators, Ryots, and peasantry at large of pergunnah, That whereas the prosperity and happiness of my subjects must ever form the leading objects of my care, I have, therefore, at this auspicious season, determined to introduce in my dominions a system of future arrangement, by which the Zemindars and cultivators being secure from the unjust exactions of Aumils and farmers, may with confidence proceed in the improvement and cultivation of their lands, paying the just revenues of Government on the real produce of their lands agreeably to an established kistbundee, without failure or delay, and be in no ways liable to the tyranny, oppression, or extortion of any farmers or Tehsildars, that thus the revenues and resources of the country may be yearly increased, and the cultivation of the lands be so extended and improved, that in process of time no uncultivated land shall remain in my dominions, and that the frequent insurrections and commotions by which the landholders and peasantry are ruined, the expenses of the Government increased, and general disorder excited, may be now and for ever at an end.

With a view to carry this salutary system into effect, I have nominated and appointed Ameen of the district of, who will immediately proceed to that district; and having assembled all the landholders, Malgozars, cultivators, and others, and inspired confidence in their minds by apprizing them of my benevolent intentions, will commence a diligent inquiry into the actual state of every town and village in the muhaul. He will demand from the Chowdries, Canoongoes, Zemindars, and Putwarries of the district, a true and accurate description of each village and estate (which the Ameen will afterwards visit), of its waste and cultivated lands, of the condition of its inhabitants and peasantry, and the causes of their actual condition. He will further require from those officers the several revenue papers which are specified in a separate list with which all the Ameens have been furnished, and he will immediately submit to the Presence the result of his investigation, with the several documents alluded to, with the least practicable delay.

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to attend the aforesaid Ameen immediately on his arrival within your district, and to convey to him every information that he may require regarding the state and condition of the district, without the smallest partiality or reserve, and to produce and deliver to the Ameen every document which he may demand from you, without any hesitation or delay, being obedient to his orders in all things, and considering his favourable or unfavourable report as advantageous or injurious to your interests. You are at the same time strictly prohibited from giving or offering to the Ameen, or to any of his deputies or servants, directly or indirectly, the smallest nuzzur,

Sir :

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you, for your information and guidance, the enclosed copies of a correspondence which has recently passed between me and the commanding-officer of the troops at Sultanpore, on the subject of the refractory conduct of certain landholders in the district of Akburpore, and others, contiguous to the station of Sultanpore, who have resisted the authority of the Vizier's officers of revenue for a period of several years, and are now in balance to the State to a very considerable amount.

2. As Major Richards has reported his opinion that a military force attended by a battering train may be required eventually to coerce the defaulting landholder, Surroopdoom Sing, and some others in the district of Akburpore, it seems proper that you be prepared to comply with the requisition of Major Richards for the aid of the battering train at your station, if circumstances shall appear to require, and the state of your own district admit of, the employment of this part of your force at a distance, after the conclusion of the periodical rains, or about the middle of the ensuing month.

3. But I am disposed at present to rely on the success of Major Richards' exertions, under the instructions which I have issued to that officer, for the accomplishment of the objects in view, and the voluntary submission of the landholders to the just authority of their sovereign, without having any recourse to more active military operations.

4. You will be pleased to correspond with Major Richards on the general subject of this despatch, and to favour me with your opinion occasionally on the result of that officer's proceedings, as it may tend to supersede or require the immediate or early employment of a portion of the force under your command in support of Major Richards' measures.

To Major Richards, commanding the Troops at Sultanpore.

Sir :

1. The arzee of Surroopdoom Sing, transmitted in your letter of the 9th instant, appearing to his Excellency the Vizier to evince a persistence on the part of that Talookadar in the refractory and rebellious conduct described in the Aumil's arzee, and a resolution to withhold the just dues of the State, which he has acknowledged to a considerable amount in his own arzee to the Vizier, it has, therefore, been deemed expedient by his Excellency to issue another and more peremptory mandate to Surroopdoom Sing, directing him to pay into your hands, on account of the Government, without delay, the sum of Sicca Rupees 76,251. 5. 6. which he has expressly acknowledged to be due by him, and which you will be pleased to demand and receive from the Talookadar and remit by hoondies, or transmit in specie to me under the charge of a proper escort, to be delivered to his Excellency the Vizier.

2. Should the Talookadar refuse to make payment of the amount of this just and unquestionable demand, which proceeds on his own acknowledgment, you will be prepared to take the necessary measures for enforcing it, by seizing the person of the defaulter and sending him a prisoner to Lucknow; but as it is alike the wish of his Excellency the Vizier and my own to avoid measures of coercion, and to recover the dues of the State by means of conciliation and persuasion, you will be pleased to use your best endeavours to recover the amount of this demand from Surroopdoom Sing, by persuading him of the folly as well as injustice of withholding the revenues of the Government, which must inevitably tend to his ruin, by dispossession of the lands which he holds and perpetual banishment from the country, if a British force be employed against him.

Sir :

I have the honour to transmit an arzee for his Excellency the Vizier received with the accompanying letter to my address from Surroopdoom Sing. With a reference to that part of your letter of the 15th instant regarding the seizure of Surroopdoom Sing in the event of his refusing to pay the amount due from him, I think it necessary to state, that such a measure could only be effected by detaching a force for the reduction of the ghurry in which he resides. There are, it appears, three ghurries in his zemindary. Should you consider it expedient to authorize a force being detached for the above purpose, will you have the goodness to apprise me as early as possible, as it will be necessary for me, conformably to General Orders of the 8th of November 1806, to apply for battering guns to accompany the detachment.

2. The instructions conveyed to you by my despatch of the 27th instant, will, I trust, supersede the necessity for proceeding to measures of extremity with regard to Surroopdoom Sing, whose attendance on the Ameen of his district may lead to a satisfactory adjustment of the demands of the Government against him and against the subordinate landholders, whom he describes as withholding the revenue.

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you another purwannah which his Excellency the Vizier has been pleased, at my suggestion, to address to the refractory Talookadar, Surroopdoom Sing.

2. In transmitting this purwannah to the Talookadar, you will be pleased to caution him in the strongest terms against the ruinous consequences which must inevitably result to him in the case of his still pertinaciously withholding the just revenues of the Government and delaying to attend the Ameen who has recently proceeded to his district.

3. Another purwannah under the seal of his Excellency the Vizier, addressed to Surrupjeet Sing and Duljeet Sing, Talookadars of Chandypore-Bidhur, is also transmitted by this despatch, and you will be pleased to forward it by a careful and intelligent messenger, with a message to the defaulting Zemindars of the same purport with the foregoing, and in suitable terms from yourself.

4. The present season of the year renders the employment of a military force, and more particularly of a battering train, extremely inconvenient and inexpedient, if it can possibly be avoided, and it is my desire, at all events, to postpone the adoption of those measures till the close of the periodical rains and commencement of a more favourable season. Colonel Frith will, however, be instructed to hold the battering train at his station in readiness to proceed in the direction of Akburpore on the 15th of the ensuing month, should circumstances appear to require it; and you will be pleased to communicate to Colonel Frith, as well as to report to me, the result of your further proceedings under the instructions now and formerly conveyed to you.

5. I rely with confidence on the exertion of your best endeavours to accomplish the objects of this despatch, and to ensure the submission of the landholders in all the districts around you to the just authority of the Government, by means of conciliation and persuasion, without any necessity for recourse to active military operations, which it is particularly desirable to avoid.

I shall accordingly use every measure of conciliation and persuasion to attain the objects in view; but there appears every reason to expect that military operations will be unavoidably necessary against some of the Zemindars who have ghurries.

The relief for this post will probably arrive in the midst of the operations; a circumstance likely to occasion some delay and impediment in carrying into speedy effect the new arrangements adopted by his Excellency the Vizier, especially as only five companies come to this post in the first instance: As it appears that the early introduction of the new system resolved on by his Excellency the Vizier is of importance, should you judge it advisable, on application from you to head-quarters, the relief of this corps might of course be postponed till next season.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st instant with its enclosures, relating to the refractory conduct of Surroopdoom Sing, and other Zemindars in the Akburpore district, and directing the battering train to be in readiness to move against them after the rains, in case they should continue to resist the authority of his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. I have accordingly given directions for the battering train at this post to prepare to move ; but as there are no artillerymen, lascars, draft bullocks, or carriages attached to them, it will be necessary that the officer commanding the first division of the field army should order what may be required from Elahabad when the season for moving arrives. Annexed is a memorandum of the details of men and cattle, &c. which will be wanted. I have written to Major Richards for information concerning Surroopdoom Sing and the other refractory Zemindars, and in the mean time will use my best endeavours, in concert with the Major, to persuade these people to submit peaceably to his Excellency's authority ; and as it is obviously their interest to do so, I hope we may prove successful.

Sir :

I have the honour herewith to transmit an arzee addressed to his Excellency the Vizier by Surroopdoom Sing received with the accompanying letter to my address. It appears that Surroopdoom Sing is desirous of the assistance of a detachment from this post, to enable him to effect the payment of the arrears of revenue, and he promises to join with his followers any force that may be detached for that purpose. I have received intelligence from the Ameen of Hassenpore, that Beekum Sah, the Talookadar of Rampoor, has invested a place in that neighbourhood, at present occupied by a party in the service of his Excellency the Vizier, and that he seems disposed to attempt the establishment of his own authority in that quarter. I have accordingly, in conformity with the tenor of your instructions, addressed a letter to Beekum Sah, to endeavour to deter him from his rebellious practices, and to recall him to a just sense of the obedience he owes to his Excellency's Government. I have also pointed out to him the advantages to himself of his attending on the Ameen and conforming to the new system to be introduced, and have called his attention to the ruinous consequences which must eventually attend his persisting in his present contumacious conduct. In the event of the Ameen requiring the immediate assistance of a detachment, I feel myself precluded from granting it at present, with reference to that part of your letter of the 1st instant which directs me to postpone the employment of a military force till the close of the rains. However, on this point I request the favor of your further instructions, and entertain a hope that the objects in view may in a great degree be attained by conciliatory measures. These, however, must necessarily be interrupted by the relief of this corps, as the business will then probably be required to be commenced on afresh. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case, I thought it right, in my letter of the 2d instant, to state that as only five companies were in the first instance to come to this post, and particularly as this relief would occur occur in the midst of the operations, considerable impediment, inconvenience, and delay might occur, and that your application to head-quarters, if made immediately, might of course occasion, without inconvenience, the relief of this corps being postponed till next season. I have thought it my duty particularly to advert, in this and my former letters, to the state of affairs in this quarter, that no blame may be eventually imputed to me for not having made a full and early report.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letters dated the 10th and 11th instant.

2. The conduct of the Talookadar of Rampoorra has been obviously such as to require the immediate employment of a force to expel him from the ghurry which he has occupied, and to seize his person if it be possible; and if the nature of his position and strength of the ghurry of Rampoorra be such as to admit of your attacking him successfully with the force now at your disposal, without the aid of a battering-train, I request that you will be pleased to adopt the necessary measures for this purpose with the least practicable delay, provided the refractory Talookadar shall not have evacuated the ghurry and returned to a proper sense of his duty before your receipt of this despatch.

3. On the receipt of the arzee of Surroopdoom Sing, I shall have the honour of addressing you hereafter. The circumstances which you have stated with a reference to the relief of the troops, are highly deserving of notice, and I shall take an early opportunity of submitting them to the consideration of the Commander-in-Chief.

ment, or rather to the demand of arrears which those landholders had hitherto withheld and are naturally unwilling to discharge, yet they indicate at the same time that the diffidence evinced by the principal landholders, with regard to the system of reform and to their personal attendance on the Ameens, has a reference chiefly to the misconduct of the former revenue officers and the oppression of former times, and they afford a prospect of salutary results when this diffidence shall be obviated by the conciliatory measures in progress.

3. In the districts of Purtaubgurh and Behar, and in all the other districts of the country to which Ameens have been recently deputed, the progress of the measures of reform would appear to be totally unimpeded and to afford universal satisfaction.

Sir:

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, and to report that I this morning detached four companies of the second battalion of the Twenty-second regiment, under the command of Captain Blackney, towards Rampoor. I enclose a copy of my instructions to that officer. The ghurry of Rampoor is represented to be in a dismantled state; but should it prove otherwise I have directed Captain Blackney to refrain from making any attack on it without further instructions from me, as in that case, conformably with General Orders of the 8th of November 1806, it will be necessary to apply for the battering train. Although my letter to Beekum Sah, pointing out the ruinous consequences to himself of his rebellious conduct, had not the desired effect of inducing him to retire from the ghurry of Rampoor, I have yet hopes that on the approach of Captain Blackney's detachment he will evacuate it without resistance. It appears to me that the presence of a detachment in the district will, of itself, tend to establish the authority of the Ameen, by operating as a check on the neighbouring Zemindars who may be inclined to be refractory.

With regard to that part of my letter of the 10th instant having reference to the relief of the troops at this post, I thought it right to mention that your application to head-quarters might, of course, occasion the relief of this corps being postponed till next year without any inconvenience; especially if the application were made immediately, as the corps from which the five companies are to be detached for the relief of this post commences its march from Keitah on the 1st of next month.

On your arrival at Rampoorra, should Beekum Sah not immediately evacuate the ghurry and return to a sense of his duty, you will employ the force under your orders to expel him from it, and if possible secure his person: provided, however, that the nature of his position and the strength of the ghurry be such as to admit of your attacking him successfully with the force under your command, and without any risk whatever of failure.

1. In continuation of the subject of my despatch of the 12th instant, with a reference to the conduct of Surroopdoom Sing, and the tenor of that person's arzee to the address of his Excellency the Vizier, I have the honour of transmitting, for your information, the enclosed translations of a letter and arzee which I have recently received from his Excellency, and which tend to establish a conviction of the falsehood of Surroopdoom Sing's statement, and of his being leagued and united in rebellion with Zorāwur Sing and other Zemindars, against whom he has solicited the assistance of a detachment of the British troops.

2. Under these circumstances, it is obvious that the dispersion of the force of Surroopdoom Sing and the reduction of the fortresses in his possession must be an object of considerable importance to the tranquillity of the district of Akburpore, and should be undertaken by the troops under your command at as early a period as may be practicable after the conclusion of the periodical rains, unless the immediate suppression and punishment of Beekum Sah, which you were eventually instructed to undertake by my letter of the 12th instant, and your own and Colonel Frith's admonitions to Surroopdoom Sing, shall have occasioned that person's submission to the just authority of the Government before the battering train can be prepared to move from Purtaubgurh.

A copy of an arzee from Gholaum Zamin, representing the rebellious conduct of Zorāwur Sing and Surroopdoom Sing, is sent enclosed for your information, and will enable you to compare the statement in the latter's arzee with the true account of the conduct of that person and the other, who are united in their rebellion against the Government and depredations against the neighbouring Zemindars.

These persons have, for three years past, been united in their rebellious practices and in withholding the revenues of the Government.

The Arzee of Gholaum Zamin, dated the 20th Ramzaan 1229, 6th September 1814.

Zorāwur Sing and Surroopdoom Sing, Talookadars of Meopoor in Aldemow, who have withholden the just dues of the Government for the last three years, and have otherwise been refractory and rebellious, proceeded together, on the 17th Ramzaan, with about 600 armed followers, to the Elakas of Behadur Sing, Zemindar of Churnypetty, purgunnah Mujhaura in Akburpore, where they attacked the above-mentioned Zemindar, killed one and wounded another of his servants, carried away the cattle, and plundered the property of the Ryots, and established their own authority in the villages of Luckeechundpore, Kuthuree, and Muckoopore in the above talooka.

The Ryots of purgunnahs Ainsun and Mujhaura are greatly alarmed by their proceedings; and some other ill-disposed persons, encouraged by the success of Surroopdoom Sing and his associates, seem now disposed to unite with them and to withhold the revenue of the Sircar.

These circumstances are represented to your Excellency, that the necessary orders may be issued.

Sir:

Since the dispatch of my letter of this morning, I have had several communications from Beekum Sah, through the channel of his Vakeel, none of which, however, appear to promise any prospect of a speedy negotiation, and it is my opinion that some time will be requisite to establish the necessary confidence between the soldiers of the Ameen and Beekum Sah's adherents, who are represented to be in considerable force about two coss in an easterly direction from my camp.

I have, therefore, for the present, occupied the ghurry of Rampoor with a party from my detachment, and shall continue such in it until I may receive your instructions on this particular point, as the whole of the followers of Beekum Sah are much averse to the Ameen's troops taking possession of the place.

Beekum Sah, in his communications hitherto, promises to pay a certain proportion of the revenue remaining due, and for the balance to give unexceptionable securities.

It however appears, from information I have obtained from the police here, that those guarantees will not be admitted of by the Ameen, he conceiving them not worthy of trust.

Thus stand matters at present; but I have every hope that the conciliatory measures I propose to adopt will eventually prove successful in the re-establishment of good order, and also in the realization of revenue due to his Excellency the Vizier.

The Hurkarra who carried my letter of this morning to your address, will inform you of some depredations committed on villages in the neighbourhood last night.

Sir:

Having gained certain information, in the course of yesterday, of the place of encampment of Beekum Sah, which was said to be about three coss distant from my camp, and about one mile on the north side of the Goomty, I determined on beating up his quarters, and had some hopes of succeeding in dispersing the mutinous adherents who have attached themselves to his service. I accordingly left my camp for that purpose about nine o'clock, p. m., taking with me three companies, and leaving the fourth or seventh company with Lieutenant Duncan in charge of the camp, which I left standing.

Having arrived at the ghaut, where my Hurkarra told me I was to cross in the pursuit, I was grieved to find that the rebel, Beekum Sah, had conveyed all the boats and canoes from the southern side of the river to the north banks, and there sunk them, to prevent the possibility of his being surprized by my detachment; and while I was engaged in securing the inhabitants of a small village that stood immediately upon the ghaut, to prevent their giving notice of my approach, I discovered the lighted matches of the enemy on the opposite side of the river from me, and almost immediately they commenced a smart fire on my sepoy, for which in return I gave them a few shots; but, to prevent the possibility of any casualty occurring in my detachment, I caused it to fall back under cover of the village, where I remained under arms until the break of day, and then returned to my camp at Rampoor. My Hurkarras inform me that Beekum Sah was joined yesterday by a great number of armed men from this district, and that his force is increasing daily.

The Bildars have commenced this morning on destroying the gherry of Rampoor.

I think a detachment from the force at Sultanpore could very easily oblige the rebel force to re-cross the river into this district, when I should be prepared to receive him.

The bearer of this can give you much information on this subject; and I think the earliest opportunity, with most vigorous measures, should be adopted to crush, if possible, the rising power of the rebel, and check the great influence he at present holds over the minds of the natives about here.

2. The recent conduct of Beekum Sah, as now described by Captain Blackney, is very different, indeed, from what I contemplated as the probable result of Captain Blackney's proceedings against him, and from the purport of Captain Blackney's early reports, as conveyed in your former despatches.

3. It seems now to be not only expedient but indispensable, that the most vigorous measures be adopted for the suppression of Beekum Sah and his associates, the dispersion of their followers in arms, and the seizure of the rebel's person, if it be possible; and you will accordingly be pleased to adopt such measures as you may deem necessary and proper, with a view to the accomplishment of these objects, immediately on your receipt of this despatch, unless the intermediate submission of Beekum Sah and his personal attendance on the Ameen shall have superseded the necessity for further proceedings against him.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your's dated yesterday, and to inform you that, in consequence of the night attack I made on Beekum Sah, he dismissed on the following day all those adherents who had attached themselves to him, and is now residing with eight attendants in a ghurry, or fort, on the northern side of the Goomty, the property of those two refractory Zemindars so much in arrears of rent to his Excellency the Vizier.

In the few shots I exchanged with him across the river on the night of the 20th, I wounded two of his followers, one severely through the loins, and the other in the thigh. The former, it is reported, cannot live.

The villagers of all this district are much attached to Beekum, and at a moment's warning can and will, I am credibly informed, turn out a force of armed men of between six and seven hundred.

In obedience to your orders, I shall not attempt to cross the Goomty in pursuit of him, but unless, as I before stated, the Ameen will promise security to his person in the event of his coming into his camp, and in compliance with the proclamation issued to that effect, I am convinced that on the moment of my withdrawing from hence he will immediately return, and again compel the retreat of the Ameen's troops from this part of the world.

I am informed that about five years since a similar dispute to the one now existing took place between Beekum Sah and the Aumil, and that the late Colonel Palmer, then commanding at Sultanpore, interfered, and was promised security security for the man's person by the Aumil ; in consequence of which he obeyed the summons for his attendance on the Aumil, when he was immediately seized and put in irons. Sir :

I have received your letter of the 10th instant, with its enclosures, two letters, namely, one from Mirza Aga Jan, and one to the Mirza's address from Mohümmüd Khan of the police. Your own acquaints me with the chief point, that the Zemindars of Nyar, Hoolass and Munsook, will not allow the police Nujeebs to be established in their village, and refers me for full information to the Chucladar, Aga Jan's letters.

Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel
Burrell.

I observe from the contents of all, that you have advised Aga Jan, after his having made you acquainted with all the circumstances, to recall the police servants. I am sorry that you did not, however, before taking this step, send an intelligent non-commissioned officer or sepoy to ascertain the truth of the fact, who (if it was really well founded) could have carried your sentiments to the Zemindars, and placed in a proper light before them the great impropriety of resisting, by such conduct to the police, the positive orders of the Government.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
16 Nov. 1814.

Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel
Burrell.

I am, I must confess, of opinion that if the Zemindars have acted as is said to the police, there must be some strong reasons for it, and possibly that the orders of the Nawaub, as well relative to the new system as to the employment of the police Nujeebs, have not been clearly and properly explained. But, indeed, Aga Jan has so lately assured me that he had given general circulation to the proclamation, that I can hardly believe he has neglected such an important measure.

For the present, you had better send a non-commissioned officer or sepoy to require an account of the particulars; and if the complaint turns out to be frivolous, afterwards request Aga Jan to have the Nujeebs posted again. At all events, endeavour to persuade the Zemindars (if they have a serious dislike to the police) to let them remain undisturbed in the villages for the present, and to draw out a statement of the reasons which make them complain, for you to have forwarded to his Excellency the Nawaub, who, no doubt (should their cause be reasonable), will give them redress.

I request of you to impress upon the Chucladar's mind, that only extremities, and that in a just cause, can warrant the line of severity he wishes to shew so precipitately to the Zemindars, and that the object of every Government must be to use mild and moderate measures so long as the least hope remains of moderate measures proving successful.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant; in reply to which I beg leave to acquaint you, that I sent an intelligent and careful sepoy to explain to them (the Zemindars) that they had better allow the police to be stationed, as it was the orders of the Nawaub that one should be placed in all the large villages. He has also pointed out to them the impropriety of resisting the positive orders of the Government.

The Zemindars still persist in refusing to admit the police, and say if it is stationed they will immediately quit their houses and retire into the jungle, as you will perceive by the enclosure which was sent by Peetum Sing.

The other enclosure is from Aga Jan, reporting the whole circumstance.

I have the honour of transmitting to you herewith the accompanying letter from Captain Burgh with one from the Ameen of Gopamow, &c., and another from Inaet Alee Tannadar, complaining of the Zemindars being averse to have police guards established in their villages. I have written to these Zemindars, enjoining them to comply with the orders conveyed to them by the Ameen, by allowing the Mootusuddies and Nujeebs of the police to remain in their villages unmolested, and shall take no further steps in this business till I am favoured with your instructions.

The Ameen of Gopamow has such a great dislike to the Zemindars of his district and they to him, that I conceive his removal to some other situation, and another of a more conciliating disposition being appointed in his room, would restore them all to good order without having recourse to harsh measures.

Letter from Major Richards.

Should you deem it expedient to order a detachment from this post against the refractory Zemindars, I conceive that less than a battalion will not be adequate, as the Zemindars alluded to are able to collect a considerable force. Two or three companies, therefore, from Purtaubghur, would be requisite for the protection of this cantonment in the absence of the detachment under my command. In the event of a force being detached from this post as above stated, I propose proceeding with it; and as it will most probably be requisite to attack the ghurries of the refractory Zemindars, will you have the goodness to order the battering train with the usual detail of European artillery-men to be placed at my disposal. A troop of cavalry from Purtaubghur would also, for obvious reasons, be very desirable to form part of my field force.

The right wing of the first battalion of the Fourteenth Regiment has arrived at this post. I have been under the necessity of detaining the left wing of my battalion till I hear from Mr. Sands, the collector of Elahabad, respecting the pay for August, the drafts for the payment of the troops at this post having been forwarded to him.

I beg leave to send, for your information, other letters which I have received from the Gopamow Chucladar. Clear it seems from them all, that the establishment of a police, for some reason or other, has excited a general dislike, and has been alike ill received in all quarters.

Something must be done, if it is necessary that the orders of his Highness the Nawaub should be enforced. But with a view to avoid extremities as long as any other expedient remains to be tried, I propose shortly (as I have your permission) to take the circuit of the different places which have stood out against the establishment of a police, and I hope in person to be able, (so great a weight is paid by the natives to rank), to bring them at last quietly into the measure. I have only this reason, indeed, for preferring to undertake this task myself, rather than entrust it to the execution of my officers.

It would be very desirable, however, before I take these steps, to possess a copy of the proclamation or orders which his Excellency the Nawaub may have had circulated on this separate and particular subject, which if I had them by me while performing this service for his Excellency I should certainly find of the greatest use.

2. The State of the district of Banghur, as described in your recent despatches, and the opposition evinced by the Zemindars to the establishment of a police in that district, combined with some other considerations, which it is unnecessary here to detail, have induced his Excellency the Vizier to dispense with the personal services of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan at the capital, and to dismiss that intelligent Aumil to the district of Khyrabad and Mohumdee, where I have every reason to expect that his presence and able management, with the support to be afforded by you, will speedily accomplish the object of reconciling the landholders to the police and establishing good order in the district.

3. Hukeem Mehdee being vested with ample authority in the character of Zillahdar or collector of the districts which were heretofore farmed by him, and being fully apprized of the wishes and views of his Sovereign regarding the future management of the country, as well as of my sentiments respecting the best and easiest mode of fulfilling his Sovereign's wishes, I refer you to the statements of the Hukeem for every degree of information which it may be necessary for you to obtain before you employ the troops in support of his authority or measures.

Sir:

I have the honour to transmit to you, for the information of the Resident and Lieutenant-Colonel Fraser, copies of correspondence between Bence Sing, Zemindar of Budjera, and myself. He is the principal insurgent, and is now in a fort with five hundred followers. The place is surrounded by three bamboo hedges, with an intermediate ditch between each of them. The entrance is capable of admitting a gun to the gate, as yesterday a hackery with five maunds of gunpowder was conveyed into the interior of the place. I think that another complete company, in addition to the one which I have, with two guns, would soon be the means of restoring peace in the neighbourhood: but should Bence Sing persist in the line of conduct which he has adopted, so as to require the execution of coercive measures, his fort at Budjera could not be reduced with less than three full companies and guns for battering. I regret that the Resident did not notice my letter of the 3d instant, as, without some instructions or discretionary power is granted to me, the detachment might as well have remained in cantonments; I shall, therefore, thank you to ascertain from the Resident what is required from the detachment, and the object upon which it is sent, as it is too insignificant at present to adopt coercive measures, and it is my opinion that nothing can be done without them.

I have received your letter. I send you my compliments. I am well and require your good opinion. From your favour I am here. You wrote to me to come and visit you. I am present. Neither Dureaw nor Munoo Sing are here, or I should send them to you. Should they, however, be discovered to be here on inquiry, you may inflict on me what punishment you choose. I wish to ascertain the cause of this disturbance between you and Bebee Rāfut, that I may effect a reconciliation betwixt you. You shall receive no molestation in doing so. I send my compliments to Lieutenant Otto, and I have received his letter containing an invitation to his camp, which I cannot accept. As Munoo Sing and Dureaw Sing, the depredators of the Bebee's country, are relations of mine, should they wait upon you first, I shall do the same; but, should I wait upon you without them, they would destroy my country, in the same manner as they have done the Bebee's.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 12th instant with its enclosures, reports of Lieutenant Otto's proceedings in the district of Muhmoodabad.

2. The rebellious conduct of Benee Sing, Zemindar of Budjera, as described in Lieutenant Otto's reports, appears to leave no alternative to the adoption of military operations, with a view to his exemplary punishment or the surrender of the fortress which he occupies; and if the force under your command, with the guns attached to your corps, be deemed adequate to the performance of this service, I authorize and direct you to undertake it without any further delay.

3. You will be pleased, in the first place, to ascertain whether or not a battering-train be required to reduce the fortress in question. From the description which I have received of it, and of the means of defence which are possessed by the refractory landholder, Benee Sing, there seems reason to expect, that the appearance of a respectable force in the neighbourhood would induce the submission of the Zemindar, and surrender of the fortress to our troops.

The Range of Mubunabad, whose authority you were instructed to support, is said to have some guns of her own, and these, with your battalion guns, may perhaps be found sufficient for the purpose; but of this you are the only competent judge, and it is totally unnecessary for me to remind you of the orders of Government against undertaking operations against forts, without ample equipment for the service.

Fraser.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 14th instant, and in conformity thereto immediately directed the artillery and troops at this post, with the exception of one hundred rank and file for the protection of cantonments, to hold themselves in momentary readiness of march. I despatched two Hurkarras across the country to Lieutenant Otto, with special instructions to give me every possible information regarding the strength, situation, and condition of the fort or forts now in possession of Benec Sing, and to ascertain by any means he can, without any material risk or injury to his detachment, whether a battering-train is absolutely necessary to ensure the reduction of the place. His reply I expect in the course of to-morrow; and should it state the necessity of a battering-train, I shall forward it for your consideration. Meantime the troops are held in readiness; and in the event of your instructions to march against Benec Sing, upon the mere supposition of our appearance intimidating him to a surrender, it shall be instantly effected.

Lieutenant Otto's official reply to me I shall of course forward for your information; and should it be of that tendency to afford hopes of success without a battering-train, I shall forthwith proceed, as considering the instructions already received perfectly sufficient. I find my route must be by Byramgath; and as it will greatly expedite my movement, it is my intention to take one gun from this post, and the two stationed there, with my corps, for the purpose of more effectually accomplishing the object in view.

Sir :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, directing me to ascertain the strength of Bence Persaud's forts and the force requisite to reduce them. I have now the pleasure to acquaint you, that Bence Persaud has come to a due sense of his obedience, and is now as anxious to effect a reconciliation as he was formerly to avoid it. I had an interview with him on the 13th, and received letters from Munoo Sing and Dureaw Sing (at the same time), expressing a desire of coming to an understanding, and to accomplish which they meant to wait on me. I therefore delayed acquainting you with Bence Persaud's concession till the arrival of these men, in order that I might acquaint you with the final adjustment of all their animosities. In this expectation I have been disappointed, for neither Munoo nor Dureaw Sing have come in, nor have I received any answer from them to my letter, desiring them to come in and settle their differences. These men (from what I can learn) have no fixed abode, but rove about the country. Runjeet Sing, Rajah of Rajpore, is said to be in league with them. Bence Persaud's fort is not visible from without, being concealed in the foliage of the bamboos. I still expect Munoo Sing and Dureaw Sing to come in in the course of a few days, when all their differences will terminate amicably.

I have the honour to acquaint you, that at the requisition of Major-General Wood, sanctioned by the authority of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief, a detachment from my regiment, consisting of one troop and the galloper guns, commenced its march this morning for Goruckpore by the route of Jounpore and Azimgurh.

The officers of his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier have been apprized of the march of this detachment, and requested to furnish any supplies it might require in passing through the district.

I also beg leave to acquaint you, that the Ameens lately sent into the neighbouring districts have such countenance from me as my situation enables me to afford them, and as seemed necessary to support his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier's authority in the country. To a few Zemindars, who seemed rather disinclined to come in to the Ameens, I have sent two or three mounted troopers with a civil message, recommending their immediate attendance, and which, I have reason to think, will be attended to, as the Zemindars appear to be acquiring confidence, and less apprehensive of being confined or ill-treated, the excuse they have hitherto made for holding back.

Other Ameens have also requested the aid of the British troops for the punishment of the refractory in their districts, and therefore it is necessary that you repeat your instructions to the commanding-officers, to ascertain from the several Ameens the nature of the disorders in their Elakas, and then adopt the necessary measures to put a stop to them. If this measure be postponed any longer, the revenues not being paid, loss to the Government must arise.

Statement referred to in the above.

Mohummud Beg and Assūd Alee Suwars, belonging to the Ressala of Mahmood Khan Khundharee, in the service of the Nawaub, told Ballasheer, Tehsildar of Hissampore, that agreeably to the orders of the Hoozoor, they were escorting Dhokul Sing, Moostajer of Rehoa, to Lucknow, when Mandhattah, son of Sheopersaud, Zemindar of Bumnowtee, with nine hundred men pursued Dhokul Sing, who fled into the house of Soha Sing, Zemindar of Kolhan, and therefore that the Tehsildar should immediately proceed with his forces and guns to the assistance of Dhokul Sing. The Tehsildar paid no regard to this suggestion, and the Suwars proceeded to the village of Kolhan, where they remained till night, and returning to Ismael Gunge, have reported that the followers of Mandhattah Sing entered the dwelling of Soha Sing by force, and put Dhokul Sing, the Moostajer, to death.

With regard to the district of Sandee, my knowledge of the character of Kootb-ood-Deen Hussun, Ameen of that district, who was many years a Tehsildar in the province of Bundelcund, under my own immediate authority, would lead me to place greater reliance on his statements than on those of most other native officers in this country; and therefore I recommend to your consideration the propriety of your instructing Lieutenant Lloyd, who is now in the district of Sandee, employed on a separate service, to communicate and co-operate with the Ameen, not only in the execution of the service on which Lieutenant Lloyd is at present employed, but generally in the accomplishment of the objects which are stated in the Ameen's arzee, a translation of which is enclosed.

from the Vizier.

The Arzee of Kootb-ood-Deen Hussun, Ameen of Sandee. (Dated the 14th November 1814.)

As there are several rivulets, streams, and nullahs, in the purgunnah of Sandee, the khureef crop has in consequence been inundated. In some villages, however, from the refractory disposition of the Zemindars, and in others from their poverty, owing to the unjust exactions of former Aumils, the revenues remain to be realized. The Zemindars, under a natural apprehension of being pressed for the arrears of last year, and the amount of the khureef of the present year, do not attend in the Cutcherry, and have agreed among themselves to abscond when they have sown for the Rubbee crop. Some toomuns of nujeebs and companies of sepoys, who are stationed in this district, having in the month of Sawun, with Dhokul Sing, the discharged Aamil, been routed at the village of Mutchgawan in Burwan, the Zemindars stand in no awe of them whatever, and thus the establishment of the police thannahs has not been effected in Burwan at Kutearee.

The Zemindars of the purgunnah of Seromunnugur, which is situated between the purgunnahs of Sera and Burwan, in Khyrabad, having witnessed the disturbances in those two purgunnahs where the police thannahs were removed, have of late evinced a disposition to follow the example of those districts, and are collecting powder and ammunition for that purpose, as well as repairing their dismantled ghurries. If a detachment of the British troops be now sent into this Elaka, and instructed to encamp in such places as I may point out, the ghurry of Seromunnugur will soon be given up and may be levelled to the ground, the design of the Zemindars of Sandee in repairing their forts will be laid aside, and they will all return to their obedience; otherwise there is ground to apprehend that when the Rubbee seed shall be sown, the Zemindars may abscond and quit the district, and prevent the settlement being made as well as the establishment of the police.

1. I request the favour of your attention to the enclosed translation of a letter which I have received from his Excellency the Vizier.

2. My former despatches to your address regarding the aid to be afforded to Ameens for establishing their authority in their districts, preclude my attaching belief to the statements of such of the Ameens as represent the failure of their applications for your support, if attended with the necessary information. At the same time, I deem it to be my duty, in compliance with the requisition of the Vizier, to address you again on this subject, and to beg that the necessary measures for the establishment of the authority of the Ameens and realization of the public revenue be adopted as early as may be practicable.

3. The conduct of Surboodoom Sing, in particular, appears to me to be such as to require your immediate notice, and the adoption of effectual measures, in concert with Colonel Frith, for the exemplary punishment of Surboodoom Sing, by the reduction of all the forts in his occupation, which should be dismantled and razed to the ground.

Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel
Burrell.

Sir :

I have resumed the command of this cantonment, and have the honour therefore to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th instant, to Captain Burgh's address, with its enclosures (received yesterday evening).

I have the pleasure to send you the copy of a letter which I have written to Captain Lloyd, on the strength of your instructions to Captain Burgh.

I had yesterday an interview with Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, who presented to me your private letter. From his account of the unsettled and disorderly state of the districts under his control, I am of opinion that to be able to afford him the support he requires, it will be expedient to move with the main body of the battalion and guns to an eligible point in the Bangah country, and to leave only about fifty men with the recruits of about an equal number, under an European officer, to protect the cantonments, there being little danger to be apprehended here.

The force I shall have with me, if my suggestion meet your approbation, will, when united to the Company at present in Tandecawn, form a detachment of nearly three hundred and forty men, exclusive of the armed followers whom the Hukeem may have under his control.

From the Bangah country, I shall be conveniently ready to proceed to the Sandee neighbourhood, if an encreased force prove to be required there. In this manner, undertaking these services for the Nawaub with adequate and commanding means, I trust that I shall see the wishes of the Government accomplished without difficulty, and it is to be hoped, without bloodshed.

The accompanying statement of the corps under my command will shew the force now employed in this part of his Excellency the Nawaub's country.

To Captain Lloyd.

Sir:

I am directed by Lieutenant-Colonel Burrell to instruct you to call for the company at Shahabad under Ensign Isaac, to join you, if you are of opinion that it will be able to do so with safety.

It is Colonel Burrell's order that you send him with the greatest haste an account of the ghurry of Kukkra (as far as you can obtain a knowledge of it from report), and afford him also a statement, with which the Ameen will be so good as to furnish you, of the strength of armed men, nujeebs, &c. who are with you, under the immediate direction of the Ameen, and from whom, in case of service, any assistance can be expected.

You are expected by the Resident at Lucknow to co-operate with the Ameen of Sandee as far as you have it in your power to do so, and the Colonel requests of you to act towards him in the most conciliatory manner. But on no account will you undertake, with a force that is not perfectly adequate, any hazardous service merely at his suggestion, or without making a reference.

Sir:

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 30th ultimo with its enclosure, a copy of your instructions to Captain Lloyd, the tenor of which I entirely approve.

2. I also highly approve your resolution to move towards the district of Bangah with the whole of the disposable force at your station, for the purpose of restoring the tranquillity of that district and the neighbouring purgunnah of Sandee, the state of which, as described by Captain Lloyd, and more particularly the rebellious conduct of the Zemindar of Kukkra and his associates, would appear to require the immediate adoption of measures to check the disorderly spirit which has recently arisen in that quarter.

3. I congratulate you most cordially on the happy restoration of your health; and I augur the most beneficial effects from your re-assuming the command of the troops, and from the exercise of your approved judgment and zeal in the performance of the duties of your station.

Letter from
Colonel Frith.

To Major Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir:

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th instant, covering a communication from his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier to you of the 21st instant.

The only part of that communication which relates to the districts dependent on this post, is that concerning the rebellious conduct of Mandhattah Sing, son of Sheopersaud Sing, Zemindar of Bumnowtee. Of this circumstance no intimation has been conveyed to me by Meer Imaum Alee, the Ameen of the district. I will inquire, however, into the business, and take the necessary steps to get it settled. Towards the latter end of last month Meer Imaum Alee informed me he Ameens had received orders from the Nawaub to commence on the collections of of the present year, but that several of the principal Talookadars held back and would not attend their cutcherries. In consequence of this representation I detached two parties of cavalry, consisting of one havildar and eight troopers each, to the several Zemindars named as advised in my letter to you of the 29th ultimo, and they have all since come in, on the assurance that they would not be confined or ill-treated, and no complaint has been made to me since against any individual.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
20 Dec. 1814.

Letter from Colonel Frith.

I beg leave to acquaint you, that there are three battalions of six hundred men each, with seven guns and about one hundred irregular horse, stationed in the districts dependent on this post, for the collection of the revenue, viz., one battalion, two guns, and thirty-five horse at Purtaubgurh; one battalion, two guns, and thirty-five horse at Ahmety, and one battalion, two large and one small gun, with thirty-five horse, at Dilleebpore and Puttee.

This force, if the corps are complete, would amount to upwards of two thousand men, and ought, as the forts have been all dismantled, to be amply sufficient to collect the revenue without calling on the regular troops, who, I apprehend, are not intended to be employed upon Sebundee duties. However, you will perceive from what is stated above, that I have not waited for your particular instructions to afford aid to the Ameens within my command, when it appeared necessary and proper.

The Akburpore district not being within the limits of my command, the punishment of Surboodoom Sing and the levelling the forts in that quarter fall within the province of the officer commanding at Sultanpore, unless my command is extended to both posts.

In the event of its being determined to send a detachment into the Akburpore district to level the forts and punish such Zemindars as are refractory, a detachment may now be formed from the two posts, consisting of eight companies of sepoys, a squadron of cavalry, and the two eighteen-pounders, and the two howitzers at this post for that duty; a force, which I conceive will be quite sufficient. Major Muller's battalion will reach Sultanpore in a day or two, when both posts will have their complete complement of troops.

The artillery-men, lascars, and stores for the battering-train, will be required from Elahabad. I shall, however, await your further instructions before I apply for them.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 29th ultimo. The explanation which you have offered in that letter was by no means required to convince me of your uniform attention to the proper requisitions of the Ameens and of your zeal for the public service, of which I have had ample demonstration on many former occasions.

2. The outrage committed by Mandhattah Sing took place in the province of Baraitch, to which the district of Rumnowtee is an appendage, and I have issued the necessary instructions on that subject to the commanding-officer of the troops at Secroa.

3. My despatch to your address of the 1st of September last, and particularly my instructions of that date to Major Richards, a copy of which was transmitted to you, must have served to apprise you of my intentions with a reference to the conduct of Surboodoom Sing and other landholders of Akburpore, in the case of the failure of Major Richards' conciliatory efforts to recall those refractory Zemindars to a proper sense of their allegiance, and to induce their early liquidation of the just demands of the State.

Letter
from Resident at

4. From the tenor of my despatch above noticed, and of your answer to that despatch, I concluded that a regular communication with you had been maintained on the part of Major Richards, and that on the failure of Major Richards' endeavours to recall Surboodoom Sing and the other Zemindars of Akburpore to a proper sense of their duty by means of conciliation and persuasion, a requisition would be conveyed to you for the aid of the battering-train and such other part of your force as might conveniently be spared from Purtaubgurh to co-operate with the force under Major Richards.

5. The employment of a detachment in Akburpore, for the punishment of the persons above noticed and the reduction and dismantling of their forts, seems now to be totally unavoidable, and you will be pleased to take the necessary measures for the formation and equipment of the force which is described in the concluding paragraph of your letter with the least practicable delay. I commit it to your own judgment to decide whether your assuming the personal command of the force to be employed in Akburpore, or remaining at your present station and conveying the necessary instructions, under my authority, to Major Muller, be most conducive to the general object of preserving the public tranquillity and supporting the authority of the Ameens in all the districts around you.

6. I notice the useful information, regarding the troops of his Excellency the Vizier in the districts contiguous to your station, which you have furnished in your letter before me, and I shall take advantage of this communication at my next interview with the Vizier, for the purpose of representing to his Excellency the perfect adequacy of his own troops in those districts, under proper management and discipline, to the purpose of collecting the revenue, without calling on the regular army.

From his Excellency the Vizier. * (Received the 1st December 1814.)

An extract from an arzee from the Ameen of Aldemow, and a copy of a complaint preferred by Koonj Beharee, darogha of customs, are enclosed for your information. The rebellious conduct of Surboodoom Sing, Zemindar of Meopore Dooarka, and of Duljeet Sing, and Surubjeet Sing, Zemindars of Bidhur, have already been repeatedly described to you. The former has not paid a single rupee of the revenue for two years and a half, and the others have the audacity to collect the customs of the Government for themselves. The exemplary punishment of these rebels by your troops is indispensable. I have ordered all the Ameens to attend on the commanding-officers of the troops, and convey the necessary information.

Extract from an Arzee from Hafiz Alee Khan, Ameen of Aldemow, dated 22d November 1814.

To-day Mahomed Khan, the agent of Pookhraj, darogha of customs at this place, came to me and stated that Duljeet Sing and Surrupjeet Sing, Talooka-dara

dars of Chandypore Bidhur, had removed the gomastahs (collectors) of customs and sayar from their several chokees (stations), and placed people of their own to collect the import duties. May it please your Excellency, the refractory in these districts, in consequence of no measures having been hitherto adopted to check them, have again become turbulent: your slave is therefore hopeful, that orders may be speedily issued for the punishment of the rebellious.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
20 Dec. 1814.

Letter from the Vicer.

Presented by Koonj Beharee, Darogha of Customs.

On the 18th November Duljeet Sing, Zemindar of Bidhur, sent his people to the permit chokees at Bidhur, Sultanpore, Chandypore Jhownral. They abused the custom-house officers, ill treated and turned them out, and placed men of their own in their stead. The money which was contained in the ghuluk (an earthen pot covered with leather, having a small hole at the top to drop money in) has all been taken out and expended; indeed, they demand the amount of the collections for Kooar from the custom-house officers, and threatened to take from the permit collections one-fourth of the rent of their zemindary. These persons have also prevented the Buniahs, Duttols, and Abkars, from paying any duty to the darogha of customs.

The 17th January 1815.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches of the dates noted in the margin,* reporting the several occasions on which you have found it necessary to call for the services of the troops stationed in Oude for the support of the Vizier's officers, and especially the requisition of a battering-train, with a suitable detachment of troops, to act against certain refractory Zemindars in Purtaubghur.

2. In the actual condition of affairs and the eventual demands of the service, the Governor-General considers it to be extremely desirable to avoid engaging in any operations in Oude, which might produce the necessity of either abandoning an object once attempted, or the employment of a large force with battering guns at a time when the exigencies of the service may render it very inconvenient to have the troops so employed.

3. While, therefore, his Lordship is satisfied of the sufficiency of the grounds on which you judged it expedient to make the requisitions above referred to, I am directed to request you to bear in mind the considerations stated in the preceding paragraph, and to avoid, to the utmost practicable degree, any call for troops likely to produce the inconvenience apprehended.

Sir :

In continuation of the subject of my despatch of the 5th instant, I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the information of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, the enclosed copies of my instructions, dated the 17th instant, addressed to Colonel Frith and Major Muller, with a copy of a letter from Major Muller and extracts from three letters which I have recently received from Colonel Frith, descriptive of a state of insubordination on the part of several landholders in the districts of Akburpore and Aldemow, and more particularly of the rebellious conduct of Surboodoom Sing, Zemindar of Dooarka, which would seem to have induced the apprehension of an attack by that person on the escort proceeding with treasure to the Presidency under the charge of Major Richards.

2. I have been urged repeatedly by the Vizier to take measures for the exemplary punishment of Surboodoom Sing, Zemindar of Dooarka, and some others in the district of Akburpore, who have constructed fortresses on their lands and resisted the authority of the Government, as well as appropriated the whole of the revenues of their estates during a period of several years ; and I was induced, in September last, to come under an engagement to his Excellency for the employment of a military force with a battering-train against those landholders, as soon as the necessary arrangements for this purpose could be made by the commanding-officer of the troops in the field. General Stafford had also assured me, that the equipment of the battering-train at Purtaubgurh should be ordered at an early period of the present cold season, so as to admit of the performance of the service which I had promised to his Excellency the Vizier without any material delay.

3. I feel, therefore, considerably embarrassed by the urgent requisitions of the Vizier for the suppression of his rebellious landholders in the districts of Akburpore and Aldemow, at a time when it appears to be impracticable to afford him the assistance of a detachment properly equipped for that service, and more particularly at a time like the present, when we have occasion to apply to his Excellency for many important aids which he has hitherto shewn a readiness to grant to the utmost extent of his power.

Extract from a Letter from Colonel Frith, commanding the Troops at Purtaubgurh, dated the 14th of December 1814.

I had the honour to acquaint you in my letter of the 7th instant, that I had found it necessary on that day to detach two companies of sepoys to put a stop to the repairs of a fort belonging to Dunneah Sing at Suzakur, &c. ; and I have now to report, that the detachment returned to cantonments this morning, having completely and satisfactorily effected the object for which it was detached without meeting any resistance from the Zemindars.

A party of nujeebs belonging to the Ameen was placed in Suzakur, and the walls that had been recently built were levelled, before the officer who commanded the the detachment came away. He also put parties of nujeebs in possession of five other small ghurries in that neighbourhood, and the Zemindars are all in attendance on the Ameen, as I am informed, with the exception of Dunneah Sing, who having been long confined in irons by the late Aumil of the district, could not overcome his apprehensions of being again confined and ill-treated if he put himself in the power of the Ameen.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

Letter from Colonel Frith.

In my letter of the 7th I had the honour to mention the application of Nuneit Roy, the Ameen in the Ahmety district, for a force to go against Ishuree Sing, the Zemindar of Jammow; and the hurkarra I had sent out having returned with an unsatisfactory letter from Ishuree Sing, and reported that he had collected a large rabble of people and would not suffer the hurkarra to go within a coss of the place, I have found it necessary to detach a force against him, such as I hope will prevent resistance. It consists of a squadron of cavalry, four companies of sepoy, and two six-pounders, and is under the command of Lieutenant Grant, an experienced intelligent officer: it marched this morning. I have instructed Lieutenant Grant, in case of Ishuree Sing coming in and peaceably submitting to the constituted authorities, to assure him that he should not be confined or ill-treated, the apprehension of which being the general excuse made by the Zemindars for not coming in and submitting to the Nawaub's officers; but, in the event of resistance, to punish such as are found in arms. The further proceedings of this detachment I will report hereafter.

I have likewise the honour to acquaint you, that I have received intimation from Major-General Stafford that the equipments for the battering-train at this post would be furnished as soon as the other calls on the Ordnance Department would admit, the necessary steps being in progress for that purpose. When I learn any thing further I shall not fail to let you know.

P.S. Ensign Aitchison, who commanded the detachment, reports that he had the greatest difficulty in preventing the nujeebs from plundering, and that they are universally detested on this account. From what he states there appears to be no kind of discipline or subordination in those corps: hence a reform seems indispensably necessary.

2. Sir :

1. I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 15th instant with its enclosure, and to inform you that a suitable application on the subject of it has been made to his Excellency the Vizier.

2. I take this opportunity of apprizing you that I have lately received several communications from his Excellency the Vizier, accompanied by statements from his Ameens and other officers of revenue in the districts contiguous to your station, descriptive of the rebellious conduct of many of the Zemindars in those districts; more particularly Surboodoom Sing of Dooarka, and Surupject and Duljeet Sing of Chundypore Bidhur, and requiring the aid of our troops for the coercion and punishment of these landholders.

3. Major Richards will, of course, have transmitted to you my several despatches to that officer of the dates noticed in the margin,* and those despatches will have served to apprise you of the important nature of the duties connected with the command which you have assumed.

4. By a despatch which I have received this day from Colonel Frith, it would appear that the arrangements for equipping the battering-train at Purtaubgurh are in a state of considerable forwardness and likely to be concluded very soon, when a formidable force to be detached from the two stations of Purtaubgurh and Sultanpore will take the field and proceed without delay to Akburpore, for the purpose of quelling the insurgents in that quarter and depriving them of the possession of their forts.

5. But, in the mean time, it seems highly expedient that you should adopt every measure in your power to support the authority of the Ameens in the several districts around you, by furnishing detachments of your corps for the performance of every service required that can be executed without the hazard of a failure.

6. A copy of this despatch will be forwarded to Colonel Frith for his information, and you will be pleased to maintain a regular correspondence with that officer, on whose professional judgment and experience, and particularly on his knowledge of the state of the country and character of the people around you, I have great reason to rely for the most useful suggestions to you regarding the mode of proceeding to be adopted for the early and successful accomplishment of the object of those instructions.

Sir :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 17th instant. I would have done so sooner, but delayed till now, in order to acquaint you with Major Richards' departure this morning with the fleet of treasure boats under his charge.

As some suspicion had arisen in Major Richards' mind, as well as in my own, respecting the intentions of Surboodoom Sing and his associates when the fleet should pass under his fort at Dooarka, about sixteen coss from this, I offered Major Richards to accompany him (by land) with a detachment from the battalion under my command to the British frontier in the Jounpore district. The Major accepted the proposal, and accordingly four companies (about two hundred rank and file) from the first battalion of the Second Regiment marched early this morning under the command of Lieutenant Gerard (my quarter-master) and another officer to Popperghaut, with orders to remain there till the fleet arrived and then accompany it to our frontier, keeping as near to the river (particularly opposite to Dooarka) as circumstances would permit. After Lieutenant Gerard has performed this part of his duty he is directed to cross the river river Goomty with the Ameen, Hafiz Alee Khan, into the purgunnah of Aldemow, and assist him to arrange and settle the district, but on no account to undertake any hostile measures; and, above all, not to meddle with Surboodoom Sing, &c. &c. unless he should find them disposed to behave as good subjects.

From every information I can obtain, the fall or surrender of Dooarka will be the signal for all other ghurries in Aldemow and Akburpore to do the same; but the force which I have at present here is so very much reduced by the completing of the grenadiers who have gone to Cawnpore, recruiting parties, and instructors at our numerous drills, that nothing of effect can be undertaken, unless strongly reinforced from other quarters, and yet it appears absolutely necessary to proceed as early as possible to coercive measures against the rebels, who have so repeatedly behaved ill and set the Vizier's officers at defiance.

Agreeably to your instructions I have communicated the substance of this letter to Colonel Frith, nor shall I fail to correspond with him on all points connected with the public service.

Extract from a Letter from Colonel Frith, commanding the Troops at Purtaubgurh, dated the 20th of December 1814.

Letter from
Colonel Frith

I beg leave further to acquaint you that Khajah Hafiz Alee Khan, the Ameen of Aldemow in the Akburpore district, sent a confidential person (Moolwee Meher Alee) to represent the refractory state of the Zemindars of that district, and the necessity of the immediate aid of a military force in support of the Nawaub's authority and to prevent heavy loss in the revenue. I informed him that I only waited for the arrival from Cawnpore of the equipments for the battering-train, when I would move with a strong force into that district; but as it is quite uncertain when the battering-train can be ready, he earnestly urged that I should move into the district with such force as was immediately disposablc, and let the battering-train follow afterwards, if it should be found necessary. He assured me there were no guns in any of the forts, and that they would all submit on the appearance of a British force, particularly if I went in command of it myself: and as the detachments lately sent out have been so successful, I am willing to try what can be done without the heavy ordnance, if you approve of it, in which case I purpose moving after the return of Lieutenant Grant's detachment, with such force as can be conveniently spared from this post and Sultanpore into the Akburpore and Aldemow districts. Should you sanction this measure, some bildars will be necessary and coolies to carry the scaling-ladders, which I hope his Excellency will be pleased to order the Ameen to provide.

Major Richards being still at Sultanpore and under some apprehension of being attacked by the Zemindars as he passed down the Goomty with the treasure, I recommended his taking a reinforcement of two or three companies from Major Muller's battalion on the boats until he got into the Company's territory, when they might return by land to their post. This was two days ago, and I have not since heard of his departure, but suppose he must be off by this time, and make no doubt of his passing down unmolested. The object, however, being of importance, I deemed it proper to recommend a safe course.

The situation of affairs in the Aldemow district requiring immediate aid to the Ameen's authority, I shall write to Major Muller this day to detach into that district, on the return of such party as he may have sent with Major Richards, five or six companies with the field pieces attached to his battalion, to support Khajah Hafiz Alee Khan until I can join them with what cavalry and infantry can be spared from this post, with instructions to the officer who may command to endeavour to prevail upon the Zemindars to come in and settle with the Ameen, but not risk an attack on any fort, unless quite sure of success, until reinforced.

I have heard nothing further from General Stafford in regard to the equipment of the battering-train, and fear there will be a further delay.

Letter from Colonel Frith.

Extract from a Letter from Colonel Frith commanding the Troops at Purtaubgurh, dated the 23d of December 1814.

I have the honour to transmit for your information the copy of a letter I received last night from Lieutenant Grant, an arzee from Ishuree Bukhsh, or Ishuree Sing, for his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier; and also one from him to my address, on the subject of which I hope his Excellency will be pleased to send instructions to Nuneit Roy to make a settlement with Ishuree Bukhsh on equitable terms. An arzee from Nuneit Roy is also enclosed.

I have the honour further to acquaint you, that I received last night from Major-General Stafford the copy of a letter from the Adjutant-General, intimating that the calls upon the Ordnance Department would not admit of the battering-train at this post being equipped for service just now, consequently the expedition into the Akburpore and Aldemow districts must be relinquished until next season. However, as Major Muller informs me that he has sent four companies of sepoy with Hafiz Alee Khan into the Aldemow district, under the command of an intelligent officer, I hope the revenue will sustain no material injury from the delay.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government in the Secret and Political Department.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 21st instant, which reached me only to-day, and I regret that I could not have foreseen the difficulty which has recently arisen regarding the equipment of the battering-train at Purtaubgurh, when my first instructions were issued to the commanding officer at that station, in compliance with the requisition of the Vizier, for the support of his Excellency's officers and the suppression of his rebellious Zemindars.

2. My despatch of the 28th instant will have served to apprise his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General of the apparently urgent necessity of a compliance with the Vizier's requisition for the suppression of one Zemindar who has long resisted his authority, and would seem to have meditated an attack against a detachment of the Honourable Company's troops proceeding with treasure to the Presidency. Surboodoom Sing, Talookadar of Doorka, is the person to whom I allude; and the subjection of this person to the authority of the Vizier's Government, while it seems an object of essential importance to the restoration of the general tranquillity and realization of the public revenue in the districts of Akburpore and Aldemow, is a measure impracticable, I apprehend, save by the united operation for a time of the the troops at Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh, with the assistance of the battering guns which remain to be equipped at Purtaubgurh.

3. It is possible, however, that my recent instructions to Major Muller, and the measure adopted by that officer for the reinforcement of the escort with treasure, may have awed the Zemindar of Dooarka into a conduct more submissive to his sovereign and more consistent with his duty as a subject than that which he has hitherto pursued, and that the necessity for further operations may be thus happily superseded. At all events, I beg you to assure his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General of my implicit attention in future to the purport of his Lordship's commands, and also of my zealous endeavours to satisfy the mind of the Vizier on the subject of all future requisitions from his Excellency for the aid of the British troops, without directing any military operations that can occasion the smallest inconvenience of the nature described in your despatch.

1. I have the honour of transmitting to you, for the information of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, the enclosed copy of a letter (circular) under date the 21st ultimo, which I addressed to the commanding-officers of the several military stations in the territory of his Excellency the Vizier, in compliance with his Excellency's requisition, and in consequence of his recent appointment of Nazims, or collectors and magistrates, to the principal districts of his dominions.

2. I take this opportunity of submitting to the notice of his Lordship copies of my recent correspondence with Colonels Frith and Burrell and Major Lamborne, on the subject of the proceedings of those officers in support of the arrangements of reform, which have hitherto proceeded most successfully, notwithstanding the extraordinary disadvantages to which the measures of this Government have been subjected by the removal of so large a proportion of the usual quota of our troops from the duties of the interior of Oude.

3. The districts of Akburpore and Aldemow form the only exception to the remark which is stated in the foregoing paragraph. Those districts were in a state of disorder, if not of actual insurrection and rebellion, during a period of several years before the introduction of the reform, and the want of a sufficient force to reduce some powerful landholders in Akburpore, who are still in arms against the Government, has proved the only obstacle, in my opinion, to the complete and satisfactory establishment of the new system of administration throughout the dominions of the Vizier in the course of the present season.

4. I have hopes, however, of the accomplishment of this great and beneficial purpose without any additional force, by the measures which his Excellency the Vizier has recently adopted with my concurrence, as referred to in the

Sir:

1. Among the arrangements of his Excellency the Vizier for the better administration of his revenues, the appointment of Nazims, or Zillahdars, to perform the functions of collector and magistrate and to control the proceedings of the Tehsildars in the several districts of his dominions, is a measure which has long been in contemplation, and has recently been carried into effect, by the appointment of several natives of superior rank and consideration to execute the offices described: and of these, Rajah Bhowanee Pershaud has been nominated, and is now about to proceed, to the Zillah of Purtaubgurh and Sultanpore.

2. On the Rajah's arrival in his district he will have the honour of presenting or transmitting this letter to you, and is in future to be considered by you as the constituted local authority over all the districts around you, and the medium of all communications respecting the state of the Zillah at large, and of requisitions for the assistance of the troops.

3. You will accordingly be pleased to afford to him your uniform countenance and support in the discharge of the duties of his office, to consider him as the local representative of the Government in the Zillah of Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh, and as vested with authority to decide in all matters of revenue and police, and in disputes of every description between the subordinate officers and Zemindars; and you will further be pleased to comply with the Rajah's eventual requisitions for the aid of the British troops, in such cases as may appear to require it, with a view to maintain his authority in the districts committed to his charge.

1. In continuation of the subject of my letter under date the 21st ultimo, I have now the honour of informing you, that his Excellency the Vizier has been pleased to appoint Kooar Ruttun Chund to the office of Nazim or Zillahdar of all the districts of Byswarra, including Barellie and Dalmow.

2. Kooar Ruttun Chund is the son-in-law of Rajah Dya-Krishen, his Excellency the Vizier's Dewan, and is entitled on this account, as well as by the important nature of the office which he holds, to distinguished notice and consideration. He will have the honour of presenting or transmitting this letter to you shortly after his arrival in the district, and you will be pleased to receive and consider him as placed in the same situation, and as exercising similar authority

Sir :

The detachment under my command being ordered by his Excellency the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief to march to Saharunpore and Nahan, and in consequence having returned to Seetapore from the services on which it was employed in the districts of Sandee, Pallee, and Bangur, pursuant to the orders of his Excellency the Vizier, and your instructions, I consider it to be my duty, in justice to the Ameen of Sandee, Kootb-ood-Deen Hussun, to report to you for his Excellency's information, that through his zeal, exertions, and good conduct, the district of Sandee was restored to peace and tranquillity, and all the orders of his Government carried into execution ; and further, that by his aid, and the good conduct of Juswunt Sing, Ameen of Pallee, this district has been also speedily restored to peace and good order.

I have also much pleasure in reporting to you, that the great abilities and experience of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, Zillahdar, aided by the Ameen Agha Jan, with only two companies of my detachment under the command of Captain Lloyd, and the troops of his Excellency the Nawaub, brought the district of Bangur into such a state of peace and good order, as to enable him to dispense with the services of the two companies above-mentioned, by which means the corps under my command will commence its march for the important service it is ordered upon two days sooner than it otherwise could.

The pay of the troops for November, Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan had all ready on the arrival of the detachment at Tandeeawn, which was not detained a moment on that account.

In justice to Mirza Hadee, the Ameen of Loharpore, permit me to mention, that when the three flank companies of my corps were in November last ordered to proceed upon service, and he heard they would be detained some days for pay (which had not, when the orders for their march was received, left Lucknow), he immediately stepped forward and said they should not be delayed on that account, and offered the amount, which I gladly accepted, giving him my receipt for the same. I would and ought to have acquainted you with this circumstance (so much to the credit of Mirza Hadee) when it occurred, but he prevented me.

During the whole time the detachment was employed, both officers and men received every attention they could wish for, and I am happy to say, their very soldierly and conciliatory behaviour gave great satisfaction to every body at the different places of encampment. Permit me to assure you, Sir, that I am most highly gratified by your approval of my own conduct for having used my endeavours to accomplish your wishes, which have been so beneficial to his Highness's Government and done so much good to his subjects.

With my most thankful acknowledgment for the very essential aid I received from you, by the admirable mode you had the goodness to point out for the commanding-officer's conduct, when acting with the Zillahdar and Ameens of the Government of Oude, by following which I was prevented from erring, and performed the small part I had to act with success,

I have the honour to report to you that Major Lamborne, with the detachment of the second battalion of the Twenty-fourth Regiment Native Infantry under his command, marched into cantonments yesterday morning. The surveys will be completed to-day, and he will proceed to-morrow with his detachment and guns towards Tundeeawn, where I expect he will arrive on the 24th instant.

Major Lamborne has been furnished with all the necessary instructions for his guidance after his arrival at Tundeeawn.

I am in hopes the battalion under my command will be ready to march on the 23d instant, completely equipped for field service.

To J. Baillie, Esq. Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I have the honour to acquaint you that the detachment employed in the Bilkhur purgunnah returned to cantonments yesterday, the Ameen having settled with Dewan Zubber Sing, Bundeeshury Bukhsh, and some other Zemindars, who were backward in the payment of their revenue.

I have also the honour to acquaint you, that at the requisition of Meer Imām Alee, the Ameen of Purtaubghur, a detachment, consisting of a troop of cavalry and a company of sepoy, marched yesterday against some Zemindars in this district, who have manifested a refractory disposition and have been backward in the payment of their rents.

I have likewise to acquaint you, that Sheikh Shoojaut Alee, the Ameen of Manickpore, has applied for a force to go against Sewdut Sing, the Talookadar of Kuttoa, who is represented as being employed in repairing his fort and shewing other signs of a refractory disposition, and that I have in consequence ordered a detachment of cavalry and infantry to march to-morrow for the purpose of putting a stop to these proceedings.

Captain-Lieutenant Grant with the detachment under his command is still actively employed in putting Nuneit Roy in possession of ghurries (in order to be dismantled), which enable the Zemindars to resist the authority of Government.

I have further to report for your information, that the officers commanding the different detachments sent out from this post, as well as the Ameens employed in the different districts, represent the Nawaub's troops stationed with them to assist in the collection of the revenue as being in a most insubordinate and mutinous state ; that they will not attend to or obey any order, but plunder the villagers of their property and destroy the fields of grain in the most mischievous manner, and that they are consequently detested by the inhabitants, who are frequently forced by their oppression and injustice into resistance which they never intended ; and it is but justice to the Zemindars to state, that wherever the Company's troops have appeared they have submitted peaceably and delivered up their forts, on the mere assurance of the officer commanding that their persons and property would be protected.

purgunnah of Bilkhur after performing the service required, as also your compliance with requisitions from the Ameens of Purtaubghur and Manickpore for the support of their authority in these districts. Translations of this and of your former official letter, under date the 7th instant, have been submitted to his Excellency the Vizier, and his Excellency has desired me to convey to you his thanks for the readiness which you evince, and the judicious measures which you have adopted, to support the proceedings of his officers with a view to the realization of his revenue.

Sir :

I have the honour to acquaint you, that the detachment which marched on the 17th instant against several Zemindars in this district, at the requisition of the Ameen, has returned to cantonments, having satisfactorily effected the objects for which it was detached. I have also to acquaint you, that the officer commanding the detachment in the Manickpore district reports that Sewdut Sing had on his approach evacuated the fort of Kuttola, and had come to a settlement with the Ameen ; and that there appearing to be no further employment for the detachment in that district, I have directed the officer in command to proceed with it into the Dalmow district, to the support of the Ameen, Omrow Sing, who has sent a list of seven Zemindars who are backward in the payment of their rents, and in other respects refractory as he represents.

I have further to acquaint you, that the hostile intentions manifested by Shew Gholam Sing, the Zemindar of Shah Gurh, has obliged me to detach this morning, to reinforce Captain Grant, two companies of sepoys and the two six-pounders, which I hope will enable him to effect a speedy and satisfactory settlement, or if necessary punish the offender.

I have likewise to acquaint you, that the Magistrate at Elahabad has requested assistance for the purpose of seizing the chief of the decoits who plundered the treasure proceeding from Elahabad to this place some years ago, and whose haunt has lately been discovered. A small party of cavalry and infantry will accordingly march on this duty to-morrow morning.

Letter from Lieutenant Gerard.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I did myself the honour to acquaint you, a few days ago, of the command of the troops at this station having devolved to me, as senior officer, on the departure of Lieutenant-Colonel Muller; it is therefore incumbent on me now to inform you of the state of affairs here at the time I assumed charge, that I may be guided by your instructions, particularly with respect to the future measures necessary to be pursued in effecting the reduction of the numerous refractory Zemindars of the adjoining districts, especially those of Aldemow, who are in such a rebellious state and have been allowed to remain so long so, that the most petty landholders in it refuse to come to any kind of adjustment for the payment of their arrears of revenue with the Aumil, without a military force being employed to bring them to a due sense of their duty and submission to his authority. Many of them are in some degree become independent and set the Government at open defiance, which they are enabled to continue, by appropriating the revenue to the maintenance of considerable bodies of armed men to defend themselves when attacked, and to carry on a species of plundering warfare against their more peaceable neighbours, by which means they are also enabled to increase and support their adherents and fortify their villages. I take the liberty to observe, that the longer they are permitted to remain in this turbulent state, the greater will be the force required, and the more difficulties there will be to overcome in their reduction.

I entertain no doubt but Lieutenant-Colonel Muller, previous to his departure, duly communicated to you the operations of the detachment late under my command and at present under that of Lieutenant Robinson, which had the effect, without proceeding to extremities, of inducing Madhoo Sing, Talookadar of Dehrah, a man of considerable note in the district, to liquidate the sum of 10,000 rupees of his arrears of revenue, which I have no doubt will have some influence on others to follow his example. Since my arrival in cantonments, having been recalled for the purpose of receiving charge, the detachment before-mentioned has proceeded against Ishuree Bukhsh, Talookadar of Purnesputtee, distant about a coss and a half from Dehrah, who upon the approach of our troops deserted his village, in which he had fortified his house, and fled to an adjacent wood. A party was secretly detached on the night of the 29d to seize his person, if possible; but although completely surprised, he had the good fortune to effect his escape, and after having wandered about for some days has now taken refuge with his relation the rebellious Zemindar of Dooarka. Several of his followers with arms in their hands were laid hold of, and have been delivered to the Aumil, Hafiz Alee Khan.

The principal object of my thus addressing you is to represent the inadequacy of the force at present in the district of Aldemow under Lieutenant Robinson to proceed to active operations against the more powerful refractory Zemindars of Dooarka and Bidhur, who have not made the least attempt towards a reconciliation, nor have they shewed any disposition to liquidate their arrears of revenue, but on the contrary are daily strengthening themselves in their possessions and entertaining men to resist the just demands of Government. When dislodged from their present strong holds, it is their intention, I am given to understand, to seek refuge in the territories of the Honourable Company, where they are equally landholders as well as in the dominions of his Excellency the Nawaub.

In case the light companies in Oude are not called for to proceed on immediate service, as it was supposed they would be some days ago, Colonel Frith having advised that the company at this post should be held in readiness for that purpose, it can hereafter be spared to assist the detachment in Aldemow in the collection of the revenue and reduction of the refractory Zemindars.

To

To Lieutenant Gerard, commanding the Troops at Sultanpore.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 26th instant, and I beg your acceptance of my thanks for this early and explicit communication of the state of affairs in your district, which was rendered peculiarly desirable by the scanty communications to this office of your predecessor in the command of the troops.

2. I was fully aware of and regretted the inadequacy of the force under your command, which is now commanded by Lieutenant Robinson, to the reduction of the refractory landholders in the districts of Akburpore and Aldemow ; but, under the instructions which I had issued to Colonel Frith, I calculated on that officer's being enabled to detach a force to your aid, or to proceed in person to Aldemow, for the purpose of conducting the military operations in that quarter to a speedy and successful conclusion. In this expectation I have been necessarily hitherto disappointed by the numerous calls on Colonel Frith from the Vizier's officers in his neighbourhood for the aid of the troops under his command, and I have been induced by the Colonel's reports of the duties which he has had to perform, as well as by the state of the districts in the neighbourhood of the station of Sultanpore, to suspend the instructions which I had issued for the detachment of your light company and that of the battalion at Purtaubgurh to reinforce Major-General Wood.

3. This latter measure will, I presume, have been announced to you by Colonel Frith before your receipt of this letter, and will have enabled you to reinforce Lieutenant Robinson to the extent which you describe, should you deem such a reinforcement to be essential to the accomplishment of the objects in view.

4. But I am disposed to rest my hope of the subjection of the refractory landholders in your neighbourhood, and of the speedy restoration of tranquillity in the districts of Akburpore and Aldemow, on an arrangement which has been recently adopted by his Excellency the Vizier, at my suggestion, for the better government of those districts, and which I had the honour of announcing to the commanding-officers of Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh in my letters of the 21st instant, delivered to Rajah Bhuwanee Pershaud, the newly-appointed Nazim or Zillahdar.

5. This able and experienced officer is now on his way to Purtaubgurh, for the purpose of concerting with Colonel Frith the plan of operations to be adopted for the subjection of the refractory Zemindars and restoration of tranquillity in his districts, and you will receive from Colonel Frith in due time a communication of his sentiments and instructions on such parts of the duty to be performed as may be expected from the troops under your orders.

6. I rely with confidence on your able and zealous execution of the duties to be assigned to you by Colonel Frith, to whom a copy of this despatch shall be transmitted.

2. The peaceable state of the district of Khyrabad, as reported by Colonel Burrell before your arrival, and referred to in your recent despatches, supercedes the necessity for my detaining you in the command of the detachment at Tundeeawn, and you will be pleased to deliver over the command to the Extract from a Letter from Colonel Frith, commanding the Troops at Purtaubgurh, to Major Baillie, Resident at Lucknow, dated the 4th February 1815.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo with enclosures, to which due attention shall be paid. I am happy to learn from private accounts that the detachment employed in the Aldemow district has been making considerable progress of late in the settlement of that quarter.

I have also the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31st ultimo by express, and to acquaint you that the necessary orders were immediately given for recalling the several detachments of cavalry : having last night received the orders of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the Eighth Regiment of Cavalry will march towards Goruckpore, under the command of Major O'Brien, as soon as pay arrives and the several detachments join, which I hope will be in three or four days.

I have much satisfaction in acquainting you that the fort of Shah-Gurh was evacuated on the 1st instant. Captain Grant's official report I have the honour to enclose for your information. To the temper and moderation observed by him on this occasion, as well as to the judgment and ability with which he has conducted conducted the whole of the service upon which he has lately been employed, I feel greatly indebted.

The detachment sent out to seize the notorious offender Bhloodhie, at the requisition of the Magistrate of Elahabad, returned to cantonments yesterday, having failed in the object for which it was sent out, owing to the offender having taken refuge in a small fort in the Begum's jagier to which they were refused admittance.

No complaints have lately been made against any of the Zemindars in the districts dependent on this post; and as the new Zillahdar appears to be very popular, I hope the collections will be realized without further trouble, or any calls of consequence on the Company's troops.

I beg leave to acquaint you that I have received orders from his Excellency the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief to proceed with all convenient expedition to the command to which I had the honour of being appointed lately by Government, and that I propose leaving this on the 5th instant and proceeding by the route of Lucknow.

I had yesterday the honour to report to you that the ghurry of Shah-Gurh had been evacuated, about eleven o'clock A. M., by Sew Gholam Sing and his followers, and my having placed two companies in it under Lieutenant Baumgardt, whom I directed to remain in the place with the Ameen until the works shall have been completely destroyed and the ditch filled up. The ghurry was given up solely through the negotiation of Rajah Bhuwance Pershaud's Vakeel, who came into my camp yesterday morning and informed me that his master had sent him to the fort to desire that it might be given up, which the owner, Sew Gholam Sing, immediately agreed to do, provided a guard of the Company's sepoy should be sent in to protect some private property which was to be left in the place.

Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, and I have it in command from the Right Honourable the Governor-General to express to you his Lordship's entire satisfaction in having learned the progress which has already been made in the establishment of the new system, notwithstanding the unfavourable circumstances under which the reform was attempted, in consequence of the exigencies of the public service having occasioned the removal of a large proportion of the British force usually stationed in Oude.

You will be pleased to express to his Excellency the Vizier the satisfaction felt by the Governor-General on this occasion, and to state his Excellency's hope that no consideration will induce his Excellency to abandon a plan so pregnant with advantage to his interests, and hitherto so successfully pursued.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir:

I have had the honour to receive your public letter, under date the 28th ultimo, acquainting me with the plan of arrangements in agitation to effect the reduction of the neighbouring Zemindars and to restore tranquillity to the surrounding districts, which is a measure daily becoming more desirable, and the longer protracted, will, of course, become still more difficult in the execution.

I have been in constant expectation of being favoured with some communication from Colonel Frith, relative to the accomplishment of this object, which I was led to look for from the tenor of your letter. I have, however, been hitherto

hitherto disappointed in my hopes, and have now relinquished every prospect of hearing from him on this subject, as I perceive by General Orders lately published that he is appointed to the command of the frontier stations of Agra and Muttrah, and am given to understand he has marched from Purtaubgurh for that purpose.

Letter from
Lieutenant Gerard

In consequence of Colonel Frith's total silence respecting any preparations that might be in forwardness for the prosecution of this business, nothing has as yet been undertaken by me here towards it, although every thing has been kept in a state of readiness, as I waited for his instructions and the benefit of his advice, particularly as the force at my disposal is inadequate to any effectual operations being commenced against the more powerful Talookadars of Dooarka and Bidhur, upon the submission or reduction of whom, in a great measure, depends that of the whole of the adjacent districts.

Since my last communication, I have little to add respecting the progress of the operations of the detachment at present on service in Aldemow, which has lately been principally employed in forcing the inferior Zemindars to come to a settlement with the Aumil for the liquidation of their arrears of revenue.

I have had no intelligence of the approach of the Nazim, Rajah Bhuwanee Pershaud, to this post, except the intimation conveyed in your letter. I trust his exertions may prove successful in restoring tranquillity to the surrounding districts. Be assured nothing shall be wanting on my part, as far as I possess the means, to assist him in his endeavours.

Sir :

I did myself the honour to address you on the 6th instant, respecting the progress of the detachment under the command of Lieutenant Robinson, employed in Aldemow, since which period little or nothing has been effected, in consequence of the expected arrival of the Nazim, and the Aumil having proceeded to Jugdeespoor for the purpose of paying his respects to him. I also took the liberty of pointing out the inadequacy of that force for the collection of the revenue and effectual reduction of that turbulent district, unless joined by a considerable reinforcement, without which I do not judge it advisable to direct any operations to be commenced against the more powerful Talookadars, upon whose submission entirely depends that of the inferior Zemindars.

I now beg leave to submit for your consideration, decision, and instructions, the propriety of allowing the detachment to remain out longer, or to withdraw it until a competent force can be spared, and measures adopted for the effectual reduction of the surrounding turbulent districts.

I have not had any intelligence of the approach of the Nazim, Rajah Bhuwance Pershaud, nor when I can expect his arrival at this station.

I did myself the pleasure to forward, in my letter under date the 8th instant, an extract of a requisition from T. Fortescue, Esq., Judge and Magistrate, for the seizure of some thieves who resided in a village about six coss distant from hence, and at the same time acquainting you that I had taken measures, in concert with the Aumil of Sultanpore, for their apprehension. I now beg leave to inform you, that we were fortunate enough to lay hold of two of the persons named, men of no character or consequence, whom I forwarded under escort to Elahabad.

To Lieutenant Gerard, commanding at Sultanpore.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your several letters that are noted in the margin.*

2. Being aware of the inadequacy of the force which is at present employed in Aldemow to the reduction of the turbulent Zemindars and realization of the revenue in that district, and having also had reason to apprehend that the state of the districts of Purtaubgurh, Ahmety, and Dalmow, would not for the present admit of your receiving any essential aid from Colonel Frith or his successor Major Cumberlege, I could have looked to your detachment for no more than the preservation of that authority which remained to the officers of the Vizier's Government at the date of my former instructions, and which appeared to be sufficient, with the presence of your detachment in Aldemow, to preclude additional disorder, until circumstances might admit of your reinforcement by some troops from the station of Purtaubgurh, or till the arrival of Rajah Bhuwance Pershaud with a considerable force in the district should enable you, in concert with that officer, to adopt more effectual measures than we have hitherto been entitled to expect.

3. Rajah Bhuwance Pershaud has been hitherto prevented from proceeding to the district of Aldemow, by his necessary occupation in the settlement of a number of intermediate districts; but I have every reason to hope that he will soon arrive in your neighbourhood, and after collecting all the troops of the Vizier which are now scattered throughout his districts, will be enabled, with your assistance and advice, and in co-operation with such troops as you can spare, to take such measures as must quickly establish the general tranquillity of the country and reduce the refractory Zemindars.

4. I shall take an early opportunity of submitting to the consideration of his Excellency the Vizier the propriety of his ordering the Nazim to proceed to Sultanpore without delay, and, in the contemplation of his speedy arrival, it seems expedient that the detachment at Aldemow should remain in that district for the present, unless you have reason to apprehend the possibility of its receiving a check (continuing inactive as at present) before the arrival of the Nazim, in which case it must, of course, be recalled to await his arrival at Sultanpore.

5. I

* 6th, 8th, and 18th February 1816.

Extract from a Letter from Major Cumberlege, commanding the Troops at Puraubgurh, to the Resident at Lucknow, dated the 18th February 1815.

Letter from Major Cumberlege.

Ensign Jones, who was detached on the 23d ultimo into the Manickpore district to assist the Ameen in his collections, writes me that the Zemindars came in and made their settlements with Omrow Sing to their mutual satisfaction, in consequence of which he moved towards Dalmow, agreeably to former instructions received from Colonel Frith, to bring in some refractory Zemindars, who had been rather backward in their payments and had refused to come to any settlement with the Ameen.

One of these Zemindars, by name Sheo Pershaud of Sunkerpore, whose fort was destroyed about four years ago by Colonel Palmer, has been allowed, through the negligence of the Vizier's officers, to put it again in complete repair. It is said to be very strong and surrounded with jungle; and from his having garrisoned the place with five hundred matchlocks, it does not appear likely that he will agree to have it destroyed, unless compelled by a superior force.

The detachment under Ensign Jones consisting only of one company, and the force under the Ameen being every way contemptible, I have instructed him to avoid hostilities if possible, and endeavour by every means in his power to effect a settlement between the Ameen and Zemindar. It is true I could reinforce him; but not having now above four hundred effective men under my command and two six-pounders, I should consider the whole of it very inadequate to the reduction of a fort of that description; therefore think it better to temporize until a battering train can be procured, or till the arrival of Kooar Ruttun Chund, who may perhaps be furnished with a more respectable force and some heavy guns.

I am sorry to say, that since I have been at this station, every officer who has been sent on command has complained of the insolence and insubordination of the Vizier's troops. They are universally detested and despised, and plunder wherever they go: it is, therefore, very necessary that some reform in their discipline should take place, being in their present state worse than useless, and only formidable to the industrious and peaceable Ryot. One great error, I conceive, in the present system, is that of allowing corps to remain stationary for years together. Those in this district have been ten or twelve years on the same spot, during which time they have never moved, except to attend the Ameens on their collections, and even then half the men can hardly be collected. The guns are in as bad a state as the troops, as Ensign Jones mentions that the one Omrow Sing has with him is in such bad repair that he does not believe the carriage will hold together twenty rounds, should he have occasion to use it.

I have, perhaps, said more on the foregoing subject than may appear to you necessary; but from what I have heard relative to the number of troops in this district belonging to his Excellency the Vizier, if they were only tolerably paid and disciplined, they would be fully sufficient for the collections, which would be a great relief to the regulars.

I have not yet received any communication from Rajah Bhuwanee Pershaud, nor do I know what force he has brought with him from Lucknow, but I understand that most of the landholders have attended upon him at Jugdeespore, and that there is every prospect of the revenues being realized in this district. The arrival of Kooar Ruttun Chund in that of Byswarra would tend greatly to facilitate the settlement of that also without further disturbance.

I should

I should be glad of your instructions relative to furnishing detachments. Am I to comply with the requisitions of the Zillahdars or Ameens at once, or wait for your answer on the subject?

Letter

To Major Cumberlege, commanding at Purtaubgurh.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 18th instant, reporting the march of Ensign Jones's detachment towards Dalmow, after effecting a settlement of affairs in the district of Manickpore.

2. I am fully aware of the inadequacy of the detachment at present in Dalmow, even reinforced to the utmost extent which you have the means of reinforcing it, to the reduction of such a fortress as you describe: but I trust that the presence of the detachment, as affording encouragement and support to the officers of the Vizier's Government, may induce Sheo Pershaud to submit, and eventually to surrender his fortress, on the arrival of Kooar Ruttun Chund in the district, attended as that officer will be by a considerable force of the Vizier's to be collected from all the districts surrounding, and I believe by some troops from Lucknow.

3. I am sensible of the justness of your remarks on the state of the troops of the Vizier; and so, indeed, is his Excellency, to whom I have regularly submitted the information on this subject conveyed to me by your predecessor in the command at Purtaubgurh. A reform is meditated, I know; and I shall not fail to take advantage of every opportunity which may offer of urging the necessity of its adoption with the least practicable delay.

4. Rajah Bhuwanee Pershaud has been hitherto prevented from proceeding in the direction of your post by his necessary occupation in the settlement of a number of intermediate districts. It is his intention and the command of the Vizier, that he should now proceed to Aldemow with all practicable expedition, to endeavour to restore the tranquillity of that most turbulent district, in which I could wish, if it were practicable, that the detachment from Sultanpore were reinforced by some companies from the battalion at Purtaubgurh. But on this subject it formed a part of my instructions to your predecessor to communicate with the commanding-officer at Sultanpore, and to assist him in as far as might be practicable.

5. In answer to the concluding paragraph of your letter, it seems expedient that the requisitions of the Zillahdars be complied with in all cases where the nature of the required service may be such as to afford the certainty of its immediate accomplishment by the force to be employed, without any hazard of a failure, or necessity for additional troops, or for the aid of a battering-train, which you are aware cannot now be afforded.

Sir :

I have great pleasure in acquainting you that the refractory Zemindars of Neer attended Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan this morning, and submitted to the recent orders of His Excellency the Nawaub for cutting down the jungle in his Zemindary. In consequence of the extreme obstinacy and folly of these Zemindars, in refusing to comply with the orders of their sovereign, after being repeatedly and in the strongest manner advised by the officers of the British Government and that of Oude to return to obedience, it was determined by Hukeem Mehdee and myself that the village (in which were a number of armed men prepared for resistance) should be be attacked this morning, and the troops of His Excellency were accordingly paraded for the purpose, Captain Buchanan's detachment being ready to support them; when these refractory people, finding they were likely to meet with the punishment they so justly deserved, thought proper to come into camp and make their submission as above-mentioned. Workmen were immediately employed in cutting down the jungle, and a party of His Excellency's troops are now posted in the village. Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan says he wishes to have three companies to remain in the district for some time, but I have recommended to him to keep the whole of the detachment here for the present, which he agrees will be better than a smaller force. I am in hopes that in a short time the greater part of the detachment may return to their cantonments, as the Bangur district may now be considered in a perfect state of tranquillity.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 21st instant, conveying the satisfactory intelligence of the submission of the Zemindars of Neer, and the occupation of their village by a party of the Vizier's troops for the purpose of cutting down the jungle, &c., by which it had been heretofore defended, and the Zemindars had been enabled to resist the just authority of the Government.

2. This truly satisfactory result of an affair, which might have occasioned some trouble, is ascribable chiefly, in my opinion, to the effect of your presence in the district, and of the judicious conduct which you pursued during the whole of the recent operations in the districts of Sandee and Khyrabad. I take this opportunity of informing you, that his Excellency the Vizier and his officers in the districts contiguous to your Zillah, have recently often complained of the protection afforded to a number of refractory and defaulting Zemindars by their flight across the frontier of this country into parts of their own estates, and into those of other Zemindars which are within the jurisdiction of your Court, and I deem it to be my duty to suggest to you the propriety of taking

To R. O. Wynne, Esq., Magistrate of Jounpore.

Sir :

I have the honour to report for your information, that I arrived at Puttee this morning with the military detachment you directed me to accompany, in your letter of instructions of the 15th instant.

We were informed by the Thanadar and others, that Sheodial and his adherents had evacuated their fortified houses and proceeded into the Nawaub Vizier's country, together with all the inhabitants of the large town of Puttee. At an early hour this morning I thought it advisable to proceed with a party of the military to examine two of the ghurries belonging to Sheodial and his brothers. They appear to be places well calculated to hold out against any others than regular sepoys: they are built on the scale of the old forts which were destroyed some years ago by Captain Patrickson: the walls are of mud with loop-holes for matchlock firing. I am given to understand that the Rajkoomars are in some force at no great distance from this. Directions have been given to the Thanadars to place Burkundauzes in the town, to see that none of the camp-followers or others enter the houses for the sake of plunder, and I have thought it expedient to issue a proclamation, a copy of which accompanies this.

The country round appears to be in a high state of cultivation and the crops nearly ready for the siekle. You may think proper, eventually, to make them over to the actual Talookadar. I speak of that tract which is at present in the possession of Sheodial and his brothers. Should, however, this be your intention, the presence of a force will be necessary to protect the harvest people. From the appearance of the fortified houses belonging to Sheodial and his adherents, I should recommend for your consideration that they be entirely demolished before the return of the military detachment to Jounpore.

I beg to be favoured with any further instructions you may have to communicate.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 19th instant with its enclosure, a continuation of the proceedings of your court conveyed by a former despatch, which had been already submitted to the Vizier.

2. The Nazim of Sultanpore and of all the districts to the eastward, Rajah Barwanee Pershaud, an able and intelligent officer who has recently been appointed to that station, is now proceeding towards Aldemow, contiguous to the frontier of your Zillah, where a considerable detachment of our troops is at present employed in the reduction of some turbulent and rebellious Zemindars, and where the Nazim, on his arrival, is instructed to co-operate zealously with Mr. Lowther, in the first instance, for the seizure of the delinquent Sheodial, and afterwards to require Mr. Lowther's assistance and the support of your authority for the apprehension of any defaulters against the Government of his Excellency the Vizier, who have found an asylum in your district.

3. It is superfluous to repeat the suggestion which was offered in my former despatch, of the great advantage that must arise to the interests of both States from the zealous and cordial co-operation of the public officers of both in the seizure of offenders against either, who seek refuge in the territory of the other. I have impressed both his Excellency the Vizier and his Excellency's Nazim of Sultanpore with a perfect conviction of this truth; and the latter is prepared, if I mistake not, to co-operate most cordially with you on every future occasion. A similar disposition on your part, which I am fully persuaded that you entertain, will, I trust, speedily lead to the entire and successful accomplishment of the objects of both parties.

The enclosed copy of an express from Rajah Bhuwanee Pershaud reached me at twelve o'clock last night, and upon questioning the Hurkarras, having reason to believe that the mutiny in his camp was of an alarming nature, and if not speedily checked might occasion serious consequences and prove prejudicial to the Rajah's authority in the district, I immediately ordered Captain Grant to proceed with five companies and the two six-pounders to his assistance, and have the pleasure to inform you that the whole marched by three o'clock this morning.

2. I expect to receive accounts from Captain Grant in a few hours, and will let you know the result immediately.

3. It is stated to me that the mutiny arose from the Rajah's dismissing a toomun for plundering, but I have yet no accounts that can be depended upon. I have, however, instructed Captain Grant to support the Rajah's authority at all risks, being well convinced of the disorderly conduct manifested on all occasions by his Excellency the Vizier's troops.

From the report of Captain Grant received this morning, I am in hopes every thing will be speedily adjusted, as all hostilities had ceased, though the mutineers had not returned to their duty.

As Rajah Bhuwanee Pershaud does not seem to wish for reinforcements, I have not called upon the officer commanding at Sultanpore for assistance. Indeed, it rather appears to me that the Rajah is inclined to think any further interference would but increase the disaffection of his Excellency the Vizier's troops, in consequence of which I have abstained from proceeding to camp as I had intended.

I beg again to say, that I should not hesitate a moment in going out to the Rajah's camp could I be of the smallest service to him; but as every circumstance relative to the mutiny has been referred to the Nawaub for his decision, I do not consider my presence at all necessary. I have also to state, that having made every inquiry relative to the mutiny, not the smallest blame can be in any way attached to Rajah Bhuwanee Pershaud: indeed, every part of his conduct since he has been in this neighbourhood has been such as to give satisfaction, and I consider him every way fit for the situation he is placed in. It is only to be lamented that the troops of his Excellency the Vizier are in so disorderly and mutinous a state that the Rajah cannot possibly place the smallest dependence upon them.

Letter from Lieutenant Gerard.

I have the honour to transmit, for your information, a copy of a public letter received yesterday from Lieutenant Robinson, commanding the force detached from this station in Aldemow. I have little to add to the detailed account therein contained of the operations against the strong hold of Gopaulpore, but to express my satisfaction at the steady behaviour of the troops engaged, as mentioned by Lieutenant Robinson, and to regret the casualties that have unfortunately happened in this affair, although of a trifling nature considering the numerous party that defended a place of such strength and so difficult of access.

The Jemadar who was wounded is, I am happy to acquaint you, doing extremely well, and I entertain little doubt of his speedy recovery; so that the total loss we shall have sustained on our part on this occasion will be, I hope, only one sepoy killed.

I trust that the example made by the necessary measures adopted on this occasion, will have its due influence in restraining such unprovoked and outrageous treatment in future, by the turbulent and lawless Zemindars of that district, of the public servants attending the detachment, who could seldom venture from camp in the performance of their duty, without meeting with the like maltreatment and violence of the villagers, who no doubt were instigated to such conduct by their refractory superiors, as appears to have been the case in the present instance from the positive refusal (and menaces of the head Zemindar of Gopaulpore) to deliver up, when demanded, the delinquents to the authority of the Aumil, upon his requiring him to do so in a regular and peaceable manner.

I am informed that the villagers of Gopaulpore had the audacity and unprovoked insolence to maltreat several of the public servants who went merely to their village, which they had not even entered, for the purpose of purchasing fodder for their cattle, and one of them to that degree of severity as to endanger the man's life, who still continues ill; for which reason, together with numerous other acts of rebellion and outrageous conduct on their part, and in support of the authority of the Aumil, it was found necessary to proceed against them to inflict the punishment they so justly merited.

I am happy now to communicate the favourable result of this affair, which will appear from a perusal of the copy of Lieutenant Robinson's despatch on this occasion, which terminated in the evacuation of this strong hold. I have given instructions for the demolition and rasure of the defences of the place.

Perhaps it may be satisfactory to acquaint you that I daily expect the arrival of Captain Duncan to assume the command of the troops at this station.

Sir :

My former correspondence will have acquainted you with the wanton and unprovoked outrage committed by the inhabitants of the fortified village of Gopaulpore on the persons of some of the public servants, whilst employed in the execution of their duty. Having consulted with the Aumil, Hafiz Alee Khan, on the steps proper to be taken, he gave it as his opinion, that from this circumstance, as well as in conformity to the instructions he had received from his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier to allow of no strong-holds in the district, it would be advisable to destroy the place, more particularly as these people had on other recent occasions evinced a disposition to resist legal authority. It was, however, our wish to accomplish this object without coming to extremities; for which purpose a messenger was sent by the Aumil to the head-man, requiring his attendance, that he might have an opportunity of justifying the conduct of his people, were it capable of any palliation, and to acquaint him of the determination that had been made respecting his place. So far from having:

having listened to this message, the bearer on approaching to deliver it had a spear thrown at him. This conduct alone called for immediate punishment, and afforded a convincing proof of their hostile intentions. However, still willing to allow the man every opportunity of exculpating himself, by a disavowal of his participation in the violent proceedings complained of, and that they had occurred without his knowledge, also indulging an expectation that a message from me might meet with a better reception, I despatched a trusty non-commissioned officer, accompanied by another man from the Aumil. This expectation was however frustrated, by their returning with an account of having been refused an opportunity of delivering their message, and cautioned to avoid coming near the place, as the people declined any communication with either the Aumil or myself. I feel persuaded you will concur with me, that I now had no alternative left but that of attacking the place: for which purpose I moved down the detachment on the morning of the 2d instant, and endeavoured to force the gate-way; but finding after a few rounds from the guns that the object was impracticable, I withdrew the troops, and having after a very careful inspection fixed upon a point on the west side, which appeared to be least difficult of access, proceeded to construct a battery opposite to it; but before a practicable breach could be effected the people had entered into negotiations with the Aumil for the surrender of the place, on condition of being permitted to retire unmolested. With the concurring opinion of the Aumil I was induced to grant their request, from a conviction that an attempt to storm would, even if successful, be attended with most severe loss, whilst the enemy would on our gaining the breach have been able to effect their escape with perfect impunity, from the insufficiency of our numbers to surround the place so as to cut off their retreat. They were therefore allowed to quit the place by the opposite side, which they did about eleven o'clock this morning, to the number of nearly two hundred men, and it was immediately taken possession of. An examination of the defences of the place afforded me reason to congratulate myself on having obtained possession in this manner. These defences consisted in a triple row of bamboos, each closely interwoven, with a broad and deep ditch between each row, whilst every inch of ground within the enclosure was of a nature to be disputed with that advantage to the inhabitants which a knowledge of its strength conferred. It is with much concern I have to report, that in the execution of this service one sepoy was killed and the Jemadar of artillery severely wounded. I have not been able to ascertain the loss sustained by our opponents: report says they had five killed.

It gives me great pleasure to be able to bear testimony to the good conduct of the whole detachment on this occasion.

Agreeably to your instructions I propose moving to-morrow morning towards Puttee, for the purpose of co-operating with Mr. Lowther.

Sir :

1. In continuation of my reply to your letter of the 2d instant, I beg leave to state that I perfectly coincide with you in the opinion, that the military detachment now here under the command of Lieutenant Burton should be returned to its duties at Jounpore as soon as circumstances will possibly admit of it, taking into consideration the responsibility and heavy charge of the jail-guards, as now performed by common Burkundauzes.

2. As it would appear that no additional military force can at present be spared from Benares, I think it would be highly advantageous to the service I am employed in, if you could have orders given for the troops now in the neighbourhood to co-operate with me (a detachment of two companies of the Second Regiment Native Infantry with guns, under the command of Lieutenant Robinson, are at Aldemow, a purgunnah in his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier's dominions, distant only eight coss), since I am inclined to think that his Excellency would have no hesitation in allowing one of the companies to be stationed at Puttee, as from the instructions I have had the honour to receive from you, I am directed to co-operate with his officers in assisting in the apprehension of his delinquent Zemindars who have taken refuge in this district; and the Vakeel from Hafiz Alea Khan, the Nawaub Vizier's Aumil at purgunnah Aldemow, having yesterday presented a list of the defaulting Zemindars, it is my intention to give the requisite orders and assistance for their apprehension as soon as I have arranged matters more immediately connected with my deputation.

I may add to the above, that the very rebels I am now endeavouring to get hold of act in concert with his Excellency's Zemindars, and have continually given protection to his refractory subjects, as I have already stated to you in a former letter, and it is very evident that securing these chiefs and their adherents will likewise greatly contribute to the peace and tranquillity of his Excellency's frontier territory.

4. In conclusion, I beg leave to suggest that you will make an application to the Resident at Lucknow to request that orders may be given that one of the companies at Aldemow be ordered to Puttee; and in the event of this meeting the approbation of his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, the company now here under the command of Lieutenant Burton may be withdrawn and return to take the duties at Jounpore.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

1. I deem it to be my duty to lay before you, for the notice and consideration of the Governor-General, some circumstances which have been brought to my knowledge, and some conjectures which have arisen in my mind respecting the purposes of his Excellency the Vizier, connected with the deputation of his Ministers to wait on his Lordship at Futtygurh, independent of those objects which are specified in his Excellency's paper of requests.

2. I have observed with concern and anxiety, during a period of two or three months, the gradual diminution of the influence of the Minister, Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, and also of that of the Dewan, over the mind of his Excellency the Vizier. I have ascribed this unfortunate decline to two or three principal causes, in addition to that natural jealousy which is ever known to subsist among the courtiers of an Indian prince, and which induces the servants out of power to seek the destruction of favourites by every artifice and device.

3. Shortly after the appointment of the Ministers, they were naturally enough, though most insidiously, represented to his Excellency the Vizier by some designing persons around him as the servants of the British Government rather than his own, as having been appointed, in fact, by the Governor-General, receiving their khillats from his hand, and as pledged by that appointment to accomplish all such objects as our Government might propose to them for the furtherance of its own interests, without regard to the advantage of their master. The early effect of this insinuation on the mind of his Excellency the Vizier was probably to occasion a distrust of his Excellency's Ministers, and disincline him to receive their suggestions, from an idea that they were dictated by our Government; while, on the other hand, this idea may have induced him, from apprehension rather than on conviction, to acquiesce in their suggestions for a time; and thus the temporary success of their administration may be accounted for in a satisfactory manner, without weakening the grounds of the supposition that the Vizier was indisposed to their measures very recently after their appointment.

4. My negotiation with his Excellency the Vizier for a second loan of money to the Company, which Moatumud-ood-Dowlah assisted most zealously, formed an argument to his enemies in support of the base insinuation above noticed, which they used with considerable effect, by representing the loan as a robbery committed on his Excellency's treasury by the Minister at my instigation.

5. The reform of the Vizier's administration, which his Excellency originally acquiesced in with apparent cordiality and readiness, and of which the Ministers are the principal instruments, has of late been exhibited to his Excellency as a mean of circumscribing his power, and increasing the expenses of his government without any advantage to himself.

6. That odious engine of oppression in the hands of an Indian sovereign, the department of Akhbar, or Intelligence, more properly a system of espionage, which pervaded every district of this country as well as its Capital and

Court during the life-time of the late Vizier, and formed a ground for the daily imprisonment of some subject or servant of his Government, with a view to confiscation or forfeiture, had been utterly abolished in the Capital on the accession of the present Vizier, and its universal abolition or supersession by the arrangements of police in the interior, which formed a principal branch of the reform, had been frequently suggested to his Excellency and pressed on the consideration of his Ministers, as indispensable, in my judgment, not only to the happiness of the people, but to the peace of the sovereign's mind. The expense of it alone is nearly equal to that of an efficient police; and the channels of corruption and oppression which it opens, by encouraging false accusations and creating suspicion and distrust, are destructive of every virtue in the people, as well as of the security of their persons and property, and of the peace and happiness of their ruler.

7. The Vizier has been led to believe by some designing persons around him who are jealous of the Minister's influence, that the object of the abolition of this department is to increase the Minister's power, by circumscribing his Excellency's means of obtaining intelligence of his proceedings, and of the conduct of the Nazims and Tehsildars, as well as the subordinate officers of his Excellency's household and Court, and the revival of a department of intelligence, or rather a system of espionage, conducted by the Minister's enemies under the especial patronage of his Excellency, bids fair for the total subversion of the Minister's influence and authority over every branch of the administration, which his absence on the deputation to Futtygurh will probably tend to accelerate.

8. His Excellency has, I fear, been encouraged to those measures of opposition to the Minister, by insinuations, on the part of his enemies, that he is no longer regarded by the Governor-General with that degree of favour and confidence which his Lordship originally reposed in him, and that his Lordship's refusal of those observances of respect and consideration for the Minister which were shown to his predecessors in office is to be ascribed, in a principal degree, to a change in his Lordship's sentiments with regard to Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, which his enemies pretend to have been occasioned by complaints that have reached the Governor-General since his Lordship's arrival at Futtygurh.

9. Of the falsehood of all those complaints the Vizier must be perfectly satisfied, and in all probability knows that the actual instigators of the complaints are the persons who have long been endeavouring to poison his mind against the Minister. Yet the fickleness of his Excellency's disposition and the weakness of his understanding, I fear, are such as daily to subject him to the influence of the most flimsy artifices and designs, by persons as unworthy of his confidence, or even of admission to his presence, as their purposes are hostile to his happiness and to the interests of his Government and ours.

10. The consequence of the practices of those persons is already apparent, to the extent of his Excellency's total disregard of some useful suggestions by the Minister on several points of reform, more particularly the department of Akhbar, and his Excellency's recent employment of some persons to subordinate offices, who are known to be inimical to the Minister, in the room of others displaced, who were originally appointed at his suggestion.

11. The departure of the deputation to Futtygurh is reported to be the signal for the dismissal of every officer that remains who has a share of the Minister's confidence, and the appointment of his enemies in their room, for the purpose, as is stated, of impeding, as well as of bringing into discredit, the whole of the measures of reform, which may in consequence hereafter be branded as inefficient and productive of loss of revenue to the Vizier, by reason of the mismanagement of his officers, during the absence of the Minister and Dewan. This measure, it is said, will be followed, if it have not been already preceded, by the secret deputation of an agent on the part of his Excellency the Vizier to convey his complaints against the Ministers, and perhaps against me for supporting them, to the ear of the Governor-General, who is falsely reported and believed, on the ground of some former occurrences, to be unfaunfavourably disposed towards me. The support which I have thought myself at liberty to afford to the Minister and Dewan has never extended beyond advice on such public affairs of the administration as they themselves have submitted for my consideration, or answers to such questions from the Vizier as his Excellency has put to me respecting them.

12. Having thus, as concisely as possible, described to you, for his Lordship's information, the view which I take with reluctance, though I consider it as unquestionably a just one, of the state of intrigues at this Court, it is needless and might be considered presumptuous, to offer any suggestions to his Lordship on the propriety of checking those intrigues, or the most effectual method of doing so. I foresee, on the one hand, from their success, the total subversion of the reform with the disgrace and dismissal of the Ministers, and the destruction of the British influence in Oude during the remainder of the reign of this Nawaub; and I augur, on the other hand, from their failure, by the countenance and favour to be publicly shewn to the Ministers during their attendance on the Governor-General, and by such other more effectual measures as his Lordship's wisdom may suggest, the successful conduct of the reform, and of the general administration of this Government under the influence of the British counsels, which should always, I think, be maintained, as conducive not only to the advantage of the British interests in this country, but also, in an eminent degree, to the happiness of the people of Oude and to the true interests of their Sovereign.

1. I have this day received from the Vizier, and transmitted to the Persian Secretary, a letter addressed by his Excellency to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, requesting his Lordship's sanction of the abolition of that part of the new system of assessment and collection of the revenue in his Excellency's dominions, which provides for a commission to the Tehsildars in lieu of the charges of collection.

2. His Excellency did me the honour to transmit to me a draft of his letter to the Governor-General in a letter to my own address, a translation of which, and a copy of my answer to it, are enclosed. The letter to the Governor-General, however, was received for transmission to his Lordship before I had time to prepare a communication of my sentiments regarding it; and I ascribe this sudden resolution of the Vizier to an apprehension excited in his mind by some designing persons around him, of my remonstrating against the tenor of his letter, and the tendency of the proposition which it conveys to frustrate the reform of his Government.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
4 July 1815.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

3. My despatch of the 29th ultimo will have prepared the mind of the Governor-General for the change in the counsels of the Vizier which has led to his present proposition. The successful conduct of the reform is, in my mind, utterly impracticable, under the influence of the pernicious counsels by which the Vizier is guided at present; but as any attempt upon my part to counteract the influence of those counsels, during the absence of his Excellency's Ministers would not only be futile and vain, but would also appear to be incompatible with the rules of conduct prescribed to me in your despatch of the 12th November last, I have deemed it to be my duty to refrain from offering any advice to his Excellency on the subject of his letter to the Governor-General, or the tendency of the proposal which it conveys.

4. My opinion on the question at issue is favourable to the continuance of the commission of ten per centum on the revenue, in lieu of the charges of collection for a period of two or three years, till the revenue shall be permanently settled and security for the payment of it obtained from the landholders or possessors of estates, so as to supersede the security of the Tehsildars, which is one of the principal objects of granting them a commission on the revenue. Another advantage, however, is that of insuring their zeal and fidelity in the proper assessment of their districts, with a view to their own interest, which is involved in the benefit of the State, arising from the increase of its revenue on the one hand, and on the other in a due consideration of the rights of the several landholders, since an over-assessment of the lands would preclude the realization of the revenue, and subject the Tehsildars, or their sureties, to make good the amount of the defalcations arising from the inability of the landholders to fulfil their engagements with the State.

5. The measure proposed by the Vizier to be substituted for the appointment of Tehsildars enjoying a commission on the revenue, is that recently adopted in our territory, of employing revenue officers, with a salary and establishment of subordinates in the immediate pay of the Government. This measure may probably answer in the course of a few years in his Excellency's territory as in ours, when the security of the revenue shall be otherwise provided for in the manner above explained; but at present I foresee the result of the arrangement proposed by his Excellency to be that of an extraordinary defalcation in the early instalments of the revenue for the ensuing Fussy year, and a recurrence to the system of farming, as in the time of the late Vizier.

6. A modification of the present system of Tehsildaree, might be suggested for the satisfaction of the Vizier, with a view to diminish the loss which his Excellency has been induced to complain of, without duly appreciating the benefits which the system in reality affords, and by which the loss is counter-balanced. His Excellency has been subjected to some loss this year by the continued maintenance and increase of a large Sebundee force in the several districts of his dominions, which the removal of our troops from the interior, in consequence of the war against Nepaul, has hitherto rendered indispensable, and which might otherwise have been greatly reduced, or the expense of it transferred to the Tehsildars. A considerable reduction of the number of this description of force may be effected without any delay, in the case of his Excellency's being furnished with the usual quota of our troops for the support of the authority of his officers; and a number of districts in his dominions, those contiguous, for example, to the capital, and to all the stations of Zillahdars, might be rendered hoozoor tuhseel, and the duties of assessment and collection performed by the Zillahdars and their deputies, without any commission on the revenue, or other additional expense to the present establishment of the Zillahs; thus saving, in all probability, one-fourth, at the least, of the commission, which his Excellency has estimated in his letter at ten or twelve lacs of rupees.

7. The expense of the department of Akhbar too, most unprofitable and injurious as it is (destructive, indeed, I may say, of the good government of the country and of the comfort and happiness of the people) might with great propriety be saved; and, on the whole, I do not hesitate to affirm, that the experience of another year of the new system of administration to be exercised by the present Ministers, under the influence of my suggestion and advice, uncontrolled controlled by the pernicious designs of the Vizier's present advisers, would serve to satisfy his Excellency's mind of the eminent advantages arising from the system which our Government recommended to him, and which he is now labouring to counteract.

Do you, from motives of friendship, represent this matter to his Lordship, in such a manner as you think proper, with a view to the accomplishment of my object; and if you consider your own representation to be sufficient for the purpose, it is unnecessary for me to write on the subject, because your writing will suffice: but if you deem it advisable, I shall prepare a letter in the terms of the draft, and send it to you for transmission to his Lordship.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter dated the 11th of Rujeeb, 1230 Hijjuree (20th June) conveying a draft of a letter which your Excellency proposes to address to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and desiring a communication of my sentiments on the practicability of the accomplishment of your Excellency's wish to abolish the commission of ten per centum on the revenue of your dominions as the charge of collection, from the commencement of the ensuing Fusly year.

Your Excellency needs not to be assured of my cordial desire to promote the advantage of your Government and the accomplishment of your personal views. I am ready to represent to the Governor-General whatever your Excellency may desire, and to solicit his Lordship's acquiescence in any proposal that you may make to him. But as the abolition of the commission on the revenue, though it may appear simple and easy to your Excellency, is in my mind a question of great importance and requiring the maturest deliberation, it seems to me to be proper that you should write to his Lordship on the subject; and as the tenor of the draft which you have sent to me appears to be perfectly unexceptionable, I shall transmit it to his Lordship without delay, and with an earnest recommendation of the subject of it to his Lordship's most serious consideration.

With regard, however, to the loss of so very large a sum as ten or twelve lacs of rupees of the revenue of your Excellency's dominions during the present year, in consequence of the newly established commission of ten per centum to the Tehsildars in lieu of the charges of collection, it occurs to me to suggest to your Excellency that the accurate mode of ascertaining the true extent of the loss which has arisen from this arrangement is a comparison of the actual receipts of revenue into your Excellency's treasury for the current year, after deducting the commission of ten per centum, with the actual receipts of last year, when the system of collection was different. If the difference arising from that comparison shall appear to be the sum which your Excellency has stated, or shall approach to that amount, there can be no doubt of your Excellency's having sustained the loss which you describe; but if the actual receipts of the present year, after deducting the commission of ten per centum, shall be found equal to the receipts of last year, or shall fall short of them only in a degree which may be satisfactorily accounted for by the employment of a large proportion of the quota of British troops usually stationed stationed in your Excellency's dominions in the war against Nepaul, or by the late introduction of the new system of assessment and collection of the revenue into your Excellency's territory, neither of which causes can be expected to operate in future, in this case I humbly conceive that your Excellency's calculation of the loss arising from the new system will not only be found to be erroneous, but that the advantages to arise from it in future will be impressed on your Excellency's mind, so as to supersede all remarks upon my part. Nevertheless, as the gratification of your Excellency's mind is the chief object of my desire, I merely await the receipt of your Excellency's letter to his Lordship's address, to forward it, with my recommendation of its contents, to his early and favourable consideration.

As your Lordship is graciously pleased to take a cordial interest in all my affairs, I deem it to be my duty to apprise you of whatever is productive of benefit or loss to me. I accordingly proceed to inform your Lordship, that by the introduction of the system of reform the sum of ten or twelve lacs of rupees has this year been deducted from the amount of the collections, on account of the commission of ten per cent. payable to the Tehsildars : other charges have also been incurred on account of the employment of an extra number of troops in the districts. The deduction on account of the ten per cent. commission must be considered to be a dead loss. Your Lordship never did, nor ever can approve of any arrangement which is productive of loss to me ; and moreover, the commission of ten per cent. on the collections has been abolished in the Honourable Company's dominions. It appears to me expedient, therefore, that this commission should be abolished from the Fusly year 1223, by which means I should no longer have to sustain the loss in question. In lieu of the commission, I propose to grant a fixed allowance to the officers employed in making the collections, as is done in the Honourable Company's dominions. Your Lordship will no doubt approve of this plan. Be pleased, therefore, to signify your approbation, that I may proceed to issue the necessary orders to my officers, and thereby effect an annual saving of ten or twelve lacs of rupees. I shall expect your Lordship's favourable answer.

To

To his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Written the 26th June 1815.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter. (Recapitulate that received 23d instant.)

Your Excellency's recurrence to my advice and opinion, in this case, is a source of satisfaction to me, as demonstrating the just sense entertained by your Excellency, of the principles on which the reform should be prosecuted, namely, with the perfect concurrence and unanimity of the two States, whose interest in its success is equal.

Your Excellency does me justice in believing that I never did, nor ever can, approve of any arrangement productive of loss to you; and in the genuine spirit of that sentiment, I proceed to convey to your Excellency my opinion on the point on which you have desired it.

Your Excellency's proposition for abolishing the commission of ten per cent. on the revenues now received by the Tehsildars, and for assigning fixed salaries to those officers, being professedly founded on the establishment of that system in the Honourable Company's provinces, it is proper to inform your Excellency that the system in question was not introduced into these provinces until they had been some years in the possession of the British Government, and considerable progress had been made in ascertaining their resources, and fixing the principles on which the settlement of the revenue should be made.

Until those objects were accomplished, the Tehsildars received, as under your Excellency's Government, a commission of ten per cent. on the revenues, in lieu of charges and establishments of all descriptions. This mode of payment was recommended by its superior advantages in stimulating the exertions of the Tehsildars to increase the public revenues, by which their just profits would be proportionably augmented; in restraining them from exacting more than was justly due from the landholders, by which their profits would be diminished and themselves responsible for the failure in the punctual realization of the revenues consequent to such exactions; and in enabling the Government, by their means, to arrive at a knowledge of the real value of the lands, which must obviously be the foundation of a just and advantageous settlement. This mode of payment was also found to be in other respects convenient, in the introduction of a new settlement, before the actual extent and cost of the necessary establishments could be practically ascertained.

Our experience of the advantages of this system occasioned the recommendation by the British Government of its adoption by your Excellency; and the same experience justifies the belief, that when the objects of its adoption shall be accomplished, a recurrence to the plan now proposed by your Excellency will be found not only unobjectionable, but expedient. For the reasons stated, I cannot hesitate in recommending to your Excellency to persevere in the present plan, until the time shall arrive when the proposed arrangement can be expediently substituted for it.

It is probable that the experience of even one year after the present system shall have been fairly put in operation, would satisfy your Excellency that no defalcation did actually arise from the source to which it is now imputed. By perseverance in this and the other arrangements, recommended to your Excellency by the British Government, by reposing a just confidence in your Ministers and revenue officers, and discountenancing and disregarding the insidious and unfounded insinuations and charges to which their exertions in your service must unavoidably expose them, and by a cordial and frank recurrence to the advice of the British Government and its representative at your Court, on all occasions of doubt or difficulty, I entertain a full persuasion of the success of the reform, and the consequent augmentation and security of your Excellency's revenues, and the prosperity of your administration in all its branches.

For further communications on the subject of this letter I refer your Excellency to Major Baillie.

To Major Baillie, Resident at Lucknow.

Sir:

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 21st instant: a translation of the letter from his Excellency the Vizier to the Governor-General, transmitted in your letter of the same date to the Persian Secretary, has also been laid before his Lordship.

2. The Governor-General has deemed it proper to address a letter to the Vizier in reply, in the terms of the enclosed English draft. His Lordship's letter will be transmitted to you by Mr. Swinton, and you will be pleased to deliver it to the Vizier at such period as you may judge most expedient with reference to its object.

3. It is scarcely necessary to add any thing in the form of direct instructions to yourself, as the course of representation and argument to be employed in conference with the Vizier on the subject is sufficiently indicated by the tenor of the Governor-General's letter.

4. His Lordship has not judged it expedient to offer to the Vizier any direct advice for the abolition of the system of Akhbar, described in your despatch, since his Lordship apprehends that even if his Excellency were, in compliance with the declared opinions of the Governor-General, to abolish it in form, there is no means of effectually extinguishing it, while, as is to be feared, a secret disposition to encourage a practice so congenial to the habits and principles of Native Princes, and to the personal character of the Vizier, remains in his Excellency's breast.

5. The reference to this subject in the Governor-General's letter is, however, sufficiently plain to afford you an opportunity of setting before his Excellency the evils of such a system, and its incompatibility with any wise and salutary principles of Government. Such a representation his Lordship desires you will make. If his Excellency, contrary to expectation, shall appear to be sensible of the justice of it, you will consider yourself at liberty to encourage the disposition, and to prevail on him to abolish it altogether.

Sir:

1. His Excellency the Vizier's counsels appear to have fluctuated almost daily since the despatch of my letter to your address under date the 8th instant. On the 9th the Ministers were admitted into the Presence, and the verbal explanations of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, combined with his formal acquiescence in in the rules which were prescribed to him by the Vizier, seemed not only to have obviated all the doubts that had arisen in his Excellency's mind regarding the past, but to afford a promise of renewed and increasing confidence in both his Ministers for the future.

2. Moatumud-ood-Dowlah called on me on Monday the 10th instant, and I took that opportunity of explaining to him the purport of Lord Moira's letter to the Vizier dated the 26th ultimo, regarding the continuance of the commission on the revenue in lieu of the charges of collection. The Minister advised the delivery of this letter without delay, and promised to prepare his Excellency's mind for receiving it on the following morning.

3. I presented the letter to his Excellency on Tuesday the 11th instant, at a conference holden at the Residency. I explained to him at considerable length the grounds of Lord Moira's advice regarding the continuance of the commission to Tehsildars. I endeavoured to satisfy his Excellency's mind that no loss, but on the contrary an advantage, would arise to him from a persistence in the arrangement in question, and in all the other measures of reform, in the case of their being conducted with my concurrence; and I hinted, in friendly and delicate terms, at the interruption of the efficient progress of those measures during the absence of his Excellency's Ministers, and the causes of that interruption, particularly the revival of the Akhbar, which had suspended the realization of the revenues by weakening the authority of the Nazims, and been attended with other pernicious effects. But I added my sanguine expectation of the removal of all those obstacles to the successful progress of the reform, in consequence of the return of the Ministers, who would now resume the duties of their stations as usual, and in occasional consultation with me.

4. His Excellency acknowledged his conviction that the Governor-General had advised him for the best, agreed to continue the commission for some time longer, observed that there was no necessity for a written reply to his Lordship's letter, and stated, as a reason for not replying to it, his desire that some portions of the contents of it should be concealed from the knowledge of his Ministers. "They will both attend you," said his Excellency, "as heretofore. Do you tell Rajah Dya-Krishen to prepare and submit the accounts of the revenue without any delay, and give him and Moatumud-ood-Dowlah such further advice as you think proper verbally; but there is no occasion to shew them this letter, nor to give them any instructions in writing." I replied, that I should continue as formerly to give my advice to the Ministers on such points as they might refer for my consideration, and I should leave it to his Excellency to communicate to them such parts of the Governor-General's letter as his Excellency might think necessary for their guidance.

5. From the 11th till the 14th instant I had no communication with the Ministers. On the 12th I was sorry to learn that they were again in some degree of disgrace, and that his Excellency had forbidden all his courtiers, as well as the subordinate officers of his Government and household, and even the Cutwal of the city and Sirdars and Risalahdars of his troops, from waiting on Moatumud-ood-Dowlah or paying any respect to him whatever. This report I should not have believed, if some written orders to the Nazims, under the seal of his Excellency the Vizier, forbidding their obedience to the Ministers, had not previously been brought to my notice; and if two respectable natives, dependants of the British Government, namely, Tujummool Hoosein Khan and Ekram Oolla Khan, had not addressed me on the subject directly to report the orders they had received, prohibiting their attendance on Moatumud-ood-Dowlah as a source of public disorder. Under the influence of these circumstances combined, I could no longer hesitate to consider the functions of the Ministers as at an end; and I was accordingly about to prepare a report on the subject to you for the Governor-General's information, when towards the evening of the 13th instant, I understood that the Ministers, and especially Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, were again in favour with the Vizier, and employed by his Excellency to detect the supposed malversations in office of some persons persons who were considered as their enemies, and the principal causes of their disgrace.

6. On the morning of the 14th instant the Ministers waited on me by desire of his Excellency the Vizier, and I had a long conversation with them on the subject of the progress of the reform, the realization of the balances of revenue for the current Fusly year, and the probability of advantage or loss from the continuance of the commission to Tehsildars in lieu of the charges of collection.

7. The Ministers declared to me, what I knew before to be the case, that the reform had proceeded most successfully till the time of their departure to Futtygurh, that an advantageous settlement of the revenue had been concluded in most of the districts, that security had been obtained from the Tehsildars for the largest instalment of the revenue, and that a great deal more had been realized at the end of the month of Bysaack than had ever been known in the country at that period of the year, when an unhappy change in the counsels of their Sovereign had served to disconcert all their proceedings, to weaken their authority over every subordinate officer in every department of the State, to suspend the realization of the revenue, and ultimately to produce a state of things which it was unnecessary for them to explain to me, since I must be aware of the cessation of their functions and of their total want of authority to control any branch of the administration. Rajah Dya-Krishen added, however, that notwithstanding all those impediments to the successful progress of the reform, the actual receipts into the treasury for the current Fusly year would still be found to be equal to those of the preceding year, and that the receipts of this year would have been greater, if the abolition of the system of Akhbar had allowed to the Nazims and Tehsildars the efficient exercise of that authority committed to them by the regulations of our Government, as originally introduced into Oude; but that, for a period of nearly two months, the authority of those officers had been weakened, and their personal apprehensions excited, by the corrupt practices of the news-writers, so as to suspend the collections entirely, and to leave large balances of revenue in the hands of a number of the landholders, which the Tehsildars were afraid to demand, and for which they and their sureties must be responsible or the loss be incurred by the State.

8. I stated in general terms to the Ministers the purport of the Governor-General's letter, in answer to his Excellency the Vizier's, on the subject of the commission on the revenue. I mentioned his Lordship's opinion, in perfect coincidence with my own, on the tendency of the system of Akhbar, and its inconsistency with the success of the reform or with any salutary principle of Government. I expressed a confident hope that the friendly suggestions on this subject, which were contained in the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier, the explanations which I had offered to his Excellency and the occasional representations of the Ministers at proper seasons to their Sovereign, would impress his Excellency with a conviction of the necessity of abolishing a system so manifestly injurious to the good government of his country, the due realization of his revenue, the peace of his own mind, and the general happiness of his subjects. That, in the meantime, I had reason to believe that his Excellency had departed, on conviction, from the wish which he entertained and expressed of suspending the commission on the revenue. That this conviction in his mind would be necessarily confirmed by an inspection and comparison of the revenue accounts of the last and current years, which the Dewan should prepare and submit to him with the least practicable delay; and that, after the adjustment of those accounts, it seemed expedient to suggest to his Excellency, as a prelude to the abolition of the Akhbar, to review the conduct and proceedings of all his Nazims and Tehsildars, to determine who were worthy of his confidence, to continue in office those alone who had merited his entire approbation and to strengthen their authority for the future, to remove every officer who had displeased him, and thus to put an end to all suspicion, and to supersede the necessity for those checks which his Excellency had recently thought proper to establish over his Nazims and Tehsildars.

9. The

9. The Ministers concurred in the propriety of all the suggestions which I offered; and as Moatumud-ood-Dowlah was to wait upon his Excellency in the evening, it was agreed that he should submit the purport of our conversation to his Excellency, with the view of preparing his mind for a renewal of it with me in the morning, when I was to breakfast with his Excellency as usual.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow

10. Before proceeding to the palace, on Saturday the 15th instant, I received a message from Moatumud-ood-Dowlah to this effect: that he had repeated to his Excellency the Vizier the purport of my discourse to the Ministers on the subject of the arrangements to be adopted for the ensuing Fusly year, and particularly on the abolition of the Akhbar. That his Excellency seemed determined to maintain this department at all hazards, and was apparently so much displeased at the suggestion of its abolition, and the arguments which I furnished against it, and which the Minister repeated to his Excellency, as to express himself with irritation in these words: "If such be the result of your conferences with the Resident, the seldomer you go to him the better. You wish to deprive me of the only means of information that I possess regarding the proceedings of my officers and subjects. There was the other day an affray in one of the districts, as also a robbery and murder, and but for the news-writer I should have known nothing of the matter. The Akhbar is an ancient and useful department, and it is my pleasure to maintain it as formerly."

11. With a knowledge of this determination in the mind of his Excellency the Vizier, it would obviously have been useless for me, as well as inconsistent with the spirit of my instructions, conveyed by your despatch of the 26th ultimo, to renew my instances with his Excellency for the abolition of the system of Akhbar, and I resolved to restrict my endeavours to the mitigation of its pernicious effects, by persuading his Excellency of the necessity of supporting the authority of the Tehsildars during the critical season of collection, and suspending the operation of his orders on such papers of intelligence as were brought before him, till the balances of revenue should be realized, and an investigation of the various circumstances to be reported by the news-writers could take place.

12. At our conference of the 15th instant, accordingly, after presenting to his Excellency an acknowledgment for the sum of twenty-three lacs of rupees, the payment of which into the treasury had been completed on the 8th instant, I related briefly to his Excellency the leading points of the conversation which had passed between his Ministers and me. I stated Rajah Dya-Krishen's acknowledgment of there being large balances of revenue due by the landholders in several districts, and his explanation of the causes of those balances: that the Nazims and Tehsildars were afraid to enforce their demands, however just, against the landholders, by reason of the corrupt practices of the news-writers, who were bribed by the defaulting Zemindars to represent the demands against them as oppressive, and whose false or exaggerated reports were acted on without the smallest investigation, so as to weaken the hands of the Nazims and subordinate collectors of revenue, and bring their authority over the landholders into contempt. I added, as a matter of general report and notoriety, that all the arrangements of police were rendered nugatory by similar practices, and that a robber or murderer, as well as a defaulting Zemindar, who had cause to apprehend the seizure of his person or distraint of his goods by the Nazim or Tehsildar, had only to give a few rupees to the news-writer, to enable him to set the local authority of the Government at defiance, and to evade the punishment of his crime or the payment of his debt to the State; and therefore if his Excellency were determined to maintain the establishment of news-writers in the manner in which it was recently formed, that it seemed to me to be expedient and indispensable to the realization of the balances of revenue, to caution the news-writers most peremptorily against transmitting inaccurate reports, to prohibit their interference between the Nazims or Tehsildars and the landholders on any question of revenue till the season of collection should be passed, and generally to manifest, at the least, an equal share of confidence in the Nazims or Tehsildars and the news-writers, by suspending a decision on points which the latter might report to the Presence till till some investigation should take place. His Excellency seemed to feel the propriety of those suggestions in as far as he understood them, and promised to consider them again and to talk the matter over with his Ministers.

13. After I had taken leave of the Vizier, his Excellency called my Moonshee into his presence, and discussed with him and the Ministers the purport of the suggestions which I had offered. A number of papers of intelligence from the several districts of the country were submitted while my Moonshee was in waiting, and the Vizier, to manifest his compliance with my advice, as I suppose, referred those papers to the Nazims for their own investigation and decision, thus precluding or suspending for a day those injurious effects of the Akhbar which his former daily practice had occasioned.

14. Towards the evening of the 15th inst., I understood that Moatumud-ood-Dowlah had submitted to the Vizier the result of his inquiries into the conduct of some subordinate officers of the Government during the Ministers' absence at Futtugurh, and that Moozuffur Alee Khan, Darogah of the Tope Khana (master of the ordnance), and Meer Gholam Alee Khan, controller of the Duwab (an office recently conferred on this person), were implicated in charges of speculation to a very considerable amount, which the Minister engaged to substantiate. The Vizier proceeded rather summarily, in the first instance, on the charges which the Minister had adduced, by demanding from the persons accused, particularly from Moozuffer Alee Khan, the restitution of the amount of the sums which this officer was alleged to have appropriated. With regard to Gholam Alee Khan, his Excellency contented himself with superseding the arrangements which this officer had made in the department committed to his charge, and dismissing those subordinate officers whom he had added to the former establishment.

15. On the morning of the 16th instant, the accused and their accuser, the Minister, were confronted in the presence of the Vizier, and a disgraceful altercation took place between Moozuffer Alee Khan and the Minister; the former, supported, as I understand, by the Vizier, who was induced by the intrigues of the alleged delinquent and his associates, to justify his peculations to the Minister, whom he had previously employed to detect them, and the consequence of this dispute was reported to be the triumph of the opposition over the Minister and the temporary disgrace of the latter, who retired from the Court with a resolution to resign his station immediately, unless justice should be done in the matter of his charge against Moozuffer Alee Khan.

16. Next morning I had a message from Rajah Dya-Krishen, expressive of his natural apprehension of sharing in the disgrace of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, and his desire to anticipate this disgrace by a voluntary retirement from office. He described the fickleness of the Vizier's disposition, and his ready and implicit belief of the scandalous reports of his news-writers, and of intriguing persons around him, to be such as to destroy the confidence and subvert the authority of the Ministers, and to preclude the beneficial exercise of any one of their official functions. His Excellency was daily in the habit of passing orders on the statements of his news-writers, contradictory and subversive of those orders which were passed but the day before, on the Rajah's representations, by his advice, and when the inconsistency was pointed out to his Excellency he never scrupled to disavow the preceding orders, by declaring his ignorance of the subject, and imputing those orders to the Rajah himself or to Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, who had acted, he said, without authority. A number of instances of this unsteadiness in the Vizier's disposition and conduct were pointed out by the messenger of Dya-Krishen, and he concluded with an earnest entreaty on the part of the Rajah to me, that I would either permit him to resign a situation which he had been called to with my concurrence, or take such measures as might enable him to do the duties of it with credit and comfort to himself, and to the satisfaction and advantage of his Sovereign. I replied, that I could not interfere between the Vizier and the servants of his Government, but should report the substance of his message, and all the circumstances which had come to my knowledge on the subject of it, to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General; and I advised both the Rajah and Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, not to think of retiring from office till the result of my reference should be known, but to labour assiduously, in the mean time, to regain the confidence of their Sovereign by every means in their power.

17. The Vizier did me the honour of breakfasting with me this morning, and I was agreeably disappointed at seeing both the ministers in his Excellency's suite. They remained in attendance on me for an hour after his Excellency's departure, and renewed the subject of their complaint of a total want of authority to conduct the affairs of the State, or make any satisfactory arrangements for the settlement and collection of the revenue in the ensuing Fusly year. At present I see no probability of their regaining the confidence of their sovereign, nor of the successful discharge of their duties in any branch of the administration ; while, on the other hand, I am perfectly satisfied, that in the case of their retirement or dismissal, a similar state of things will be produced within a very short period of time with respect to their successors in office, unless supported by our Government decidedly, and in a manner that appears to be incompatible with the view which the Governor-General entertains of the independency of the sovereignty of Oude and its relations with the British Government of India. And under this conviction, I apprehend that a prosecution of the objects of reform may ultimately bring discredit on our Government as the advisers of it, without any advantage whatever to the Sovereign or people of Oude.

18. It is still possible, however, that a favourable change may take place in the counsels of his Excellency the Vizier, the fickleness of whose temper may induce him, in a very few days, to banish from his favour and presence those persons by whom his Ministers are opposed, and to re-establish the authority of the Ministers on a more permanent footing than before. And although I consider myself to be precluded from offering any urgent or unsolicited advice to his Excellency, with a view to the support of his Ministers, I shall not fail to take advantage of every opportunity that he may give to me, of encouraging a disposition in their favour, should such a disposition appear.

1. Shortly after the appointment by his Excellency the Vizier of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah and Dya-Krishen to the offices of Naib and Dewan, it was settled between his Excellency and me, that Moatumud-ood-Dowlah should be the channel of all communications on business, both written and verbal, between us ; and accordingly it was my daily practice, till the departure of the Ministers to Futtugurh, to transmit my letters for the Vizier, in the evening, to Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, who submitted them to his Excellency in the morning, and brought or sent to me the answers in the course of the following day. On the departure of the Minister to Futtygurh, a person named Meer Elahie Bukhsh, a near relation of the Minister's, was selected and recommended by him, and appointed by his Excellency the Vizier to perform this part of his duty, and since the Minister's return to Lucknow, although his personal attendance on me has gradually diminished in frequency, and of late has entirely ceased, the practice of transmitting my letters and verbal applications through him has never been departed from on my part, and I resolved to observe it invariably till his Excellency should formally announce to me his suspension of the Minister's functions.

2. On Thursday the 3d instant I received a message from the Vizier by Mirza Hajee to the following effect: That as my letters and messages to his Excellency, conveyed through the medium of Moatumud-ood Dowlah, did not arrive at a proper time, and as his Excellency had recently appointed a Moonshee and other public officers to transact business in the name of his son, it was his Excellency's particular desire that my letters and applications of all kinds should in future be forwarded to his son, and not through the medium of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah.

3. The obvious meaning of this message could not be misunderstood. The Vizier might with equal propriety, and with more dignity, have addressed me, or directed Mirza Hajee to address me in these words: "I have thought proper to suspend my Minister, and you will consider his functions as at an end." I replied to his Excellency's message in the following terms, which I have since committed to writing and sent to him in the form of a note. "The appointment of your Excellency's son to the office of principal Minister, and of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah to that of Naib, took place at the same time, and your Excellency then desired that all my communications on business, whether verbal or written, should be sent to you through the medium of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah. I complied with your Excellency's desire, no less from a cordial disposition to consult your pleasure in all things, than from a conviction that the arrangement was salutary, and calculated to facilitate and expedite the transaction of public business.

"On the departure of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah to Futtygurh, your Excellency was pleased to appoint a person related to the Naib, and enjoying his particular confidence, to perform that part of his duty which had reference to my official station; and I continued to submit my communications through the medium of the person so appointed until Moatumud-ood-Dowlah's return, when I resumed my original practice. It is now your Excellency's pleasure to suspend those functions of the Naib which rendered him the channel of communication between your Excellency and me, and as I am ever most cordially disposed to consult your gratification in all things, I shall, of course, discontinue the transmission of my letters and applications to your Excellency through the medium of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah."

"But as the arrangement with regard to the prince, which your Excellency seems to desire, appears to me to resemble the practice of your illustrious father (whose mansion is paradise) with reference to his son, Shums-ood-Dowlah, who though the nominal Minister of the Government had no authority in the State, and was never the channel of communication between his father and the Resident at this Court, I propose, with your Excellency's sanction, to consider your Excellency's son as in the same situation exactly in which Shums-ood-Dowlah was placed, and to transmit my letters hereafter, as in the time of your Excellency's father, by the hands of a servant of my own, who will have the honour of waiting on your Excellency at such hour as may be convenient to yourself."

4. The Vizier has acquiesced in my proposal that my letters should be sent to him directly, replying to my message in these words:

"That the object of his proposal was no more than to promote the education of his son, who was in reality the Minister of his Government, and that as I had originally taken pains to teach his Excellency the public business of the State on his first accession to the musnud, he expected similar advantages

“ to his son from my friendly tuition.” Nevertheless, it is evident to me that the real design of the Vizier is to supersede even the shadow of authority which Moatumud-ood-Dowlah has been permitted to retain since his return from the deputation to Futtygurh : and thus, for the present, I must consider the administration of the Government of Oude to be re-established in every respect on the same footing on which it was conducted in the time of the late Vizier ; but with one remarkable distinction to the prejudice of the present time, that the talents and understanding of this Vizier are in my opinion greatly inferior to those of his Excellency’s father.

5. The actual state of the country is accordingly worse at this time than I recollect it at any former period. With the authority of the Minister and Dewan, that of the Nazims and Tehsildars has also vanished ; excepting in the case of Hukeem Mehdee, who is said to be in favour with the Vizier, and to be supported by Gholaum Alee Khan and Mirza Hajee, who seem now to be the principal counsellors. It is almost superfluous to add, that the measures of reform are at a stand, and that instead of magistrates and collectors with an efficient police and Tehsildars, the Zillahs are at present under the management of his Excellency’s news-writers and Hurkarras, who may exercise unlimited authority over the constituted officers of the Government, and encourage the landholders to revolt.

6. Under these circumstances, I deem it to be my duty to represent to you, for the consideration of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, that the arrangement thus announced to me by the Vizier for the future transaction of business between his Excellency and the Resident at his Court, as suspending the most important of the functions of his Excellency’s subordinate minister, to whom alone the suggestions of the Resident could be conveyed without reserve and with effect, is likely, in my judgment, to be productive of consequences highly injurious to the just ascendancy of the influence of the British counsels in Oude and the combined interests of the two States.

7. It is still possible, however, that the fickleness of the Vizier’s disposition may operate a remedy for the disorder that seems now to pervade his administration within a limited period of time. The removal from his Excellency’s presence of two or three evil advisers, who obtained an influence over his Excellency’s mind during the absence of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, and have been enabled by fortuitous circumstances to preserve that influence since his return, would prove sufficient at any time to restore the due authority of the Minister over every department of the administration, and to re-establish the ascendancy of those counsels, which can have no other motive nor object than the honour and interests of the Sovereign and the happiness of the people of Oude. It is possible, as I stated above, and in my judgment highly desirable, that this salutary change should be produced without any interference on my part ; but it is a question which I am bound to submit for Lord Moira’s consideration and decision, whether or not that interference be authorized in the form of a friendly remonstrance, should it hereafter appear to be indispensable by the continuance of the present state of things, and an injurious delay to make arrangements for the settlement and collection of the revenue in the ensuing Fusly year, in conformity with the new system.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 6th August 1815.)

Seyyud-Kootb-ood-Deen Hussun Khan, Nazim of the Zillah of Sandee, being in attendance at this place, the accounts of receipt and disbursement of the revenue of that Zillah shall be immediately required from him and examined; and as the Fusly year is at an end, shookhas will be written and issued to all the other five Nazims of Zillahs, directing their immediate attendance with their accounts for the purpose of examination and adjustment. This is written for your information.

Lucknow.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 6th August 1815.)

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's gracious letter of this date, apprizing me of the attendance of the Nazim of Sandee in your Excellency's presence, and of your intention to summon the other five Nazims of Zillahs to Lucknow for the purpose of settling their accounts.

The examination and adjustment of the accounts of all the Nazims of districts in your Excellency's dominions form an object of the highest importance, and I concur with your Excellency entirely in the propriety and necessity of commencing them without any delay. I am further of opinion with your Excellency, that it may be proper in several cases, and in some indispensable, to require the personal attendance of the Nazims for the purpose of adjusting their accounts, provided that the public inconvenience to be apprehended from their absence from their Zillahs do not appear to be greater than can arise from some delay in the adjustment of their accounts.

But, on the other hand, I submit to your Excellency that the removal of all the Nazims at one time from their districts, as it seems impossible that the examination of all the accounts should be in progress at the same time, must not only be unprofitable and inexpedient, but may also be productive of considerable disorder in the country, from the absence of all the local authorities of the districts at the same period of time. It were better, in my humble opinion, that the Nazims should be summoned to the Presence successively, one after another; and that when the accounts of one shall be carefully inspected and adjusted to your Excellency's perfect satisfaction, that one be dismissed to his district, or if his conduct prove dissatisfactory to your Excellency, another person be appointed in his room, and the next Nazim in succession attend and submit his accounts. One or two of the districts, I apprehend, may be considered at present in such a state as to preclude the removal of the Nazim, or local authority of the Zillah, without danger of public disorder; and, in this case, it appears to be expedient that the Naib Nazim, and his Dewan or assistants, be summoned in the room of the Nazim for the purpose of submitting his accounts.

With a reference, in particular, to Moontuzim-ood-Dowlah, Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, the tenor of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General's remarks on the character and conduct of this person, contained in his Lordship's answers to your Excellency's paper of requests bearing date the 12th November 1814, would appear to my judgment to suggest that your Excellency should reconsider the propriety of summoning Hukeem Mehdee to the Presence, and if your Excellency will be pleased to peruse the enclosed extract from that paper, you will, I doubt not, concur in opinion with your Excellency's fervent well-wisher, that the sanction of your sincere friend the Right Honourable the Governor-General my Lord Moira should be sought and obtained, to the measure of recalling Hukeem Mehdee to your Presence, before it be carried into effect.

Sir :

1. Be pleased to submit to the notice of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General the enclosed translation of a letter which I received from his Excellency the Vizier on the 30th ultimo, requesting my friendly advice on the subject of the settlement of his revenue for the ensuing Fusly year, and copy of my answer to that letter.

2. A favourable change has appeared to me in the disposition of his Excellency the Vizier since the receipt of the letter from Lord Moira declining an interview with his Excellency, which was conveyed to me by the Persian Secretary in his despatch of the 18th ultimo, and which I presented to his Excellency on the 23d. The Minister, Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, is unhappily still, as before, the object of his Excellency's aversion, and of a persecution unnatural and unjust ; but the Dewan has been reinstated in office, and directed by his Excellency to resume his occasional attendance on me, for the purpose of receiving my advice with a view to the settlement of the country.

3. One obvious and essential advantage may arise from this partial recurrence, on the part of his Excellency the Vizier, to those salutary practices and observances with which his Excellency commenced the reform in the month of December last. My suggestions to Rajah Dya-Krishen if implicitly followed by the Vizier, as his Excellency has promised to comply with them, will necessarily check the disorders which have recently arisen in the country, and will enable the Nazims to take measures preparatory to the settlement of the revenue for the ensuing Fusly year.

4. But the limited influence of Rajah Dya-Krishen over the mind of his Excellency the Vizier, and the opposition to his judicious counsels by a number of intriguers about the Court, supported by the inventions of news-writers employed in every district of the country, preclude the expectation in my mind of any permanent advantage from the advice which I have submitted to his Excellency on this occasion, or from suggestions which I may offer to him hereafter, until the return of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah to favour, or the appointment of some other efficient minister, possessing the confidence of both States and supported by our Government, in such a manner as to preclude the success of intrigues against him, of a nature similar to those which have occasioned the downfall of Agha Meer.

their establishments, and also from people appointing their own sons and other relations to the situation of Ameens, for the purpose of appropriating the commission of ten per centum and other emoluments to themselves, need not to be explained to you, and the interests of the two States being identified, the Honourable Company must necessarily participate in my loss.

As it is ever my wish and intention, both from a consideration of the friendship subsisting between the two States, and more especially from motives of personal friendship for you, to advise with, and consult you in all things, and as I am further fully persuaded that you will always be influenced in advising me by motives of friendship and regard for the true interests of my Government, the success and prosperity of which you consider as involving your own good name and reputation, I therefore with sincerity of heart solicit your opinion and advice regarding the settlement of the revenue of my country for the ensuing Fusly year, in such a manner as that the Ryots may be happy, the country flourishing, the just dues of the State may be realized, no loss may arise to the Government, the British troops may punish the turbulent and refractory, and the commanding-officers be prevented from interfering between the officers of the Government and the Zemindars.

Letter
from Resident at

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 1st September 1815.)

In conformity with my promise of the day before yesterday, I now submit to your Excellency my genuine sentiments on the subject of your Excellency's gracious letter under date the 30th ultimo.

With a reference to the amount of the loss which your Excellency has ascribed in your letter to the salaries granted to the Nazims and the expenses of their establishments, I am clearly and decidedly of opinion, after a careful examination of the subject, that no loss whatever can be said to have resulted to your Excellency from this particular arrangement: nay, I am satisfied that, on a comparison of the two, the expense of the nizamat establishment for a Zillah, under the new system, will be found to be less than the amount of the salaries and establishments that were formerly paid to Ameens of the several districts or purgunnahs which are now comprehended in that Zillah, exclusively of the charges of collection or sebundy, which were then, as they now are, distinct from the civil establishments.

It is further my humble opinion, that if your Excellency determine to reduce the salaries and establishments of the Nazims so much below the present standard of their allowances as to form an inadequate support for persons of respectability and talents in the discharge of offices of such importance, the necessary consequence of such reduction will be a recurrence to practices more injurious to the true interests of your Government, and to the comfort and happiness of your subjects, than any loss that could arise from the liberal payment of those officers.

Your Excellency has referred to a loss occasioned by the grant of a commission of ten per centum on the revenue in lieu of charges of collection, in consequence of some of the Nazims having appointed their own sons and relations to the situation of Ameens or Tehsildars.

On the general question of the expediency of continuing the commission to Tehsildars, the clear and comprehensive view which his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General has taken of this subject, in his letter to your Excellency's address of the 26th June last (17th Rujeeb, A. H. 1230), supersedes all remarks upon my part; but with a reference to the particular ground of loss which your Excellency has referred to on this occasion, it would seem to my judgement quite imaginary, since it is obvious that if the public duties of Tehsildar be faithfully and uprightly discharged, and the full amount of the revenue be paid into your Excellency's treasury by the persons holding those those offices, it can make no difference to your Excellency in point of actual expense, whether these persons be the sons and relations of the Nazim, or utter strangers to those officers. In either case alike it is manifest, that your Excellency has the commission of ten per centum, and no more than that commission, to pay on the actual receipts into the treasury. Besides, the appointment of Tehsildars under the new system rests exclusively with your Excellency, not the Nazims: the Nazims, it is true, may recommend persons for those situations, but your Excellency alone can appoint; and I conclude that none of the Nazims would presume to grant a sunnud of tehsildaree to any person without reporting the circumstance in the first instance, and obtaining your Excellency's consent. But if a Nazim should have acted so improperly, his appointment is necessarily invalid, and not only defeats the object, but subjects him to your Excellency's displeasure.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

The sentiment of implicit reliance on my genuine friendship and regard, which has prompted your Excellency to consult me on the most advantageous mode of concluding the settlement of your dominions for the ensuing Fusly year, demands my most grateful acknowledgment, and is a source of the highest gratification to my mind.

In the spirit of that cordial friendship on which your Excellency has expressed your reliance, I submit as my decided opinion, and as that of the Government which I represent, and which has ever manifested to your Excellency the truest and most disinterested friendship, that every one of the salutary objects which your Excellency has proposed for my consideration may be expected, nay, must necessarily result, from a firm and resolute adherence to the system recently introduced: the system which your Excellency adopted by a free and unqualified declaration in your letter to the Right Honourable the Governor-General of the 4th of December last (21st Zehijj A.H. 1229), accompanied by a solemn assurance that the details of it should be conducted by your Ministers with my uniform concurrence and advice; a system which, though yet in its infancy during the last Fusly year, though its progress and success have been opposed by a number of fortuitous circumstances, though its radical principles have been perverted and most of its regulations departed from during the last three months, I may say, has nevertheless been productive of benefit rather than loss to the State, has ameliorated the condition of the ryots, and has established a solid foundation for future progressive improvement of the revenue and resources of the country; nay, in the matter of actual collection or receipt of revenue into the treasury, if compared with the preceding year, has occasioned no loss to your Excellency, although in one particular district or two, from the incapacity of the Nazim or other causes, a trifling defalcation may have occurred, which the arrangements for the ensuing year might easily do more than compensate.

Under all these circumstances, it must be obvious that the best, and indeed the only advice which I can now submit to your Excellency, is a firm and determined perseverance in the principles of the new system, and a strict observance of its rules in the settlement of your Excellency's revenue for the ensuing Fusly year.

If your Excellency, in the spirit of your letter to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General under date the 4th December, and of his Lordship's friendly advice in his several letters to your Excellency, more particularly that under date the 26th of June last (17th Rujeeb, A.H. 1230), will be pleased to resume the intentions, to recur to the salutary proceedings which are stated and recommended in those letters, to put a stop to those injurious practices which are subversive of every principle of good government, as well as of the particular system which has recently been introduced into your dominions, and will direct the resumption of those observances on the part of your ministers towards me, which are essential to the success of their administration, the benefits to be derived from this arrangement will soon be so apparent to your Excellency, as to impress you with the fullest conviction that the system recommended by our Government is the best that could possibly be devised for the future settlement of your country. But, on the other hand, if your Excellency be not cordially disposed and firmly resolved to pursue the particular line of conduct, which I have here submitted for your consideration as essential to the success of the reform and to the future good government of the country, and the smallest smallest departure from which might not only be productive of the disappointment of all the salutary purposes for which this system was recommended to your adoption, but might also unjustly bring discredit on the character of the system itself; the friendship which I entertain for your Excellency, and motives of candour impel me to caution your Excellency most solemnly against the further prosecution of this system, under circumstances that are likely to defeat it, and thus to exonerate myself from responsibility for the consequences which must result from a nominal adoption of its principles, accompanied by an infraction of its rules. Your Excellency should maturely consider all the circumstances which are stated in this letter, and you may then with propriety determine either to persevere in the system of reform, or to devise some other arrangement, more conducive to the success of your Government and to the comfort and happiness of your subjects, communicating your resolution, of course, to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General before it be carried into effect.

With regard to your Excellency's desire of the punishment of the turbulent and refractory by means of the British troops: As the sole purpose of stationing our troops in your Excellency's dominions is the support of your Excellency's Government and suppression of the rebellious and disorderly, they shall, of course, be punished as you desire, and the commanding-officers of our troops shall never be permitted to interfere in the settlement or assessment of the revenue between the officers of the Government and the Zemindars.

Be pleased to submit to the notice of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General the enclosed translation of a letter which I have received from his Excellency the Vizier, announcing the removal of two of his Excellency's Nazims and appointment of other officers in their room, and requiring the aid of our troops in support of the authority of those officers.

2. I have complied with his Excellency's requisition, by issuing instructions to Lieutenant-Colonel Fraser commanding the troops at Secroa, a copy of which is enclosed, and I expect in a few days to have occasion to send similar instructions to the commanding officers at Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh. In the former of those districts particularly, there are several refractory landholders in possession of strong forts who have resisted the authority of the Government, and withheld the revenue of their estates for a period of several years, and whose suppression has been necessarily postponed, from the want of a battering train to be employed in the reduction of their fortresses.

3. With a reference to the purport of your letter under date the 21st of December last, I deem it proper to take this opportunity of apprizing you, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, of the apparent necessity that exists for the employment of a battering train in the districts of Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh during the ensuing cold season, and I beg to be favoured with a communication of his Lordship's sentiments and commands respecting the practicability of this measure, and the manner of carrying it into effect with the least public inconvenience.

of those districts, and more particularly by Umr Sing of Baraitch (an extract from whose arzee is transmitted to you), will, I fear, occasion a necessity for resorting to measures of coercion, when the season of the year shall admit of your undertaking military operations.

3. It is highly probable, however, that the statement of Umr Sing is exaggerated, and that the prudent conduct of the newly-appointed Nazim of the district, with the aid of a declaration on your part to the several refractory landholders that you are instructed and prepared to support him with the whole of the force under your command, may induce the surrender of the ghurries and the return of the landholders to their allegiance, without any more active operations, which it is, of course, most desirable to avoid, except in cases of absolute necessity.

Extracts from the Arzee of Umr Sing, Ameen of Baraitch, dated the 15th of September 1815.

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's shookka, dated the 10th instant, commanding me to submit to the Presence a detailed statement of the names of the refractory landholders in my district, with a list of their forts, the number of their followers, the amount of the balances due by each of them for the year 1222 Fusly, particularly specifying whether the defalcations were occasioned by a disposition to resist authority or by some other cause, and the most effectual means of putting a stop to all disorders in the district.

May it please your Excellency:—The disorderly practices of the refractory Zemindars in this district, their total disregard of authority, the erection of ghurries, and the impracticability of effecting an equitable assessment, in consequence of their rebellious conduct, have been regularly reported to the Presence by your slave; but, in obedience to your Excellency's orders, I again submit a particular account of each refractory Zemindar, and I submit it to your Excellency's wisdom to adopt such measures for the suppression of these disorders as may deter others from the like practices in future.

List of refractory Zemindars, the Places of their abode, and the number of their Followers.

Dulthumun and Bhojung, Zemindars of Peeagpore, are extremely turbulent and refractory. Besides their usual followers, they have entertained a thousand additional matchlockmen this year. They possess two strong forts with several guns in the jungles of Peeagpore and Mulheepore, from whence they make occasional irruptions to ravage all the villages in the district of Baraitch.

Mandhattah Sing, Zemindar of Ekowneh, has built a fort in the middle of a very thick jungle, and retains seven or eight hundred matchlockmen in his pay.

Kishen Pershaud, Zemindar of Gungowl, has built two strong ghurries, one at Gungowl the other at Bungao, both of which are surrounded by thick jungle. Has also about five hundred matchlockmen in his employ.

Dewun

Dewun Sing, Bhowanee Sing, Goordut Sing, and other Zemindars of Regwarhurharpore, have lately entertained about five or six hundred matchlockmen, and erected ghurries in the jungle of Sehar on the bank of the Teedhee river near the jungle of Peeagpore, and in the village of Bhunghosera belonging to Gungowl, also surrounded by jungle, from which they make predatory excursions into Baraitch.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
20 Oct. 1815.

Dhokul Sing and Bhowanee Bukhsb, Zemindars of Pusgao Kumgar in purgunnah Guaritch, usually reside on an island in the Gogra, the district of Downa, on the opposite side of the river, in purgunnah Dureeabad or in the village of Chowkutha, in the district of Muhadewa, belonging to the Honourable Company. They have a large body of armed followers. Two or three large boats would be required for the use of the detachment sent against them.

Duljeet Sing and Runjeet Sing, Zemindars of Puruspoor in purgunnah Guaritch, have taken refuge in the Honourable Company's territories, where the Thanadar of Wuzeergunge protects them, and prevents their Ryots from cultivating the lands.

Rugoonath, Jung Behauder, and Bhiman, Zemindars of talooka Shahpore and Dhumao, in the purgunnah of Guaritch, have been seized; but Juskurrun Sing, the Tufreekdar of Jung Behauder has effected his escape.

Mandhattah Sing, son of Sheopersaud, Zemindar of Bumnowtee, has erected three strong forts, one at the village of Bondhee, another at the village of Bukneea, the third at the village of Bulba, surrounded by thick jungles, from which he daily and nightly threatens predatory attacks on Baraitch. He has about fifteen hundred matchlockmen. As the village of Bukneea stands on an island in the Gogra, two or three large boats and one or two battering guns will be required for this service.

In the purgunnah of Bulrampore, Kulundera Shegal Khor has erected a fort with the consent of the Zemindar; and Arjeen Sing, son of Newul Sing, the Zemindar, has built another. Heavy guns will also be required for the reduction of these forts.

EXTRACT BENGAL POLITICAL CONSULTATIONS,

The 27th October 1815.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to the Government in the Secret and Political Department.

Sir :

1. Since the despatch of my letter to your address, under date the 27th of September last, I have had some further requisitions from his Excellency the Vizier for the suppression of his rebellious landholders ; and the officers commanding our troops at the stations of Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh have been applied to by his Excellency's Nazims for detachments to support their authority in the districts under their charge. A number of desultory operations have taken place under the orders of Lieutenant-Colonel Cumberlege, at the requisition of the Nazim of Purtaubgurh, for the seizure of defaulters and marauders, and the general success of those operations has apparently had a salutary effect towards restoring the tranquillity of that district. I transmit, for more particular information on the subject of Colonel Cumberlege's proceedings, some extracts from official letters which have passed between that officer and me.

2. The state of the district of Sultanpore must remain as at present, I apprehend, till a battering-train can be furnished for the reduction of some places of strength which are occupied by powerful landholders, who have long been in actual rebellion ; but as his Excellency the Vizier and his Nazim have been very urgent of late for the suppression of those rebellious landholders, I have deemed it incumbent on me to authorize the commanding-officer at Sultanpore to employ the force at his disposal in support of the authority of the Nazim, to the utmost practicable extent, without incurring the hazard of a failure ; and, for further information on this subject, I take the liberty of referring his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General to the enclosed copies of letters which have passed between Major Duncan and me.

3. In addition to the instances of removal and appointment of Nazims which were noticed in my despatch of the 27th ultimo, his Excellency the Vizier was yesterday pleased to announce to me his removal of Kooar Ruttun Sing, a deserving officer in my opinion, and son-in-law of Rajah Dya-Krishen, the Dewan, from the office of Nazim of Bareilly, and the nomination of his Excellency's grandson, Mirza Mohun Alee Khan, to that office, with the appointment of an efficient revenue officer, named Soobhan Alee Khan, to the station of Naib, or Deputy Nazim, on the part of the young Mirza. This arrangement, though by no means such as I could approve, was announced to me in a manner which precluded my suggesting any serious objection to it, without hazarding the displeasure of the Vizier and exciting his particular resentment against Rajah Dya-Krishen, whose relation I must have appeared to support by remonstrating against the appointment of another, and more particularly of his Excellency's grandson, to the office of Nazim of Bareilly.

In

In addition to the above consideration, the character of Soobhan Alee Khan as an efficient revenue officer, and at the same of an intriguing disposition, made me desirous of his employment in a situation where his talents and experience might be useful at a distance from the scene of intrigue. Soobhan Alee Khan, and his kinsman Taj-ood-Deen Hoosein Khan, were the zealous coadjutors of Hukeem Mehdee in his devices for the subversion of the reform.

4. I have recently refrained from reporting to you, for the information of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, the progress of the measures of oppression which are daily practised against Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, with the view, as there seems reason to believe, of driving him to some act of desperation, which may be used as a pretext for his destruction, or of inducing him to destroy himself. The whole of his personal property, including some houses and grounds which he had purchased while in the station of Minister, has been distrained and disposed of by public sale, or restored to the former possessors without requiring the restitution of the price, at the instance of creditors and complainants, whose demands and complaints have been acted on, without any the smallest investigation, or even his being heard in defence.

5. A circumstance of this nature occurred on Thursday the 5th instant, when a person named Behauder Khan, who had sold a house to Moatumud-ood-Dowlah for the sum of 500 rupees, was instigated to demand repossession of the house on the ground of an involuntary sale of it; and in consequence of this complaint, without any investigation whatever, the Cutwal of the city was ordered to dispossess the Minister of the premises. Moatumud-ood-Dowlah requested a delay of a few hours, for the purpose of removing his property, produced a receipt for the price of the house under the seal of the person from whom he had purchased it, and offered an arzee on the subject to be presented to his Excellency the Vizier. The Cutwal, instructed by Mozuffer Alee Khan, instead of listening to Moatumud-ood-Dowlah's entreaty, sent a party of armed men to the house to dispossess the Minister's servants and throw his property into the street, which was done accordingly with violence and with the greatest abuse of the Minister, who would probably have sacrificed his life had he opposed the execution of the order. He sent a message to implore my interference, for the purpose of saving him from this disgrace; which I was sorry to be compelled to decline, on the ground of my reference to the Government, which had not yet been replied to.

6. I see no prospect whatever of the recall of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah to favour; and the miserable state of degradation to which he has now been reduced would seem almost to unfit him for the exercise of ministerial authority under this Government, even if the Vizier was induced to restore him, at the recommendation of the Governor General, to the station from which he has fallen.

7. My personal regard for Agha Meer, which is founded on my knowledge of his possessing some highly estimable qualities, would lead me rather to desire that he were settled in comfortable retirement, with a suitable provision for his maintenance from a master whom he has faithfully served, than that he were replaced in a public situation, the precarious nature of which, and the terms on which it must be holden under a prince of his master's disposition, should render it an object of horror to every well regulated mind.

1. In my letter to you of the 18th instant I did myself the honour to acquaint you of the march of Lieutnant Oliphant's detachment to Chendokah; but finding that force insufficient for the purposes mentioned in my letter, I desired Captain Ridge to send a company from his detachment on the 22d instant to Chendokah, and directed Lieutenant Oliphant to proceed to Lowreeah, about three coss distant.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

2. On the 24th instant Lieutenant Oliphant marched and seized Ramdial, Zemindar of Lowreeah, who had been for some time past assisting Lulloo; and on the same day Lieutenant Bamguardt, who commands the company detached by Captain Ridge, made a forced march and seized Ousane Sing, Zemindar of Kessanee with six of his followers, adherents of Lulloo, taking his ghurry by surprise, which is situated in the jungle, and very strong.

3. On the 27th instant Lieutenant Bamguardt made another forced march and seized the Zemindar of Khanderpore, whose son, Sewbuccas, has been long connected with Lulloo in his depredations; and that you may be the better enabled to judge of the difficulties of this service, I beg leave to enclose his letter on the subject.

4. The two ghurries or fortified villages of Kessanee and Khanderpore are represented as very strong; I have, therefore, written to Rajah Bluwanee Pershaud to send bildars to destroy their defences without delay, and the prisoners have all been sent to him with an account of their offences.

5. Enclosed I forward you a copy of my letter of this date to Lieutenant Bamguardt, as also a list of villages and Zemindars connected with Lulloo, and beg your instructions on the subject as soon as possible, as the combination appears very extensive.

6. Since writing the foregoing, I have the pleasure to inform you that Bundeshuree Bukhsh has come in and made his submission to the Nazim, and I hope all will now be settled in the Duleebpore district. I shall write to the Rajah not to be severe with him, in case he gives ample security for his future good conduct. Enclosed is a copy of the letter giving me this information.

(Letter of the 4th October 1815.)

I have the pleasure to forward to you a letter from Captain Charles Ridge, dated the 3d instant, reporting the surprise of the fort of Ramnaghur in the Ahmety jungle, and cannot help expressing my approbation of his activity and very judicious conduct in this well-concerted expedition.

I have before brought to your notice the zealous and spirited conduct of Lieutenant Bamguardt and the light company in the surprise of three forts in the Mongra jungle, and the seizure of seven of Lulloo's adherents; and you will observe, on the present occasion, that that officer was the first who entered the fort.

In several of your letters you have mentioned that it is the wish of his Excellency the Vizier, that the whole of the forts in the district should be levelled with the ground; and as Ramnaghur is very strong, I have directed Captain Ridge to retain possession of it until I hear from you on the subject. The new fort that is now building in the vicinity by Rajah Hurchund Sing is so contrary to your instructions, that I think the circumstance cannot be known to you or his Excellency the Vizier, and must be at all times prejudicial to the peace and good order of the district, as upon every trivial dispute with the Nawaub's civil officers the Zemindars repair to their jungles and forts, and set the local authorities at defiance. These extensive jungles are also the resort of banditti and the disaffected of the country, who are supported by the Zemindars as adherents that may be depended upon when at variance with Government.

(Letter of 2d October 1815.)

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your several despatches dated the 9th, 12th, 18th, and 28th ultimo, reporting the operations of the detachments commanded by Captain Ridge, Lieutenant Oliphant, and Lieutenant Bamguardt, against refractory landholders and marauders in the district of Deleebpore, and others, under the jurisdiction of Rajah Bhuwanee Pershaud.

2. The substance of all those despatches has been communicated to his Excellency the Vizier, with suitable suggestions on my part; and the intelligence of the seizure of some adherents of the notorious marauder, Lulloo, and of the submission of Bundeshuree Bukhsh, has proved highly satisfactory to his Excellency, who concurs with me in approving the whole of your proceedings on this occasion, and particularly the zealous operations of the detachment commanded by Lieutenant Bamguardt.

3. The tenor of your instructions to that officer, and of your letter to Rajah Bhuwanee Pershaud, appear to be perfectly judicious; and it is very satisfactory to observe in the Nazim's reply to your letter his ready acquiescence in your suggestions, and the expression of his cordial thanks for your zeal in support of his authority and in restoring the tranquillity of his districts.

(Letter of 7th October 1815.)

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 4th instant, conveying a copy of a letter from Captain Ridge to your address, announcing the surprise of Ramnaghur and the seizure of a person supposed to be an adherent of Lulloo, marauder.

2. The orders of his Excellency the Vizier, and my repeated instructions for the reduction of fortresses and ghurries, are so very express and explicit as to leave all the local authorities without any pretext or excuse for the existence of a fortress in their districts, unless occupied by a superior force which they may not have the means of reducing. I shall immediately call the attention of the Vizier to the gross neglect of Nowneit Rae, in permitting a fort to be constructed by the Zemindar of Ahmety; and I shall further suggest the propriety of the jungle being immediately cut down. In the mean time, you will be pleased to communicate without reserve to Nowneit Rae, and also to the Zemindar of Ahmety, the sense which I entertain of their highly improper conduct, and in which I am firmly persuaded of his Excellency the Vizier's concurrence; and you will further be pleased to require that the fort be immediately destroyed, under pain of his Excellency's displeasure, and of the severest and most exemplary punishment in the case of our troops being employed to enforce their obedience to this order.

Sir :

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 4th instant, announcing a requisition from the Nazim of Sultanpore for the aid of a detachment from your station in support of that Nazim's authority.

2. The state of the districts of Akburpore and Aldemow, and more particularly the rebellious conduct of a few of the principal landholders in those districts, have long been notoriously such, as not only to authorize but to require the adoption of the most rigorous measures for the restoration of the public tranquillity and vindication of the authority of the Government, which those landholders have openly defied for a period of two or three years. You are aware of the principal causes which precluded the adoption of those measures at the date of Rajah Bhuwance Pershaud's nomination to the office of Nazim of Sultanpore. It was found impossible to assemble a sufficient force or to equip a battering-train, for the purpose of reducing the forts of Surboodoom Sing and some other refractory landholders, during the progress of our operations against Nepaul, and therefore the Nazim was instructed to refrain from any attempt to coerce the more powerful landholders in his district till a future more convenient season.

3. I have recently represented to the Government the necessity of taking effectual measures for the reduction of the forts in Akburpore and Aldemow, and for the suppression of the refractory landholders in those districts, and an answer may soon be expected to the reference which I have made on this subject; I must therefore defer my instructions for the particular guidance of your conduct with a reference to the more powerful landholders in the districts of Akburpore and Aldemow, till I ascertain the practicability of assembling a sufficient force, and equipping a battering-train for the reduction of the forts in their occupation: and, indeed, until this be ascertained, I conceive that the march of the detachment which the Nazim has proposed to require from you would be attended with no good effect.

4. In the meantime I transmit for your information a copy and translation of an arzee addressed to his Excellency the Vizier by Rajah Bhuwance Pershaud, and sent by his Excellency to me, with a requisition for the aid of our troops in support of the Nazim's authority. If you consider the force at your disposal, united with the troops of the Nazim, to be fully adequate to the purposes of his Excellency the Vizier's requisition, as detailed in the Rajah's arzee, you will be pleased to take the necessary measures with that view at as early a period as may be practicable, and otherwise you will explain in confidence to the Nazim the necessary causes of the delay.

5. In reply to the question which you have put to me regarding the propriety of attacking all persons whom the local authority of the district may point out as rebellious or disorderly, it is to be observed as a general rule, that if the person complained against by the Nazim be ostensibly in possession of the means of opposing resistance to authority; if he occupy a fort, for example, or have a number of retainers in arms, he may justly and properly be required to surrender the fortress in his occupation, to dismiss his followers in arms, and attend in the Nazim's cutchery to settle his revenue accounts; and in the case of his refusing obedience to such a requisition as this from the Nazim or commanding-officer of the troops, he is to be considered as in actual rebellion, and deprived of the means of resistance by the reduction of his fortress or gburry, which in all cases should be levelled with the ground, and by the dispersion of his armed followers and seizure of his person if it be practicable. In cases where where the means of resistance are not ostensibly possessed by the person represented as disorderly, it is always reasonable to doubt, and must therefore be proper to investigate, the justice of the accusation against him, and to report on the merits of it to me, for his Excellency the Vizier's information; and in every case where conciliation can be used with success by an officer commanding a detachment, in concert with the Nazim of the district or without weakening his authority, it is of course to be most zealously applied.

Arzee of Rajah Bhuwance Pershaud, Nazim of Sultanpore, &c. Written 17th September 1815.

I have had the honour of receiving your Excellency's shookha, dated the 10th ultimo, commanding me to submit to the Presence a detailed statement of the names of the refractory landholders in my district, with a list of their forts, the number of their followers, the amount of the balances due by each of them for the year 1222 Fusly, particularly specifying whether the defalcations were occasioned by a disposition to resist authority or by some other cause, and the most effectual means of putting a stop to all disorders in the district. May it please your Excellency: the Zemindars of every small village in the districts of Sultanpore, Akburpore, and Aldemow, are disorderly and refractory to the extent of their means, building ghurries and other places of defence; but the suppression of Surboodoom Sing and Zorawar Sing, Talookadars of Meapoor Dooarka, Madhoo Sing, Zemindars of Deerah, and the Baboos of Bidhur, who are the ringleaders of the rebellious and disaffected in this Zillah, keeping each a retinue of several hundred followers, and possessing a strong fort where thousands of people would assemble to support them in the case of an attack, and have not paid their revenue to the State for these two or three years past, is absolutely necessary and indispensable.

In the Fusly year 1222 those rebels insisted on getting a remission of revenue, for no other cause than their own wickedness and disaffection.

If the refractory persons above-mentioned be seized and punished, or prevented from settling in the Honourable Company's territories in the case of their escape into them, there is every reason to believe that a just assessment of the revenue may be made in their districts this year, and the punishment of any one of the ringleaders in an exemplary manner would deter the other Zemindars from opposing the settlement of the district.

List of refractory Zemindars, the Places of their Abode, and the Number of their Followers.

Surboodoom Sing and Zorawar Sing, Zemindars of Meapoor Dooarka, always retain about one thousand five hundred armed men in their pay, and on an emergency from two to four thousand men would assemble to support them. They possess eight ghurries.

Madhoo Sing, Talookadar of Deerah, has about five hundred followers, and can assemble two or three thousand men on an emergency. He possesses five strong ghurries.

The Baboos of Bidhur keep seven or eight hundred followers, and can assemble three or four thousand auxiliaries on an emergency. They have five strong forts.

They are stated to be in full possession of four or five mud forts, and have lately taken one of his Excellency's guns from the Ameen of the district. Their force has been stated to me in various ways. Some accounts augment it to five thousand, whilst others make them from three to four thousand matchlocks, under three principal head men. His Excellency has therefore suggested the necessity of adding two battering guns, properly equipped, to my detachment, with a view, should it prove necessary, to expedite the reduction of their ghurries or forts; previous to which operations every possible means of reconciliation and amicable adjustment are to be tendered by me.

It is impossible for me to form any adequate idea at present of the period at which I may effect this duty, but I shall of course report progress, or any particular occurrence that may happen.

Honourable Sir :

1. His Excellency the Vizier having, at a conference which I held with his Excellency on the 11th instant, tendered to me, as a proof of his friendship and of the cordial interest which he feels in the prosperity of the affairs of the Honourable Company, an accommodation of one crore of rupees in the way of loan, I deemed it to be my duty, in consideration of the actual state of the public finances and the probable demands arising out of the prosecution of hostilities with the Nepaulese, and the eventual necessity of supporting by military preparations our political views with relation to Saugor and Bhopaul, to accept the offer with due acknowledgments of the cordial and friendly spirit in which it was made.

2. At a subsequent conference his Excellency solicited my acceptance of the sum as a free gift to the Honourable Company ; but, for reasons which will be obvious to your Excellency in Council, I declared, with suitable expressions of my sense of this additional proof of his Excellency's friendship, my inability to receive the accommodation except as a loan.

3. It has been arranged that the sum in question shall be placed on the footing of a subscription to the six per cent. loan now open ; one moiety, or fifty lacs of rupees, to be advanced immediately, and the remaining moiety on the 1st of March 1815.

4. I have, accordingly, this day granted an acknowledgment to his Excellency under my signature and seal, for the sum of fifty lacs of Lucknow sicca rupees, to the effect of the certificates issued in ordinary course to the subscribers to the loan. A copy, in English and Persian, of that instrument, is enclosed, for the information of your Excellency in Council. A copy of the instructions issued under my orders to the Resident at the Court of the Vizier is also enclosed.

5. I have it in contemplation to propose to his Excellency the Vizier a mode of discharging the interest on this loan, which will, I persuade myself, be mutually beneficial and convenient to both Governments, and which will form the subject of a future communication.

Sir :

1. I had the honour of reporting in person to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, the acquiescence of his Excellency the Vizier in the proposal which I submitted to his Excellency for the application of the interest of the sum of a crore of rupees, advanced as a loan to the Honourable Company by the Vizier, to the payment of the stipends and provisions which are payable by his Excellency's Government under the Honourable Company's guarantee.

2. I have now the honour of transmitting to you, for his Lordship's more particular information, a copy and translation of a letter and statement of stipends which I have submitted to his Excellency the Vizier, and translations of a letter and statement which I have received from his Excellency in reply.

3. The Vizier's desire to exclude the widow and children of the late Nawaub Ashruf Alee Khan from the influence of the beneficial arrangement, which has now been proposed to his Excellency, is not only untoward but embarrassing. By the tenor of Lord Teignmouth's letter to the Resident at Lucknow, under date the 28th of January 1798, a copy of which is enclosed, the sum of 7,000 rupees per mensem, as a provision for Ashruf Alee Khan and his relations, would appear to have been promised by the Vizier under the guarantee of the British Government; and the refusal or delay of the late and present Vizier to make payment of this provision has always been considered as a subject of just remonstrance on the part of the Resident at this Court.

4. It is, therefore, obviously desirable that the whole of the pension described, or at least that portion of it which belongs to the widow and children or near relations of the late Ashruf Alee Khan, should be included in the list of provisions to be made payable hereafter by our Government under the arrangement in discussion with the Vizier, and his Excellency's objection to this measure, proceeding as there is reason to believe from a personal dislike to some branches of the late Ashruf Alee Khan's family, is a matter of serious concern, as the only remaining source of unpleasant discussion with his Excellency on subjects of this nature.

5. With regard to his Excellency's remark, that the payment of all the pensions by our Government should commence from the 29th October last, being the day on which his Excellency's payment of a moiety of the loan to the Honourable Company was concluded, this desire can have proceeded only from the readiness which his Excellency evinced to complete the payment of a crore of rupees on the day on which the loan was agreed to, and it is for his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General to decide whether that offer on the part of the Vizier should be considered as the actual payment of the whole amount amount of the loan, and as entitling his Excellency to the interest, or to relief from the payment of the pensions commencing on that day.

P.S. Since writing the above, I have received a verbal intimation from the Vizier, of his acquiescence in my proposal regarding the pension of Teyubba Begum, combined with a further desire that the stipend of Mirza Rumzaun Ale Khan be included in the arrangement under discussion. This latter proposition on the part of his Excellency would require that the sum of ten lacs of rupees should be added to the loan of a crore which his Excellency has already agreed to; and consequently I must suspend my acquiescence in his Excellency's desire, till I be honoured with a communication of his Lordship's commands on the subject of it.

21st November 1814.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 18th November 1814.)

Some time ago I had the honour of proposing to your Excellency, by command of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, that the sum of six lacs of rupees per annum, or 50,000 rupees per mensem, being the interest of the sum of a crore of rupees recently lent by your Excellency to the Honourable Company, should be made applicable to the payment of the several pensions and provisions enjoyed from your Excellency's bounty by your relations and other subjects of your Government, under the express or implied guarantee of the Honourable Company's Government; and to this proposition on my part, your Excellency was pleased to express your ready and cheerful assent.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

I now submit to your Excellency a statement of the several provisions which appeared to be in your Excellency's contemplation, as well as in mine, at the time of our conference on this subject; and I suggest that the statement submitted be compared by your Excellency's officers with the receipts of the persons described, and in the case of its appearing to be correct that your Excellency's seal or sign manual be annexed to it, and that it be returned to my office for record.

I further suggest to your Excellency, that the arrears of the several pensions in question, up to the 1st of Zeehijj 1229 Hijjuree (or 14th November 1814), be discharged from your Excellency's treasury, and that the payment from the last-mentioned date be made from this treasury monthly. The balance of six lacs of rupees (namely, the sum of Rupees 3,888-10 annas) shall be paid into your Excellency's treasury by half-yearly instalments from the Resident's treasury at Lucknow.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 19th November 1814.)

I have received your letter of this date, with the enclosed statement of pensions proposed to be paid from the interest of my loan to the Honourable Company, requesting that the statement should be compared by my officers with their accounts, and should be returned to you with my signature or seal.

As it is my intention to pay Teyubba Begum, and the fourteen persons of that family connected with her, from my own treasury directly, as heretofore, I have withdrawn that provision from the statement, and have prepared another statement under my seal, which I transmit to you.

It is further my desire, that the payment of the several pensions by the Honourable Company should commence from the day on which the money was sent to your treasury.

Sir :

1. In a postscript to my letter of the 19th instant, I reported a verbal intimation from his Excellency the Vizier, through his Minister, of his Excellency's acquiescence in my proposal regarding the pension of Teyubba Begum, and also of his Excellency's desire that the stipend of Mirza Rumzan Alee Khan should be included in the list of provisions to be payable hereafter from the Honourable Company's treasury as the interest of his Excellency's loan.

2. At the time of my receiving the above intimation from his Excellency's Minister, Agha Meer, I had some reason to consider it as an anticipation, on the part of the Minister, of what he knew to be agreeable to our Government and was therefore anxious to bring about, rather than as a definitive proposal on the Vizier's part, which I was called upon to acquiesce in or decline.

3. His Excellency, however, on a subsequent occasion of our meeting, repeated the proposition himself, by referring to his message through Agha Meer, and inquiring if I approved the arrangement. I answered, that it appeared to me to be unobjectionable; and that on receiving his Excellency's new proposition in the same form with the former, that is, in writing under his Excellency's seal, I should submit it to the Right Honourable the Governor-General, with my own sentiments on the subject, which were favourable to his Excellency's views.

4. The Ministers attended me on the 25th instant, by his Excellency's desire, to consult with me on various matters, and among others on the form of the proposal regarding stipends, which his Excellency had commanded them to draw out with my advice. I dictated, on that occasion, to Rajah Dya-Krishen a form which seemed to me to be appropriate; and yesterday I had the honour of receiving from the Vizier a letter and statement under his seal, the former corresponding very nearly with the draft which I had dictated to Dya-Krishen.

5. Translations of both those documents are transmitted for his Lordship's perusal, and they appear to me to be conclusive on the subject of the beneficial arrangement which I was instructed to negotiate with the Vizier. His Lordship's authority for my receiving the balance of the loan from the Vizier, and for the future payment of the pensions described in his Excellency's statement, is all that would seem to be required.

6. I take this opportunity to acknowledge the receipt, on the 22d instant, of your important despatch of the 12th,* and to offer to his Excellency Lord Moira the expression of my cordial thanks for the clear and explicit instructions which his Lordship has issued for my guidance, and to which I shall most implicitly attend. On my receipt of the original papers from the Persian department, I shall seek a conference with his Excellency the Vizier to present them, and to submit for his Excellency's consideration such remarks as the tenor of them may suggest.

7. With a reference to the question of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan's removal from the Vizier's presence and counsels, which is one of those referred to in your despatch, I am happy to be enabled to report to you the actual departure of the Hukeem on the morning of the 20th instant, and his subsequent arrival at Khyrabad.

In my letter of the 5th of Zeehijj (19th instant), I transmitted to you a statement of the pensions to be hereafter paid from your treasury, excluding those of Teyubba Begum and her relations. On further consideration, it seems proper that, according to your original suggestions, Teyubba Begum should be included in the list; and it is further my present desire, that the allowance of Rumzaun Alee Khan should be added, making in all, as per the sealed statement enclosed, a sum of six lacs and fifty-one thousand rupees per annum, for which a provision shall be made. I therefore write to desire that the purport of this letter and statement be submitted by you to my respected uncle, the Right Honourable the Governor-General, Lord Moira, and in the case of his Lordship's approval, that the monthly stipends of all the persons named in the statement be issued hereafter from the Honourable Company's treasury, beginning with the first of the present month Zeehijj, 1229 Hijjuree (14th November 1814), and that their receipts be transmitted to me. Let my former sealed statement be returned.

3. His Excellency paid a visit to day to the Prince Mirza Soolimān Shekoh, and I had the honour of attending him. His Excellency, his son, and his Minister, were invested with khillats on this occasion, as being the first of their presentation to the Prince since his Excellency's accession to the musnud, and after the conclusion of those ceremonies his Excellency signified his pleasure to hold a conference at the Residency with me. At this conference his Excellency produced to me a draft of a letter to Lord Moira, containing the offer of a crore of rupees. I perused the draft in his presence, and in compliance with his particular desire; and I expressed my entire approbation of the matter and manner of the letter, and my conviction that it could not fail to produce the most lively satisfaction in the mind of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, as demonstrative, in an extraordinary degree, of his Excellency's friendship and regard for his Lordship's person and Government, and for the interests of the Honourable Company. A letter, under his Excellency's seal, in the terms of the draft which he shewed to me, but with some additional expressions, has since been received for transmission to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and shall be dispatched by the mail of this evening to his Lordship's Persian Secretary.

4. The matter of the loan being adjusted, his Excellency proceeded to announce to me his intention of deputing his Minister to wait on the Governor-General at Futtugurh, and congratulate his Lordship and Lady Loudon, in his Excellency's name, on their safe return to this neighbourhood, after so long and fatiguing a tour during a season of war and anxiety. This intention was announced in such a manner as to leave no room for my replying to his Excellency in any other terms than in those of entire approbation, and even to preclude my suggesting the propriety of consulting Lord Moira before the deputation should proceed. His Excellency mentioned to me, further, in a cursory manner, some unimportant matters of request, which he meant to submit to Lord Moira through me, or through the channel of his Minister, and begged my mediation and good offices to obtain the concession of those points. I assured his Excellency of my disposition to promote the accomplishment of his views by every means in my power, and merely requested him to consider the propriety of committing to paper the several requests which he hinted at, and transmitting them under his seal in a direct address to the Governor-General, which might either be forwarded by me or delivered by his Excellency's Minister, as his Excellency might be pleased to determine. His Excellency then took his leave.

5. A paper, containing the requests which the Vizier mentioned to me in the morning, has since been sent to me by his Excellency; and I shall take an early opportunity of submitting a translation of the paper, with my sentiments on the general subject of it, for the Governor-General's consideration. A duplicate, under his Excellency's seal, will, I conclude, be delivered to the Minister, to be by him submitted to his Lordship.

6. I have complied with the Vizier's requisition for a guard of the Honourable Company's troops to accompany the Minister on his journey; and, by his Excellency's particular desire, I have directed my Second Assistant to proceed with the Minister to Futtugurh, and remain with him during his absence from the capital.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 16th instant, communicating an offer, on the part of his Excellency the Vizier, of a further loan of a crore of rupees to the British Government. His Excellency's letter to the Governor General, referred to in your despatch above acknowledged, has also been received.

2. His Lordship has addressed a letter to the Vizier, in reply, in the terms of the enclosed English draft. The letter will be transmitted to you by the Persian Secretary, and you will be pleased to present it to his Excellency with the least practicable delay, and to accompany it with suitable expressions of thankfulness, conceived in the spirit of its contents.

3. You will receive an early communication of the Governor-General's instructions regarding the periods to be fixed for the instalments by which the loan is to be repaid.

4. The Governor-General cannot, however, defer the expression of his high approbation of the ability and address with which you have conducted the negotiation, concluded by the proposition, on the part of the Vizier, announced in your despatch. His Lordship ascribes the successful result of it, in a high degree, to your judicious and zealous efforts to impress on his Excellency's mind the exigency of the case and the sense of his own interests, as identified with those of the Company, which should lead him to afford the aid of his resources in support of the measures of the British Government.

Letter from
Governor-General.

To his Excellency the Vizier. (Written 20th March 1815.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter.* (Recapitulate that received the 18th March.)

The arduous and expensive war in which the Honourable Company is engaged with the Gorkah power, in defence of its rights, interests, and honour, and the necessity, at the same time, imposed on it of providing for the security of its own interests and those of its allies in other quarters, which but for such precautions would have been exposed to devastation from the irruption of predatory powers, had produced a pressure on the Honourable Company's finances, occasioning considerable anxiety to me lest any temporary embarrassment should be experienced.

In this state of things, your Excellency's friendly and most liberal offer of further pecuniary aid, to the extent of a crore of rupees, has been seasonably received.

The sense which I have always entertained of your Excellency's just conception of the identity of interests subsisting between the two States, has been powerfully confirmed by the fresh proof which you have thus afforded.

While your Excellency's offer is to be ascribed primarily to a sense of common interest and a just estimation of the public exigencies, I indulge the persuasion that it has, in some degree, been prompted by the impulse of your personal friendship and regard.

The frank statement of our actual situation which I have given to your Excellency, will enable you to judge of the degree in which the British Government and myself personally must feel the obligation arising from this distinguished mark of your regard, and of your conviction that the interests of the two States are inseparable.

I accept the offer, therefore, with that thankfulness and that sense of your friendship, which, under such circumstances, it cannot but have excited, and I shall shall instruct the Resident, without delay, to arrange with your Excellency the terms of the loan.

By the valour of the British arms and the support derived from your Excellency's friendship, I look forward to an early and successful termination of the contest with the Gorkahs, whose means of opposition are failing rapidly. In the adjustment of the terms of peace, it is my hope and expectation that an opportunity will be found of proving to your Excellency how justly your sentiments regarding the identity of our interests in the issue of the war were founded.

I shall be happy to receive the expression of your Excellency's wishes, which you state it to be your intention to convey to me through Major Baillie. It cannot be necessary for me to profess the gratification which it will afford me to be able to accomplish them to their full extent.

Your Excellency's intended deputation of your Minister to this quarter is highly gratifying to me, and I shall rejoice in the opportunity of manifesting, by every mark of attention to your Minister, the sincere regard, respect, and attachment, which I feel towards your Excellency's person.

1. In my despatch of the 20th instant, I apprized you that you would receive the instructions of the Governor-General relative to the periods of receipt and repayment of the loan of a crore of rupees, tendered by the Vizier to the Honourable Company and accepted by the Governor-General. I now proceed to communicate to you His Lordship's instructions on those points.

2. It is the wish of the Governor-General that the amount should be paid in two equal instalments, the first between the present date and the month of September next, and the second between the latter period and the 30th April 1816; the interest, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, to commence on the receipt of the cash into the Company's treasury at Lucknow.

3. His Lordship would wish the period of repayment to be fixed at three or four years from the date of 1st May 1816, the period of the receipt of the full amount of one crore, with a reservation to Government to defer the payment of the whole, or of part, should circumstances render it expedient. The interest, of course, to be continued to be paid on the whole, or on such sum remaining due, until the full amount of the principal shall have been discharged.

From His Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Received the 15th February 1815.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's gracious letter declining the acceptance of my offer to send some battalions with the British troops, to be paid from my treasury, as the urgency of the case did not require it, with the other expressions of kindness and favour.

As no separation of interests exists between the two Governments, it was under that feeling that the offer was made. Since the necessity of the case did not require the acceptance of that offer, and as I have heard from Major Baillie, as well as from other quarters, that in consequence of the necessity which has now occurred for raising troops great and heavy expenses are occasioned, I am desirous, from a sense of the intimate union which has been established from of old old between the two Governments, to contribute something more in the same way as before. But it is not in my power to provide a sum to the considerable amount which I wished, I have therefore determined with myself to afford the further sum of fifty lacs of rupees, and I now trouble your Lordship to request that you will give me notice whenever it may be wanted.

Letter from

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter. (Recapitulate contents of that received 15th February 1815.)

The sense with which I have uniformly been impressed of your Excellency's friendship and regard ever since your accession to the musnud of Oude, has been confirmed in no common degree by the fresh proof of which your Excellency has now afforded.

Your Excellency's offer is, indeed, dictated not less by a spirit of the most sincere and cordial friendship, than by a just sense of the connection subsisting between the British Government and your Excellency, whose interests must ever be inseparably associated with ours. Nothing but very peculiar considerations could have induced me to hesitate in accepting it.

I have directed Major Baillie to explain to your Excellency, frankly and without reserve, the nature of the circumstances here adverted to. I am confident that your Excellency would take the most lively interest in the accomplishment of the extensive military measures now in progress, had their result been to affect ourselves alone. They have been adopted in order to bring to a successful termination the contest in which we are now engaged to the eastward, as well as to secure the tranquillity and safety of the dominions of the Honourable Company and its allies in another quarter, for the protection of which annual precautions have of late years been required. Without additional provision those districts would be more particularly exposed to hazard, while so large a portion of the British troops continues to be employed in the Goorkah war. This last object must be efficiently applied, and your Excellency will perceive readily that your interests, no less than our own, must be most severely affected, unless the Goorkahs be taught to feel their incapacity to resist our power. These complicated demands arising at the same moment, have produced an extraordinary, though temporary pressure on the finances of the Honourable Company, such as has required to be met by proportionate efforts.

My obligations to your Excellency for your disposition to assist me in a conjuncture which must be an anxious one for me are most sincere, and I beg your Excellency to accept this cordial acknowledgment of them.

As no separation of interests exists between this State and the British Government, under this conviction, every succour and assistance which may be seasonably offered or afforded by me and my Government to the Honourable Company is in every respect fitting and proper; and I regard it as my good fortune to have an opportunity, in such times, of evincing my friendship for your Lordship. Impressed with this sentiment, and having heard from Major Baillie and from other quarters, that in consequence of the new levies of troops, and of the military preparations connected with the war in Nepaul and with other measures in progress, a heavy pressure is experienced on the finances of the Honourable Company, which cannot but occasion some anxiety to your Lordship's mind, it has occurred to me, in the spirit of the intimate union which has from of old subsisted between the two Governments, to devise and contribute something more in the same way as on a former occasion. After maturely considering what my Government was capable of doing, I have determined to afford another crore should it be required; and I accordingly write with the pen of friendship, to say that it is forthcoming when your Lordship shall intimate a wish to receive it.

Your Lordship will be apprized of further particulars, and also of some other necessary matters by Major Baillie, to whom I have fully explained myself. I hope, from your Lordship's kindness, that you will receive with a favourable ear what Major Baillie will represent to you on my part, and that you will lay me under obligations to your friendship.

I was desirous, on hearing of your Lordship's arrival at Futtugurh, to repair thither, for the purpose of enjoying an interview with you, but circumstances have prevented me from carrying my wishes into effect; I propose, therefore, to depute the high in rank and dignity, my Minister, Moatumud-ood-Dowlah Mookhtaur-ool-Moolk Syud Mohummud Khan Behauder Zeighum Jung, who will have the honour to state to your Lordship the several matters on which he has been fully instructed.

To the Honourable N. B. Edmonstone, Esq., Vice-President in Council,

Honourable Sir :

1. The heavy pressure of the war with Nepaul, and the other military preparations which I have deemed it to be my duty to adopt, as fully detailed in my despatch to your Honourable Board of the 9th of February, induced me to turn my thoughts to the expediency and practicability of obtaining a further pecuniary aid from his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, whose interest in the success of our measures is closely interwoven with that of the British Government, whose attachment to the Honourable Company is undoubted, and whose personal regard for myself, I was disposed to think, would render him desirous of contributing to the alleviation of our financial embarrassments, were he once apprized of them.

2. A private communication* was accordingly made, under my orders, to the Resident at his Excellency's Court, directing him to ascertain, as far as he might be able, the practicability of obtaining a further loan to the extent of a crore of rupees, and to take advantage of any circumstance which might appear to him as affording a prospect of success to open the matter to his Excellency.

3. Your Honourable Board will bear in recollection the offer which his Excellency the Vizier made to me, through the Resident, to raise for the service service of the war some battalions of Nujeebs to act with the British troops, and to be paid out of his Excellency's Treasury, while the war should continue. An English copy of my letter to the Vizier, declining with expressions of acknowledgment the proffered aid, as not being required in the circumstances of the moment, was transmitted to Fort-William, in a letter from the Secretary in the Political Department, under date the 26th December 1814.

Governor-General.

4. In reply to my letter above referred to, I received one from the Vizier, in which, after adverting to my declining the offer to raise Nujeeb battalions, and to the information which he states that he had received from Major Baillie, and other quarters, of the expense to which the Company was exposed by raising troops, his Excellency concludes by offering a loan of fifty lacs of rupees to the Honourable Company as a proof of his friendship.

5. Neither the amount of this offer, nor the manner in which it was made, appeared to me to be so satisfactory as to make it advisable that I should accept it on the part of the Honourable Company. You will observe, indeed, that it was made only under an imperfect knowledge of the actual extent of our present and prospective difficulties.

6. I determined, therefore, to decline it, and at the same time to authorize Major Baillie to explain more fully to the Vizier the circumstances of pecuniary embarrassment in which we were placed, and thus afford his Excellency an opportunity of manifesting his friendship by an offer more adequate to the occasion.

7. According to my expectation, the Vizier, on being made master of these circumstances, tendered in the most friendly manner the loan of a crore of rupees bearing interest at six per cent. The translation of the letter in which this offer is conveyed, and the previous correspondence not formerly transmitted to Fort-William, were forwarded to the Acting Chief Secretary in a letter from Mr. Swinton under date the 20th instant.

8. His Excellency having expressed a wish that his letter containing the offer of fifty lacs of rupees on loan should be withdrawn, I accordingly directed it to be returned to him through Major Baillie. I have, nevertheless, deemed it necessary that the translation of that letter should be sent for record with the other papers.

9. Major Baillie has, of course, transmitted to the Presidency a copy of his report of his proceedings in this negotiation, the conduct and result of which are highly creditable to that officer's ability and address.

10. The reply which I directed to be returned to Major Baillie, and an English draft of my letter to the Vizier, were transmitted to Fort-William in a letter from the Secretary in the Political Department of the 20th instant, and do not require at the present moment any particular observation.

11. I shall take into my immediate consideration the period for the receipt and repayment of the loan, and shall have the honour of apprizing you hereafter of my determination on those and other points connected with this arrangement.

12. I shall, at a future time, submit to your Honourable Board the tenor of the communications which I may hold with the Minister of his Excellency the Vizier after his arrival at this station, and the nature of his Excellency's proposed request, together with my decision on each.

13. I desire to offer to your Honourable Board my cordial congratulations on the accomplishment of an arrangement so beneficial to the finances of the Honourable Company at a period of great pressure.

1. We have had the honour to receive your Excellency's despatch of the 22d March, communicating a statement of your Lordship's negotiation with the Nawaub Vizier for obtaining a further pecuniary advance in aid of the exigencies of the public service, and the gratifying information of its conclusion, by an offer on the part of the Vizier of a second loan of a crore of rupees to the Honourable Company, and the acceptance of it by your Lordship.

2. We entertain a high sense of the importance of the arrangement concluded by your Excellency with the Vizier, which is calculated to afford such seasonable and substantial relief. We beg leave to offer to your Lordship our sincere and cordial congratulations on the successful issue of the negotiation.

3. The friendly and liberal spirit in which the offer of the Nawaub Vizier was made is an additional source of gratification. We consider the amicable solicitude which the Nawaub Vizier has manifested on this occasion, and indeed during the whole course of the war, to afford a distinguished proof of his Excellency's just and honourable attachment to the Company, and of his ardent zeal for the interest and prosperity of the British power in India, and a practical demonstration of the beneficial influence of your Lordship's personal intercourse and political transactions with the Vizier.

The

The truth of the matter is this : that as I have all along made his Lordship's wishes on this subject the rule of my conduct, so also now, and in future, it is my intention to cultivate his Lordship's pleasure, and to do nothing contrary to his wishes. The money which I have promised to give shall be paid whenever his Lordship thinks proper, and in any manner which he may prescribe. My reliance on the friendship and kindness of the Governor-General is unbounded, and as you know that, on the occasion of the former loan, I considered an acknowledgment under the seal of the Governor-General to be unnecessary, so in the present instance your giving me a receipt for the money, till the arrival of an acknowledgment signed and sealed by the Governor-General, is totally unnecessary, and my taking it would seem to indicate distrust.

His Lordship will send the acknowledgment when he thinks proper.

1. With a reference to the subject of the fourth paragraph of my letter under date the 16th of March last,* I have now the honour of reporting to you, for the information of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, that his Excellency the Vizier has this day formally announced to me his intention of deputing his son and heir apparent, the Nawaub Intezaz-ood-Dowlah Omdut-ool-Moolk Mirza Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder Khan Behauder Asud Jung, to visit his Lordship at Futtugurh, and that the Prince, attended by his deputy, the Nawaub Moatumud-ood-Dowlah Behadur, will commence his journey from this place as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made for his departure.

2. The route by which the deputation will proceed has not yet been finally determined on ; but as I propose to recommend to his Excellency their crossing the Ganges at Nanamow, I take the liberty of suggesting for consideration, that the civil officers of the Government in the districts of Cawnpore and Futtugurh be instructed to make the necessary preparations for the supply of the party with provisions at the different stages on the road, and for the honourable reception of the Prince on his approach to their respective districts. I calculate the number of the party, including troops, servants, and followers, to be ten thousand at the least, and the cattle of all descriptions to be nearly half that number.

3. I stated to you, in my despatch above noticed, my having received from his Excellency the Vizier a paper containing some requests, which his Excellency proposed to submit to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, through the medium of his Minister, Moatumud-ood-Dowlah. This paper has since formed the subject of discussion between his Excellency and me ; and from some remarks that were recently made by his Excellency, as well as from the tenor of his letter, a translation of which was conveyed to you by my despatch of the 10th instant, I have strong grounds to infer that a considerable alteration has been made in the draft of the paper of requests originally prepared by his Excellency, and that two or three of the articles are intended by his Excellency to be withdrawn. He promised this morning to furnish me with an amended copy.

2. Of the latter document, in pursuance of my intention formerly announced to you, I now transmit a translation; and proceed to submit such remarks on it as appear to be calculated to aid the deliberation of the Right Honourable the Governor-General on the purport of the several requests which the Vizier has submitted to his Lordship.

1st. Nuseer-ood-Dowlah and } 3. The conduct of Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, and of several of others. } his younger brothers, has certainly been frequently such as to give cause of displeasure to the Vizier; but it is chiefly, in my judgment, to be ascribed to the want of that mutual affection which is rarely observed among brothers, when each has a separate mother, and no common interest can exist. Nuseer-ood-Dowlah has himself several children by different mothers, among whom a natural jealousy subsists, and an appeal on the part of his eldest son to the Vizier against the alleged injustice of the father had occasioned the latter's sullen retirement from Court, and his refusal to receive his allowance, without the power, uncontrolled by the Vizier, of distributing it as he thought proper among his children, and retaining the provision of his son, which was distinctly allotted to him by his grandfather. This ground of disagreement, however, has been recently obviated, I understand, by a concession on the part of Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, who despairing of my interference in his behalf, has submitted to the will of the Vizier and received the arrears of his allowance. Yet it is probable that other grounds of displeasure against Nuseer-ood-Dowlah and some others of the family may exist, or may hereafter arise, in the mind of his Excellency the Vizier; and with a reference to all such occurrences, it would seem to be his Excellency's wish that some additional means be devised by his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, more efficient than even the declaration of non-interference by our Government, already conveyed to his Excellency, with a view to ensure the submission of his numerous brothers and relations.

2d. Shums-ood-Dowlah. 4. The purport of this article seems to proceed on a vague suspicion, for which I see no ground, of Shums-ood-Dowlah's being engaged in intrigues for the subversion of his Excellency's Government. The great jealousy and enmity which had long subsisted between the Vizier and his Excellency's brother, Shums-ood-Dowlah, during the lifetime of their father, have not suffered any diminution by the removal of Shums-ood-Dowlah to Benares, and will probably last during their lives; and although I see no just ground for apprehension in the mind of his Excellency the Vizier with regard to the proceedings of his brother, I should deem it to be just and expedient to answer this article of his Excellency's requests, by an unqualified assurance of protection and support to his Excellency's person and Government against all evil designs or intrigues, by whomsoever harboured or undertaken.

d. The inheritance of the Bhow } 5. His Excellency's right of inheritance to the personal gum. } property of the Begum could certainly not be maintained on the ground of the Mussulman law, though supported by the uniform practice of Indian princes and rulers.

6. The proceedings of our Government have recognized his Excellency's title to the residue of her Highness's personal property, after securing the provisions of her will in behalf of her relations and dependants; and the question which is now to be decided, is that of the justice and expedience of limiting the security for those provisions to the faith of his Excellency's Government, by transferring to him, or permitting him to take possession of, the whole of her Highness's property at her death, instead of retaining a considerable portion of it in the Honourable Company's funds, to ensure the regular payment of those provisions in perpetuity, as was clearly the intention of the arrangement which I concluded with the Begum in the month of August 1813, and which was subsequently ratified by the Governor-General.

Bengal Political
Consultations
20 June 1815.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

7. The Vizier's reference, on this occasion, to the case of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, which was decided in favour of his Excellency's father to the injury of the dependants of Tuhseen, is, I fear, an indication of the consequence which would result to the dependants of the Begum from an acquiescence in his Excellency's wish; but be this conjecture as it may, the two cases are so different in their nature, as to preclude the validity of an argument to be drawn from our concession of the one, in favour of any title in the Vizier to expect our acquiescence in the other.

4th. The Vizier's desire to obtain the district of Khyreegurh, and some others, as a gift from the Governor-General.

8. I have already submitted my sentiments on this subject at considerable length in a private letter* to Mr. Ricketts, and they are favourable to his Excellency the Vizier, whose liberal aid to our finances appears to me to entitle him to the most favourable consideration of our Government, in all cases where its own rights or interests alone, and not those of third parties, are concerned.

from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 25th of May 1815.)

The 16th of the present month of Jemadee-oos-Sanee (27th May) being finally fixed for the departure of my beloved son, the light of my eyes, Imteaz-ood-Dowlah Omdut-ool-Moolk Mirza Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder Khan Behadur Asud-Jung, on a deputation to congratulate my respected uncle, the Right Honourable the Governor-General, on his return with health and success from his tour to the Upper Provinces, and having resolved that Moatumud-ood-Dowlah Mookhtaur-ool-Moolk Seyyud Mohummud Khan Behadur, Zeighum Jung, and Rajah Dya-Krishen Behadur, shall accompany my son on this deputation, they will commence their journey, please God, on the day appointed towards Futtugurh. I therefore transmit for your perusal a letter which I have addressed on this occasion to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, containing a paper of requests in which three articles have been omitted, with a view to his Lordship's satisfaction. From your friendship and attachment, I expect that after perusing the letter and its enclosure with attention, you will state your opinion on the purport of them, and return them to me for transmission by the hands of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah.

Requests contained in a Letter from His Excellency the Vizier to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, received the 25th of May 1815.

First. Notwithstanding all my kindness and liberality, actual and intended, to Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, his conduct is still such as your Lordship will doubtless have learned from the reports of my friend Major Baillie, and I have instructed Moatumud-ood-Dowlah to explain to your Lordship more fully the proceedings of my said brother and others. Let some method be determined respecting them, which may ensure their submission and obedience and prevent their displeasing me in future.

Second. Shums-ood-Dowlah is employed at Benares in carrying on devices and intrigues. My Minister will detail his proceedings to your Lordship, with a view of obtaining such assurances as may give confidence and satisfaction to my mind.

Third. As I am the heir of the property in money and goods of my grandmother, the Bhow Begum, and as I have already agreed to provide for her dependants, I trust to your Lordship's justice and kindness for the security of my rights and interests in that quarter, and for such information regarding the views of the British Government as may lead to an adjustment of this affair similar to that which took place regarding the late Tuhseen Alee Khan.

Fourth.

* This letter does not appear upon the Consultations.

Fourth. As children naturally look up to their parents for all sorts of benefit and advantage, I rely on the accomplishment of my wish with regard to the district of Khyreegurh, either as a compensation for the interest of the loan or otherwise ; and if, in addition to Khyreegurh, some part of the Goorkah country that may be conquered and is contiguous to my dominions should be conceded to me by your Lordship, it would be considered as a gratifying mark of your paternal affection and regard. My Minister will submit my wishes on this subject to your Lordship in person.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

1. The Honourable the President in Council is apprized by the communications of the Resident at Lucknow of his Excellency the Vizier having intimated his intention to depute his son, the Nawaub Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder Khan, attended by the Minister Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, and the Dewan Rajah Dya-Krishen, for the purpose of congratulating the Governor-General on the completion of his Lordship's tour of the British Provinces. The Nawaub Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder accordingly arrived at this station on the 15th instant, attended by the Minister and the Dewan ; and having been received and entertained during his residence here with every mark of distinction suitable to his rank and to the intimate relations subsisting between the British Government and the State of Oude, commenced his march back to Lucknow this morning.

2. The Minister, Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, was, as the Vice-President in Council is already apprized, charged with a letter from the Vizier to the Governor-General, enclosing a paper of requests on the part of his Excellency, and was commissioned to obtain the answers of the Governor-General.

3. A translation of his Excellency's letter and of the paper of requests is enclosed, for the information of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, together with English copies of the Governor-General's letter in reply, and of his Lordship's answers to the Vizier's requests.

4. The principle on which the answers are framed is explained in the letter to the Resident at Lucknow of this day's date, a copy of which is enclosed for the information of the Honourable the Vice-President in Council, who will perceive in the tenor of those answers a strict attention to those sentiments in which his Lordship had the satisfaction of believing his colleagues concurred with him on former discussions.

5. The Governor-General deemed it proper to avail himself of the occasion of his conference with the Minister on the 20th instant, to express the sense cherished by the British Government of the extraordinary liberality of his Excellency, in the pecuniary aid which he afforded to the Government during the late season of actual and apprehended exigency, and to satisfy his Excellency's mind by an assurance that the British Government did not entertain the intention of again trespassing on the liberality of his Excellency's disposition.

from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Received the 16th June 1815.)

After compliments :

After expressing my earnest desire for the happiness of a personal meeting, which is the first wish of my heart, I proceed to observe, that the relations of close and intimate friendship and union between the two States, such as they have subsisted from former times, are so conspicuous and well known to all the world, that it would be superfluous to enlarge on the subject. From the day of my ascending the musnud of my hereditary dominions, I have ever been, and continue to be, entirely occupied with the desire to cultivate our ancient friendship and union, and to promote the satisfaction of the rulers of the British Government, and especially to seek the gratification of your Lordship, for whose kindness, favours, and gracious disposition towards me, I am impressed with a sense of the highest obligation and gratitude. It is my wish that the friendship and cordiality existing between the two Governments may continue daily to increase, sentiments which have, no doubt, been communicated to your Lordship by Major Baillie. Under the influence of those sentiments, I have resolved to depute my dear son, the light of my eyes, Imteaz-ood-Dowlah Omdut-ool-Moolk Mirza Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder Khan, to congratulate your Lordship on your return from your tour in health and with triumph. He will be accompanied by Moatumud-ood-Dowlah Mookhtaur-ool-Moolk Syyud Mohummud Khan and Rajah Dya-Krishen, both of whom are the true and faithful servants of this State. The 16th Jemadee-oos-Sanee (27th May) has accordingly been fixed for the departure of my dear son, on which day the party will receive the leave with marks of peculiar honour and distinction, and by the blessing of God commence their journey, travelling by regular stages until they shall reach Futtugurh and have the honour of paying their respects to your Lordship. I am satisfied that they will experience every mark of kindness and attention from your Lordship, and that their reception will be suitable to their relative rank, dignity, and station; for this will redound to your Lordship's reputation, and will strengthen and cement the foundations of our ancient friendship and union. It will also be highly gratifying to me, and will lay me under obligations to your Lordship.

Some points which I deem it necessary to bring before your Lordship are stated in the enclosed paper, to which I request your Lordship's attention, and I trust in your kindness and favour to receive a satisfactory answer to them.

Further, may the days of your prosperity and happiness be perpetual.

Letter from
Governor-General.

I have been highly gratified by the receipt of your Excellency's letter, which has been delivered to me by the Minister, Moatumud-ood-Dowlah. (Recapitulate contents of letters received 16th June.)

I participate in the fullest manner in the sentiments expressed in your Excellency's letter. To renew the assurances of my most cordial disposition, to co-operate with you in cementing the foundations of the intimate friendship and alliance which have always subsisted between the two States, would be an unnecessary repetition of those sentiments which I have so often expressed, and which it has been the object of all my measures connected with the affairs of Oude to manifest to your Excellency and to the world, both by words and deeds. My anxious endeavours to improve the prosperity of your Government, to augment your reputation, and to promote your personal comfort and satisfaction, are amply rewarded by the gratification which I derive from the cordial expressions of your Excellency's friendship and regard, and by my knowledge of the benefits already derived from the progress of those important measures, which at the recommendation of the British Government you have been pleased to adopt. A firm and resolute perseverance in those objects cannot fail to prove the source of happiness to your subjects, and of conscious satisfaction as well as real advantage to yourself.

Had any proof been wanting of your Excellency's regard, it has been supplied in the most gratifying shape, by the deputation of your son, attended by your Ministers, to congratulate me on my return from my tour through the Upper Provinces of Hindostan. I feel all the value of the compliment, and I desire to offer to your Excellency my most sincere acknowledgments for this last and most acceptable pledge of your personal friendship.

I have endeavoured to manifest my sense of this proof of your Excellency's attachment by the most honourable reception of your Excellency's son. I have also, in the manner of my reception of the Minister and the Dewan, been solicitous to mark my respect for persons justly possessing your Excellency's confidence. As your Excellency's son and the Ministers are now about to return to Lucknow, I propose to give them their leave with every mark of distinction and honour.

Your Minister has made the necessary communications to me on the subject of the paper enclosed in your letter, and I have discussed with him at a private audience the several subjects which it embraces.

The enclosed paper, under my seal and signature, contains my answers to your Excellency's requests, the tenor of which will, I trust, be entirely satisfactory on the particular points to which it refers, and will form a fresh proof of my sincere desire to consult your wishes to the fullest extent.

For further particulars I refer your Excellency to the communications of the minister, Moatumud-ood-Dowlah.

The Vizier's Propositions.

First. Notwithstanding all my kindness and liberality, actual and intended, to Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, his conduct is still such as his Lordship will doubtless have learnt from the reports of my friend Major Baillie, and I have instructed Moatumud-ood-Dowlah to explain to your Lordship more fully the proceedings of my said brother and others. Let some method be determined respecting them, which may ensure their submission and obedience, and prevent their displeasing me in future.

Second. Shums-ood-Dowlah is employed at Benares in carrying on devices and intrigues. My Minister will detail his proceedings to your Lordship, with a view of obtaining such assurances as may give confidence and satisfaction to my mind.

Third. As I am the heir of the property in money and goods of my grandmother the Bhow Begum, and as I have agreed to provide for her dependants, I trust to your Lordship's justice and kindness for the security of my rights and interest in that quarter, and for such information regarding the views of the British Government as may lead to an adjustment of this affair, similar to that which took place regarding the late Tuhseen Alee Khan.

The Governor-General's Answers.

The insubordinate and disrespectful conduct of his Excellency the Vizier's brothers cannot fail to excite my regret and displeasure: Such conduct must always meet with my decided reprobation. On a former occasion I declared to his Excellency, that I considered him to possess complete authority over his brothers; and I take this opportunity of repeating the assurance, that the British Government regards his Excellency as having an inherent plenitude of power in that respect. Any proportioned and wholesome severity used by his Excellency, when the conduct of any of his brothers or relations has been refractory or contumacious, can never be the subject of remark from the British Government. In no case could that Government or its representative at his Excellency's Court make an observation relative to such a subject; unless where unfounded or exaggerated representations had been used to excite his Excellency's displeasure against one of his family, in which event his Excellency would expect the Resident to enable him to detect the fraud practised on him.

Any intrigues or any disrespectful proceedings on the part of Shums-ood-Dowlah relative to his Excellency, will not only receive no countenance from the British Government, but will be checked and reprehended in the most marked and decided manner. On this point his Excellency may feel the most perfect security.

The engagement made between the British Government and her Highness the Bhow Begum, during the reign of the late Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan, and before my accession to this Government, will be in the recollection of his Excellency. That engagement was ratified and confirmed by me, both because the faith of the Government was already virtually pledged, and because I considered it to combine with the fulfilment of our obligations to the Begum the most entire regard for the rights of the sovereignty of Oude. Our good faith requires that the engagement so incurred shall be fulfilled; but his Excellency may rest assured, that the surplus of her Highness's wealth, after providing the requisite funds for the discharge of her bequests, according to the agreement, shall be faithfully paid into his Excellency's treasury.

It is superfluous to report, that no interference on the part of the British Government will take place with regard to her Highness' jagiers, which will, of course, on her demise, revert to the State of Oude.

Fourth. As children naturally look up to their parents for all sorts of benefit and advantage, I rely on the accomplishment of my wish with regard to the district of Khyreegurh, either as a compensation for the interest of the loan or otherwise; and if, in addition to Khyreegurh, some parts of the Goorkbah country that may be conquered and is contiguous to my dominions should be conceded to me by your Lordship, it would be, considered as a gratifying mark of your paternal affection and regard. Sir:

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

1. Your despatch of the 29th May was duly received and submitted to the Governor-General, but a reply was necessarily suspended until the articles of request on the part of his Excellency the Vizier should be discussed with the Minister, Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, and his Lordship's answers regularly drawn up and delivered to the Minister.

2. The Nawaub Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder Khan having arrived at this station on the 15th instant, attended by the Minister Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, and the Dewan, Rajah Dya Krishen, was publicly received by the Governor-General at breakfast on the following morning; and after his Highness took his leave, the Minister, at a private audience of the Governor-General, delivered to his Lordship a letter from the Vizier, enclosing the paper of which a translation accompanied your despatch now acknowledged.

3. On the 20th instant the Governor-General again received the Minister in private, when the subject of the requests was discussed, and the tenor of the answers proposed to be returned was communicated to the Minister.

4. On the 23d instant, on which day the Nawaub Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder took leave of the Governor-General, his Lordship delivered to the Minister a letter to his Excellency the Vizier, enclosing a paper, under his signature and seal, containing the answers to his Excellency's requests drawn out in regular form. On the same day his Lordship conferred khillats on the Minister and Dewan and gave them their dismissal.

5. Copies in English and Persian of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier, and the answers to his Excellency's requests, are herewith transmitted; and I am directed to communicate to you the following observations, in explanation of the principles on which those answers have been framed.

Relative to the contumacy of Nuseer-ood-Dowlah and the other brothers and relations, his Lordship does not distinctly discern any means, on his part, of strengthening his Excellency's authority in that respect. An unqualified assurance that the British Government would in no possible case intercede in behalf of the relations of the Vizier might be interpreted into a sanction for any measures

6. The Governor-General having already declared to the Vizier, in his Lordship's answer to his Excellency's former papers, that he considered his Excellency to be possessed of uncontrolled authority over his brothers and measures of hardship, severity, or oppression, into which the Vizier might be hurried, by his own caprice, or the insidious and unfounded representations of unprincipled advisers. To remain entirely neutral in such cases would not become the British Government, which must partake largely in the public opinion of the discredit of such a procedure as is supposed. While, therefore, the Governor-General could not hesitate in repeating his recognition of the plenitude of his Excellency's authority over his brothers and the other members of his family, his Lordship has reserved the right of interposing to correct or mitigate any proceeding founded on false or exaggerated statements. The fitness of such interposition must be determined by the circumstances of each particular case, and your knowledge of his Lordship's sentiments and principles of action with reference to the Government of Oude will enable you to regulate your conduct.

2d. Relative to the alleged conduct of Shums-ood-Dowlah. } 7. The Governor-General has no reason to suppose that these charges against Shums-ood-Dowlah, originate in any other cause than the Vizier's natural jealousy and suspicion of his brother. There could be no hesitation, however, on his Lordship's part, in conveying the most positive assurances to his Excellency, that such proceedings on the part of Shums-ood-Dowlah would not only receive no countenance from the British Government but be severely reprobated,

3d. Expressing his Excellency's desire to be put in possession of the wealth of the Bhow Begum at her demise. } 8. The tenor of the engagement with the Bhow Begum, imposes on the British Government the obligation of securing to her relations and dependants the bequests allotted to them by her Highness's testamentary disposition of her property, which can only be effectually secured by vesting in the hands of the Honourable Company a fund adequate to the purpose. It is certain, too, that the Begum considered the arrangement to be entirely independent of the Vizier's Government, and the British Government is bound to act on that principle. Admitting the Vizier's present disposition to fulfil the objects of her Highness's will, it is obvious that occasions might, and judging from past experience, there is no doubt that they would frequently arise, for discussion and altercation, relative to the stipends, which would disturb the harmony between the two Governments, and the objects happily secured by the terms of the first loan would thus be defeated by the introduction of new causes of altercation and dispute.

9. A compliance with the Vizier's wishes in this instance was therefore inadmissible; and his Lordship has declared it in the terms of the answer to the third article, adding the most satisfactory assurances relative to her Highness's surplus wealth and the reversion of the jagiers.

4th. Requesting that Kyree-gurh, and a portion of the territories that may be conquered from the Goorkahs, may be granted to his Excellency. } 10. The Governor-General entertains the most cordial disposition to comply with this request, and will be prepared to carry it into effect, as soon as the conclusion of peace with the Goorkahs shall render it practicable and expedient.

At that time, also, the footing on which the grant shall be made will be considered with a reference to the extent and value of the territory: in the meanwhile, his Lordship hopes that the terms of the answer to this article will prove satisfactory to his Excellency the Vizier.

11. You will observe that the Governor-General has availed himself of this occasion of addressing the Vizier, to advert to the progress of the measure of reform in the revenue administration of Oude, and other arrangements for the improvement of the country, adopted at the instance of the British Government. His Lordship hopes that this will testify the importance attached by the British Government to the success of those arrangements, and afford you, if necessary, an opportunity of drawing his Excellency's attention to the subject. The Minister has been apprized of the contents of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier.

12. The Nawaub Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder, attended by the Minister and Dewan, commenced his march this morning on his return to Lucknow.

13. The Governor-General has endeavoured, by his reception of the Nawaub and the Ministers and by the arrangements for their accommodation on their march, to manifest his friendship and regard for the Vizier and his son, and his consideration for the Minister.

Dated the 27th September 1808.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
27 Sept. 1808.

Par. 245. On the proceedings noted in the margin * is recorded another correspondence which took place between the Resident at Lucknow and the Commanding-Officer in the Field, and other officers, relating to operations to be undertaken at the desire of the Vizier against a refractory Zemindar in his Excellency's dominions. That correspondence was originally recorded in the Judicial Department, but requiring instructions to the Resident at Lucknow was transferred to this. The former part of this correspondence was brought under your Honourable Court's consideration in the 129th and following paragraphs of our letter of the 29th of March.

246. It appears from the circumstances stated in a letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory to the Resident, dated the 4th April (included in that correspondence), to be highly probable that the origin of the dispute was at least as much to be ascribed to the misconduct and oppressions of the Vizier's Aumil, as to a refractory disposition on the part of the Zemindar; and we were consequently extremely anxious to avoid having recourse to any coercive measure against the latter, which might be considered as an encouragement to injustice and oppression. It is, indeed, to be feared, that the British troops are too often employed on such unjust occasions; but as we are bound by treaty to assist the Vizier in cases of resistance to his authority, there appears to be no complete remedy, but the very distant and improbable one of a reform in the vicious system of his Excellency's administration. At the same time, it certainly is desirable that coercive measures should be suspended, in all possible cases, by a system of proceeding which should bring to light any acts of injustice on the part of his Excellency's public officers, whose authority the British arms are required to support, so as to subject the perpetrators to punishment or to the legitimate restraints of the local government. In the present case, the Resident was desired to urge to the Vizier the propriety of ascertaining the circumstances stated by Lieutenant-Colonel Gregory, and to represent to his Excellency the impropriety of employing the English troops in cases, the justice of which was questionable, till by a previous inquiry the merits of the case should be ascertained. He was desired also to suggest the propriety of a person being deputed by by the Vizier to enquire into the circumstance represented by Colonel Gregory, in concert with another to be deputed by the Resident himself, provided he should deem such a measure advisable with reference to local circumstances.

247. Colonel Gregory having stated the negligence of the Vizier's officers in securing supplies for his detachment, Captain Baillie was directed to make particular enquiries into this circumstance, and to call on the Vizier to issue positive orders for the provision of the requisite supplies. These instructions are recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin.*

248. Captain Baillie, in his reply which is recorded on the annexed date,† states his conviction, notwithstanding the vices and abuses of the Vizier's Government, that the measures in the case of the Zemindar in question were founded in justice and expediency, and such as he would himself have recommended. He further stated, that it was his practice, in all cases, to make a previous inquiry into the justice of the cause in which he was called on to employ the British troops, as, with reference to the actual state of the Vizier's Government, the employment of those troops in support of his Excellency's Aumils, without minute investigation, had since his appointment to the Residency invariably been the subject of his anxiety and concern. With regard to the failure in the supplies of provisions, he reported that inquiries would be made; but he added, that he was compelled to believe that the indisposition which appeared among the Vizier's officers to aid and assist the British troops, was to be ascribed to the pernicious effect of his Excellency's own conduct and example, which he had in vain endeavoured to correct by every conciliatory expedient.

249. We are enabled to state, that the dispute with the Zemindar above mentioned has been since amicably settled.

Par. 86. The letters recorded on the dates noted in the margin‡ contain a report of the proceedings of a detachment employed in the district of Kewae, in the territories of the Nawaub Vizier, against some refractory Zemindars. Your Honourable Court will observe, that in consequence of the severe example made of the garrison of one of the forts in that district, the whole of the remaining ones were abandoned or delivered up without resistance. We are most sensible of the advantage of bringing this species of service to an early conclusion by the effects of intimidation; but we cannot but regret the necessity of such severities, in cases where the degree of guilt on the part of the sufferers is so uncertain and ill-defined, as in the disputes between the Zemindars and the Aumils of the Vizier. It is always with reluctance that the Company's troops are employed on this kind of service, when, from the known defects of the Vizier's Government, it is often highly probable that the disturbance has been occasioned by the oppressions and exactions of the Vizier's officers, as much as by the turbulent and seditious spirit of the Zemindars; and it would certainly be a satisfaction to us to know that the service could be performed without having recourse to measures of such extremity as appear to have been necessary on the occasion in question. We directed the above sentiments to be communicated to Captain Baillie, in reply to his despatch reporting the operations of the detachment; expressing, at the same time, our high sense of the spirit and military skill evinced by Major O'Donnel and the officers under his command. We further stated, that our confidence in the character of Major O'Donnel precluded the admission of the slightest idea, that any thing but conviction of the necessity of the measure would have induced him to adopt it, and that our observations were by no means intended to convey any censure on that respectable officer. The letter to Captain Baillie containing the foregoing instructions is recorded on the date noted in the margin.§

79. In the 148th paragraph of our last-mentioned despatch,† we expressed our approbation of your determination, at the request of the Nawaub Vizier, and agreeably to the third article of the Treaty of 1801, for furnishing his Excellency with a battering-train for effecting the capture of some fortresses in the districts of Behar and Dalmow, the possessions of which appeared to have resisted the authority of his Excellency's Aumils and to have withheld the payment of the revenues. As, from the correspondence referred to in the paragraph before us, it appeared to you to be highly probable that the origin of the dispute was at least as much to be ascribed to the misconduct and oppression of the Vizier's Aumils as to a refractory disposition on the part of the Zemindar, you evinced a very laudable anxiety to avoid having recourse to coercive measures against the latter, which might be considered as an encouragement to injustice and oppression. A similar line of conduct must be followed in all such cases in future. We cannot too highly applaud the practice which the Resident at Lucknow, Captain Baillie, says he has invariably followed, of making a previous inquiry into the justice of the cause in which he was called on to employ the British troops, and that, with reference to the actual state of the Vizier's Government, the employment of these troops in support of his Excellency's Aumils without investigation, had, since his appointment to the Residency, been the subject of his anxiety and concern. Letter from, dated 13th January 1809.—(86:) Detachment under Major O'Donnell employed in the district of Kewae for the support of the Vizier's authority over certain refractory Zemindars.

43. We have often had occasion to lament the frequency of detachments of our troops being called upon in support of the authority of his Excellency the Vizier, in cases of dispute between his Aumils and Zemindars as to the payment of the revenues. It were to be wished, in order to avoid coercive measures, that some mode might be adopted for adjusting the disagreements that may occasionally arise between the Nawaub's Aumils and the renters, through the interference of the Resident, which might not be considered as an encroachment on his Highness's authority over that part of his country remaining in his possession. We feel great concern for the consequences of the operations of of Major O'Donnell's detachment against the garrison of Pathur Surace, as described in the letter from that officer of the 1st November 1808. We regret with you the necessity of such severities, in cases where the degree of guilt on the part of the sufferers is so uncertain and ill-defined as in the disputes between the Zemindars and the Aumils of the Vizier, but we are not prepared to propose a remedy. We can only recommend the subject to your serious consideration.

POLITICAL LETTER from BENGAL,

Dated the 15th October 1811.

1. Agreeably to the intention expressed in our address of the 27th July last, we now proceed to bring under the notice of your Honourable Court, the circumstances connected with the endeavours employed by this Government to introduce into the territories of his Excellency the Vizier a reform of the vicious system of his Excellency's administration.

2. Your Honourable Court cannot fail to have observed with sentiments of regret and concern, the frequent occasions for the employment of British troops in reducing to obedience the Zemindars of the Vizier's territory, who have been represented by his Excellency or by the Aumils to be refractory. The cause of resistance, on the part of the Zemindars, to the authority of the Aumils has too frequently been the oppressions and undue exactions of the Vizier's officers and the over-assessment of the lands; and the British Government has thus often been required to support, by the aid of its troops, the cause of injustice, and to contribute to the preservation of a system injurious to the real interests of the State, and destructive of the rights, the comfort, and prosperity of the people.

3. Your Honourable Court is apprized, by former reports, of the endeavours employed by this Government to establish, in concert with the Vizier, an arrangement which should afford the means of investigating the merits of the cause in which our aid was demanded, previously to the actual adoption of coercive measures. But the peculiar character and disposition of the Vizier has rendered those endeavours abortive. Indeed, an effectual remedy for the evil of which we have so much reason to complain would not be afforded even by the success of those endeavours, because the evil exists in the system itself, which independently of any injustice on the part of the Aumils, has a tendency to deprive the Zemindars and farmers of the means of fulfilling their engagements. A power of inquisition established in the hands of the Resident at the Vizier's Court cannot reach the evils and abuses proceeding from a system of dominion, from which the administration of justice is totally excluded, and in which the will of the Sovereign, stimulated by a spirit of insatiable rapacity, constitutes the law.

4. The present Resident at Lucknow, Major Baillie, has, in more than one instance, taken the occasion of the employment of our troops on services of the nature above described, to employ all the influence of his representative character, with a view to induce the Vizier to adopt an improved system for the assessment and collection of his revenues in those parts of his territories which were the scenes of disturbance; but his efforts have proved fruitless. We shall advert with some degree of detail to the circumstances of the last occasion, as being the immediate cause of the adoption of those measures which it is the purpose of this address to report to your Honourable Court.

5. In the month of July 1810, the Vizier founded on the reports of his Aumil of Purtaubgurh, relative to the refractory conduct of the principal Zemindars, a requisition for the aid of our troops, to support the authority of the Aumil and to effect the destruction of the fortresses of all the Zemindars in the district; a requisition extended with respect to the neighbouring districts of Sultanpore and Dalmow.

6. The

6. The measure properly adopted by the Resident on that occasion was to issue instructions to the officers commanding the British troops stationed at Purtaubgurh and Sultaupore, directing them to investigate and report upon the merits of the several alleged causes of complaint against the Zemindars, the state of the districts, and the character and conduct of the principal landholders, with a view to be prepared to pursue such measures of a military nature as justice might demand when the rainy season should expire. The intentions of the Resident, however, were not confined to this object. He judiciously endeavoured to combine with it the accomplishment of a system of reform with regard to those districts which might subsequently be extended to others, and thereby lay a foundation for a general improvement in the administration of the country. The sole object of the Vizier himself was to effect the destruction of all the forts, not only in these districts but throughout his Excellency's dominions, which afforded the Zemindars the means of resisting either the just or the unjust demands of the Aumils. The Resident, on the contrary, while he admitted the policy and acquiesced in the proposal of destroying the forts, wisely sought to provide for the future security of the Zemindars against oppression and exaction, and for the realization of the dues of Government, by ascertaining the real assets of the districts, and founding on a knowledge of them the assessment of the lands to be secured by a triennial settlement.

7. In pursuance of his views, the Vizier, in the course of his correspondence on this subject with the Resident, proposed, with reference to the Resident's complaint of the neglect of persons already acting in the districts in quality of Ameens in failing to transmit information regarding the state of the country, that some respectable person should be appointed by his Excellency with suitable assistants, and another person with requisite assistants on the part of the Resident, to ascertain the condition and strength of the several forts, the number of armed men with the Zemindars, their strong holds, &c., so that every necessary information regarding the forts being obtained during the rainy season, measures might with the greater facility be adopted for their demolition when the season for military operations should arrive; proposing, at the same time to the consideration of the Resident, the expediency of their subsequently proceeding into the districts in question, and there determine on future measures.

8. The Resident in his reply, after adverting to the insufficiency of the measures which had already been adopted to ascertain the state of the districts, expressed his intention of selecting some respectable person to accompany another on the part of the Vizier, to ascertain the real condition of the districts with a view to their future settlement, and stated his readiness to attend the Vizier to the spot at a proper season, and assist him in concluding the settlement; intimating at the same time, that measures should be adopted after the rains for effecting the demolition of the forts by means of troops and a battering-train, if intermediate arrangements should not preclude the necessity of pursuing those means.

9. His Excellency the Vizier, in replying to this communication, objected to the Resident's proposition of deputing Ameens for the purpose of ascertaining the state of the districts with a view to a final settlement of them, observing that his own proposal went no further than to depute persons for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the forts and the military strength of the Zemindars preparatory to the reduction of the former, and that the object proposed by the Resident was unnecessary, as Ameens were already in the districts.

10. The Resident deemed it necessary to report his proceedings at this stage of his negotiations, for the purpose of obtaining the instructions of Government. He adverted to the Vizier's perversion of the object of deputing Ameens, and observed that the limited purpose proposed by the Vizier would render that measure nugatory. That if it was the wish of Government that the whole of the fortresses in the Vizier's dominions be destroyed, with a view to the permanent tranquillity of the country and the easy realization of its revenue, without referenc to the conduct of his Excellency's Aumils or Zemindars, there there appeared to be no necessity for an investigation of the causes of disorder in the districts of Purtaubgurh, Sultanpore, and Dalmow; and he conceived that the employment of the disposable force already stationed at Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh, with the aid of a battering-train from Elahabad, would answer every purpose of the Vizier's present requisition in the course of a few months of the ensuing cold season. But if the expediency of the repeated destruction of forts in his Excellency's dominions, which past experience had proved that the neglect or venality of his Aumils might soon recall into existence, independently of the consideration of justice towards the landholders by whom those fortresses were erected for the purposes of self-defence against the rapine and extortion of the Aumils, were a question of doubt, there seemed strong ground to insist on the measure of deputing the Ameens on this occasion, in the hope of accomplishing every just object of the Vizier's Government, without engaging in extensive military operations, from the result of which no permanent benefit could be expected under the present system of the Vizier's administration.

11. The Resident proceeded to state, that it was at the same time but justice to observe, that the Vizier had lately appeared to be fully sensible of the ruinous consequences of the system of farming his revenues, in the manner hitherto practised, to persons totally unworthy of trust, and that a considerable portion of his dominions was then under the management of Ameens, whose instructions had been prepared, at the Resident's suggestion, in terms very similar to those adopted in the Company's territories. That a proclamation against the construction or repair of fortresses, under a heavy penalty, and in terms suggested by the Resident, had been circulated to most, if not all of the Aumils and principal land-holders in the country; and that his Excellency had repeatedly recognized and acquiesced in a declaration of the Resident's, that no future requisition for the reduction of a fortress already taken and destroyed, or made over to an Aumil, by the exertions of a British force, should under any circumstances be complied with, save as a voluntary concession on the part of the British Government, not implied by even the spirit of its engagements.

12. On the other hand, the Resident remarked, that the precarious expectation of any permanent salutary effects from the measures which had been thus recently adopted at his suggestion, by no means appeared to warrant an immediate decision in favour of the Vizier's requisition for the reduction of all the forts in his dominions, or even in the district of Purtaubgurh, without an investigation into the state of the country in the manner which he (the Resident) had proposed.

13. In reply to this communication, the Resident was informed that Government entirely approved his suggestion to the Vizier on the subject of the Ameens: that it was left, however, at his discretion, to urge the adoption of the measure, when he should have received the reports which he had called for from the commanding officers in Purtaubgurh and Sultanpore: that Government, at the same time, was by no means prepared, as the alternative of the suggested measure, to acquiesce in the perverted object of it proposed by the Vizier; and that, with regard to the question of destroying the forts, the only determination Government was at present disposed to form was, that they should be destroyed in cases in which the possessors had taken advantage of them to resist the just authority of the State, and compelled the employment of our troops to enforce their obedience.

14. The reports furnished by Lieutenant-Colonel Samuel Palmer, commanding in Purtaubgurh, relative to the conduct of the principal Zemindars, in conformity to the Resident's instructions, represented them generally in a state of disobedience, and appeared to justify the orders which the Resident in consequence issued to Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer and the officer commanding in Sultanpore, to proceed to the destruction of the forts in the three districts, of which he transmitted a list of twenty-two, calling at the same time for a battering-train from Elahabad. But Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer was also directed by the Resident to mediate an adjustment of the demands of the Aumils on the Zemindars, without relinquishing the object of destroying the forts; an object which the the Vizier continued to urge, although with views different from those of the Resident, who was anxious to combine with that desirable measure such a settlement of the country as would deprive the Zemindars of the only plea on which they could justify a claim to the possession of their forts.

Political Letter
from Bengal.

15. This contrariety of views formed the subject of a long and vexatious correspondence between the Vizier and the Resident, the general outline of which it will be proper to trace. But as no difference of opinion existed with regard to the expediency of destroying the forts in the three refractory districts, that service was undertaken and pursued with success, and without resistance on the part of the Zemindars, but not without difficulties and delays, arising from the negligence or inactivity of the Vizier's officers in furnishing supplies to the British troops and materials for the demolition of the forts.

16. That part of the Resident's correspondence with the Vizier to which we have above alluded, commenced by his Excellency's requesting the Resident to suggest some plan for the restoration of order in the three districts, and to state his opinion regarding the expediency of his Excellency's proceeding thither in person, or deputing Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan to settle the affairs of the districts. Mehdee Alee Khan, it may be proper to observe, is Aumil of Khyrabad and Mohomdee, districts in the northern quarter of the Vizier's territories, and the most able and intelligent of his Excellency's Aumils.

17. In reply, the Resident very properly observed, that if the Vizier's object was merely the punishment of the refractory Zemindars and the reduction of their forts, neither his Excellency's presence in the districts, nor the deputation of Mehdee Alee Khan was necessary. That neither would his Excellency's progress through the districts be attended with any advantage, if it was his intention, in the future arrangements for those districts, to revert to the original system of consigning them to farmers, nor in the case of his Excellency's determining to retain them aumancee, that is, under charge of officers appointed by the Government, if he entrusted the settlement of the lands to the Tehsildars then in employment. But, on the other hand, if his Excellency proposed to make a settlement of that portion of his dominions in the manner adopted in the Company's territories, his Excellency's presence in the districts was certainly advisable, and might prove beneficial in the highest degree.

18. With respect to the deputation of Mehdee Alee Khan (meaning as the alternative of the Vizier's proceeding to the districts in question), the Resident discouraged it on the ground of the apparent impracticability of his taking charge of the affairs of those districts with effect, in addition to the charge he already held in a distant quarter of his Excellency's dominions.

19. In a subsequent letter, however, written after a personal conference with the Vizier on the subject of it, the Resident founded partly on the tenor of that conference, and partly on the receipt of intelligence from Colonel Palmer regarding the disinclination or inability of the Aumils to furnish supplies and other necessities for the troops, a proposition for the deputation of Mehdee Alee Khan to the districts in question, for the purpose of collecting the necessary supplies in the first instance, and for other important purposes; alluding, as subsequently explained by the Resident, principally to an investigation into the state of the districts and their real assets, with a view to a future final settlement. The Vizier, however, interpreted this proposition to be the deputation of Mehdee Alee Khan merely for the purpose of collecting supplies for the troops, and on that ground withheld his consent; and notwithstanding the Resident's subsequent explanation, his Excellency persevered in giving that construction to the Resident's proposition, until at length, by drawing from Mehdee Alee Khan a declaration of his inability to undertake the additional duty suggested for him by the Resident, the project was necessarily abandoned, and another person, named Mohommud Ashruf, appointed for the purpose.

20. The real motive of the Vizier's conduct on this occasion was, we are satisfied, that to which we have already adverted, namely, his Excellency's disinclination to any arrangement which would lead to a just and moderate assessment of the lands, founded on a review of their real assets, on principles consistent consistent with the prosperity and happiness of his subjects, and calculated to deprive him of the profits arising from the injurious system of arbitrary assessment, and from the confiscation of the property of defaulting farmers and collectors, which had so long prevailed throughout his Excellency's dominions; and to deprive the Zemindars and other landholders of the means of resisting the exactions and oppressions necessarily proceeding from this vicious system of administration has been the sole object of his Excellency's solicitude for the destruction of their forts. The object of the Resident, on the other hand, has been (as we have already observed) in depriving the Zemindars of the means of resistance, to remove the causes which have excited it, by determining and permanently securing their rights and the rights of the State, through the medium of a fixed and guaranteed assessment.

21. In pursuance of this salutary project, the Resident, in the course of his correspondence with the Vizier, and previously to the appointment of Mohummud Ashruf, availed himself of the desire expressed by the Vizier, that he should suggest what appeared to him to be advisable for the settlement of affairs in the districts of Purtaubgurh, Sultanpore, and Dalmow, to convey to his Excellency several distinct propositions directed to that object, the detail of which it seems proper to insert in this place. Those propositions were as follow:—

1st. That an able and intelligent man (if not Mehdee Alee Khan, some other person) should be immediately appointed by his Excellency, and deputed to provide for the necessary supplies for the troops, to make enquiry regarding the fortresses and other strong-holds of the Zemindars, to give timely and regular information to the commanding-officer, to ascertain the revenue of the districts and what the talookas were capable of yielding at a fair and moderate valuation; in short, to obtain and furnish to his Excellency every degree of necessary information, with a view to the final settlement of the districts.

2d. That a proclamation should be issued in the districts in the terms of a draft which the Resident submitted to the Vizier, and which was to the following effect:—

“ Be it known to the Zemindars, Talookadars, &c. &c. in the mohuls of Sultanpore, Purtaubgurh, and Manickpore Behar, that whereas, with a view to the security, happiness, and prosperity of all my subjects in these districts, I have now directed a triennial settlement at a moderate assessment to be made, commencing with the Fusly year 1218, that so the Zemindars and Ryots being secure from the unjust exactions of Aumils and Moostajers (farmers) may with confidence cultivate their lands and labour for the increase of the revenues: and whereas it is obvious that, under this arrangement, there can be no occasion whatever for the protection of forts or strong-holds of any description in the possession of the Zemindars, many of whom have been proved to take advantage of the forts in their possession, for the purpose of resisting authority and withholding the revenues of the sircar, which conduct on their parts has frequently induced other Zemindars to act in a similar manner, to the great injury of the Government; therefore it has now been resolved, that no Zemindar in my dominions shall be permitted to retain a fortress or strong-hold of any description in his possession, and that in the same manner as the fortresses, ghurries, and other strong-holds in the Zillahs of Baraitch and Keewuee have been destroyed and levelled to the ground, the forts in the districts of Purtaubgurh, &c., shall also be taken and levelled, but that the Zemindars of the districts in question shall be permitted, without molestation or objection, to retain or construct and inhabit their houses, gardens, and inclosures, whether kutchas or tuckas, and of whatever extent or description.

“ You are accordingly hereby required to surrender and make over to Colonel Palmer, commanding the British troops in Purtaubgurh, whatever fortress or ghurrie you may possess, without delay, opposition, or hesitation; and in this case every favour will be shewn to you, your balances of revenue for all preceding years till the end of the Fusly year 1216 will be forgiven, and no demand on account of those years shall be made; but in case of your disobedience to this order, and the reduction of your fortresses by force of arms, no

“ forgiveness nor exemption shall be granted, your forts and habitations shall be destroyed, and yourselves shall be expelled from your zemindaries.”

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1811.

The third proposition related to the remission of balances up to the end of the year 1216 Fusly, as stated in the proclamation, and was to this effect: That as the districts in question had been for many years in the hands of farmers, and the Zemindars and inhabitants of them at large had been long subjected to unjust exactions and oppression, in addition to which it was difficult, if not impracticable, to ascertain the true amount of arrears of revenue for preceding years, the Resident suggested that the balances of all former years, till the end of the Fusly year 1216, should be remitted to the Zemindars of the three districts in question, and also of the district of Akburpore, and that no demands should be made on account of the balances of those years.

The fourth proposition related to the formation of the triennial settlement, as noticed also in the proclamation, and was stated as follows: That a triennial settlement should be concluded with all the Zemindars of the districts, which would prevent the necessity of his Excellency the Vizier's marching every year, or of detaching the British troops to assist the Aumils in their settlements. That as this settlement would also involve the specification of a fixed time for the payment of every instalment of the revenue of each year, the outstanding balances would be at all times clearly ascertained, and there would be no trouble, as heretofore, in investigating the justice of the Aumil's demands from the Zemindars. That the Zemindars, too, would have confidence in the Government, and would occupy themselves in the cultivation of their lands, the revenue of the State would be increased, and the people contented and happy.

The fifth proposition suggested his Excellency the Vizier's fixing a period for his stay in each of the districts to be comprehended in his proposed tour, and his issuing injunctions to his officers, under a penalty, to conclude the settlement with the Zemindars within a given period, and to the Zemindars, under a penalty also, to come to a settlement within the same time: and with a view to facilitate the execution of the suggested orders, the Resident proposed that a scheme of the settlement of each district, under the signature of the Chowdries and Canoongoes and the seal of the Ameens, should be submitted to his Excellency before his arrival in the district.

22. These propositions occasioned a voluminous correspondence between the Vizier and the Resident, in the course of which his Excellency, although professing to be guided by the Resident's advice, endeavoured to evade the ultimate object of them, by withholding his consent to the deputation of a person vested with the requisite powers and instructions to collect the information, and supply the materials necessary for the conclusion of the triennial settlement on just and moderate terms. His Excellency met that article of the Resident's propositions, by announcing his intention to depute an officer of his Government merely for purposes connected with the supply of the troops and the destruction of the forts, referring the Resident to a former letter, in which his Excellency had signified that the Aumils must be left to decide on the real amount of the revenue and the capacity of the lands, and that if after the Aumil's decision any person proved refractory and refused to satisfy the just claims of the State, the commanding-officer of the British troops should be instructed to act against him. His Excellency maintained the impracticability of framing a scheme of the settlement such as the Resident had suggested, and signified to him that if he desired to know what the districts were capable of yielding, his Excellency would inform him, as soon as it could be ascertained by the papers which might hereafter be sent by the Aumils. His Excellency resisted also the proposition for the remission of balances, but expressed his concurrence in the expediency of the triennial settlement.

23. It is unnecessary to describe the various points of discussion which formed the subjects of this correspondence and of frequent conferences with the Vizier, and it is sufficient to state, that the Resident finally succeeded in obtaining his Excellency's consent to most of the propositions which had been submitted to him. His Excellency actually issued the suggested proclamation, and appointed an officer (Mohummud Ashruf above mentioned) with the requisite powers, and with instructions conformable to the Resident's recommendation.

24. In the meantime the battering-train having arrived, Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer proceeded with the British troops into the districts, to execute his orders relative to the suppression of the refractory Zemindars and the demolition of the forts. His operations, although continually impeded by the negligence or inefficiency of the Aumils, were conducted with success and without any opposition.

25. For the details of the preceding concise and imperfect narrative, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the despatches from the Resident which will be found recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin.*

26. We deem it proper, however, to bring more particularly under the notice of your Honourable Court a despatch from the Resident dated the 5th of December, recorded as per margin,† as representing the condition of affairs in his Excellency's country, and his Excellency's conduct in a point of view that appeared urgently to call for the interposition of this Government in support of the measures which the Resident had so laudably, but, as it ultimately proved, vainly pursued, to effect a reform in his Excellency's internal administration.

27. We have stated above, that the Vizier had at length been induced to acquiesce in the Resident's propositions, and had deputed Mohummud Ashruf into the districts of Purtaubgurh, &c. with powers and instructions conformable to the Resident's suggestions. It soon appeared, however, that Mohummud Ashruf totally perverted the object of his mission; that instead of adopting measures to ascertain the real assets and condition of the districts, with a view to the relief of the Zemindars and farmers from the excessive demands and extortions to which they had so long been exposed, to the ruin and disturbance of the country and to the conclusion of a triennial settlement on just and moderate terms, Mohummud Ashruf acted as if deputed for the sole purpose of increasing the revenues, by exacting even larger sums from the Zemindars than they had hitherto been accustomed to pay. This was sufficiently evident from an address of Mohummud Ashruf himself to the Vizier, a translation of which formed an enclosure in the Resident's despatch. In a remonstrance which on this occasion the Resident addressed to the Vizier, he justly remarked, that from Mohummud Ashruf's own report, it was evident "that nothing but "oppression to the Ryots, disputes between Mohummud Ashruf and the Zemin-
"dars, and finally disorder in the country, could be expected from his deputa"tion. That the views which the Resident had entertained, and for the satis"factory accomplishment of which both the Vizier and he had laboured so "long and had held so many unpleasant discussions during a period of five "months, must be entirely and inevitably frustrated, and that no satisfactory
"arrangement could now be made in the current year."

28. In thus reporting the failure of his endeavours to effect a beneficial arrangement with regard to the districts of Purtaubgurh, Sultanpore, and Dalmow, the Resident brought under the notice of Government the condition of the extensive territories formerly under the charge of the late Almass Alee Khan, to which we have already briefly adverted.

29. The Resident represented the state of these territories in the following words:—"The districts which were occupied by that Aumil (Almass Alee Khan), "yielding an annual revenue of about thirty lacs of rupees, had been transferred "immediately on his death, in opposition to my wishes and suggestions, to the "Eunuch Rehmud Alee Khan, Almass's nominal brother, whose failure in the "payment of the revenue occasioned his removal and disgrace in the course of a "few months, and the subsequent transfer of the districts on similar terms to
"a person named Mirza Jān, the adopted son of Almass, who has also neces"sarily failed to fulfil his engagements to the Government, and is now under “ personal restraint for balances which can never be liquidated, and the demand “ of a large portion of which is, in my opinion, unjust and oppressive.”

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1811.

30. The Resident proceeded to state, that on the occasion of the death of Almass Alee Khan, and on the two subsequent occasions of the transfer of the districts which he farmed to his nominal brother and son, at the exorbitant rate of his engagements, the Resident suggested in strong terms to the Vizier the impropriety of his consigning so large a portion of his dominions to any individual Aumil, more particularly to the dependants of Almass, and the expediency of his appointing a number of trustworthy persons as Ameens, to investigate and report upon the real state of the districts and the condition of the landholders and peasantry, with a view to a beneficial arrangement for the future management of the country; but that a compliance with the Resident's suggestions was evaded by his Excellency, upon grounds which precluded the Resident from continuing to urge the point. The Resident added, that the territories which had thus been farmed by Almass, Rehmud Alee Khan, and Mirza Jān, in succession, had now been parcelled out to a number of petty farmers, without any reduction of the terms, and under circumstances which precluded the possibility of the due realization of the revenue, without the gradual devastation of the lands and the ruin of the landholder and peasantry.

31. The Resident reported, that he had again set before the Vizier the ruinous consequences of those measures, and had predicted to his Excellency the speedy removal and imprisonment of a majority, if not all, of the newly-appointed Aumils, whose personal wealth only, and by no means their capacity for the trust, had induced their nomination. The Resident further observed to the Vizier, with great justice, that individual wealth among his subjects, and the sources from which it was derived, were now nearly at an end and must very shortly be exhausted; and that ultimately, when the soil of his dominions, and the industrious cultivators of that soil, should form the only sources of his revenues, he would find the first to be totally unproductive, and would search for the latter in vain.

32. The Resident continued in his despatch his report of the substance of additional remarks and remonstrances on the same subject; in the course of which he had suggested to his Excellency the justice of remitting a portion of the balances, and had repeated his earnest advice that a system so ruinous should be immediately corrected.

33. The Resident, after noticing the failure of all his remonstrances, concludes with the following observation:—“ His Excellency's leading passion of avarice, and all its concomitant evils, have, as is natural, increased with his age; and the reluctance and impatience with which he ever listened to remonstrance against the inordinate gratification of this passion, or against any other unjust measure of his Government, have lately arisen to a degree of peevishness and irritation, which renders the efficient conduct of the duties of my station at his Court, combined with the observances and offices of personal respect and conciliation, a great deal more difficult than before.”

34. As an instance of the truth of this latter remark, the Resident took this occasion to report to Government that the Vizier having recently evinced a design to take advantage of the change of his system with regard to the districts of Almass, by whom and his successors in office the jagier of Tujumool Hoosein Khan (the son of the late celebrated Tufuzzool Hoosein Khan) had been farmed, for the purpose of converting this jagier into an annual pension, to the manifest loss of the Jagierdar, he (the Resident) considered it to be his duty to remonstrate against the execution of this design in the most urgent terms, and to state to his Excellency the impropriety of his adopting any new measures with regard to the jagier without the previous sanction of the British Government, at whose instance it was originally granted to Tufuzzool Hoosein Khan, and subsequently confirmed in the possession of his only son and representative.

35. This remonstrance, however, only produced on the part of the Vizier an avowal of his intention to commute the jagier, and an ungenerous complaint against the support afforded by the British Government to Tujumool Hoosein Khan

from Bengal,

Khan and others in a similar predicament; alluding principally to the protection afforded to that person by this Government on the occasion of the calumnious accusation of an attempt against the Vizier's life, the particulars of which were reported to your Honourable Court in the Governor-General in Council's address of the 4th August 1809. The Resident repelled this unjust insinuation with proper spirit, but deemed it necessary to call for instructions on the question of opposing the resumption of the jagier. The Resident also desired instructions with regard to the propriety of his more active interference for the protection of the dependants of Almass Alee Khan, in their character of Aumils, against the unjust demands of the Vizier.

36. The Governor-General in Council deemed the present a fit occasion for calling on his Excellency the Vizier to fulfil that article of the Treaty of 1801, by which he engaged to "establish in his reserved dominions such a system of administration (to be carried into effect by his own officers) as should be conducive to the prosperity of his subjects, and be calculated to secure the lives and property of the inhabitants." The efforts of the Resident had fruitlessly been employed, as we have shewn in the preceding part of this despatch, to lay a foundation for a general reform, by introducing it into those districts, for the tranquillization of which his Excellency the Vizier had required the aid of our troops, and he had in vain endeavoured to persuade his Excellency to abrogate that ruinous system of farming which prevailed in the extensive territories formerly managed by the late Almass Alee Khan. The alternative, therefore, was left to the British Government, of acquiescing in the failure of those efforts, and thereby encouraging the Vizier in a resistance to the legitimate counsels of the Resident, and sanctioning by its silence the continuance of a vicious and oppressive system of administration, which Government had so long upheld by the unavoidable employment of its troops in the suppression of disorders, the consequence of that system, or to aim at the removal of those evils by a direct interposition of that weight and influence which it is entitled to possess and to employ by the nature of the connexion between the two States and by the express provisions of treaty.

37. The Governor-General in Council could have no hesitation in adopting the latter course of proceeding. The necessary instructions were accordingly issued to the Resident at Lucknow, under date the 28th of December 1810, accompanied by a suitable letter from the Governor-General to the address of his Excellency the Vizier.

38. The Governor-General commenced this address by referring to recent transactions, and to the negotiations which had passed between the Vizier and the Resident, and which the conduct of his Excellency's officers, of the very persons whose duty it was to carry into effect the measures recommended by the Resident and acquiesced in by his Excellency, had rendered abortive. His Lordship then proceeded to advert to the evils and errors of the existing system of the administration of the revenue in the Vizier's dominions; to the almost annual employment of British troops in suppressing disorders occasioned by the prevalence of that system; to the consequent right and duty of the British Government to inquire into the sources of this evil, and to urge the adoption of such a system of measures as, in the judgment of that Government, was calculated to counteract it, without injury to the rights and authority of his Excellency.

39. The Governor-General next adverted to the obligation imposed on the Vizier by the sixth article of the Treaty of 1801 to reform the system of his administration, referring also to a supplemental agreement resulting from the late Governor-General Marquis Wellesley's personal conferences with his Excellency in the year 1802, by which the Vizier engaged to advise with the British Government and to conform to its counsels, in the establishment of an improved system of administration within the reserved territories, and also in all affairs connected with the ordinary Government of those territories and with the usual exercise of his Excellency's established authority.

40. His Lordship having next adverted to the actual exercise of this right of counsel through the legitimate organ of the British representative at his Excellency's Court, to the failure of the Resident's endeavours to accomplish the object object of it, and to the duty consequently devolving upon his Lordship to interpose, in the form of a direct address, the earnest advice and recommendation of the British Government on this important subject, proceeded to point out more particularly the causes of the evils and abuses prevailing in the administration.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1811.

41. His Lordship observed, that those evils and abuses arose principally from the destructive practice of assigning the charge of the collections to persons who offered the highest terms; from the uncertain tenure by which the Aumils held the charge of their respective districts; from the violation of the engagements contracted between the Aumils, Zemindars, under-renters, and Ryots; from the arbitrary and oppressive exactions which pervaded the whole system of the revenue through every gradation, from the Aumil to the Ryot; from the defective and injudicious constitution of that system and the injurious mode of making the collections; that it was solely to the prevalence of this defective and destructive system of administration, that the refractory disposition of the Zemindars, the failure of the Aumils and farmers in the execution of their engagements, the existence of heavy balances, and all the disorders which so frequently required the employment of troops, were to be attributed.

42. Having then stated that these evils could alone be remedied by an essential change in the system of assessment, management of collection, his Lordship proceeded to trace the outline of a plan of reform which he recommended to his Excellency's adoption, and of which the following composed the fundamental principles, viz. a just and moderate assessment; a settlement for a term of years; the conclusion of engagements, by gradation, from the Aumil to the Ryot, and the guarantee of those engagements by the authority of the State.

43. For the details of this scheme of reform, as far as the Governor-General in Council deemed it necessary to describe them in a letter to the Vizier's address, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the record of that document which is entered on the proceedings of the date noted in the margin.*

44. Your Honourable Court will observe, that the Governor-General in his letter to the Vizier had not adverted to that branch of administration, without which no arrangement for the due management of the revenues can ever be completely efficient, namely, the establishment of tribunals of justice for the protection of the lives and property of the subjects, for the detection and punishment of crimes, for the redress of grievances and for the adjustment of disputed claims. The Governor-General in Council was withheld from introducing that subject, by his unwillingness to press at once upon his Excellency's attention too many objects of reform, and thereby diminish the hope of his regard to any; but the Resident was instructed to bring that important subject under discussion, also, at a proper season.

45. As affording a striking instance of the evils of the existing system of the Vizier's administration, the Governor-General took occasion to introduce the subject of the lands held by the late Almass Alee Khan, noticing the salutary but unsuccessful counsel of the Resident with regard to the future management of those lands, pointing out the ruinous consequences of the system, and combining with the discussion an appeal to the Vizier in favour of the dependants of Almass Alee Khan; referring his Excellency, however, to the Resident, to whom particular instructions on these points had been issued.

46. The Governor-General added his earnest request, that the Vizier would give his serious and immediate attention to the accomplishment of the object of reform; an object in every respect so important to his Excellency's interests, his reputation, the prosperity and tranquillity of his country, and the comfort and happiness of his subjects; in which salutary work, his Lordship informed him, the Resident would be prepared, under instructions issued to him for that purpose, to afford to his Excellency every degree of assistance and support.

47. The

47. The Governor-General concluded his address by adverting to the Vizier's declared intention of commuting the jagier of Tujummool Hoosein Khan for a stipend, and to the claims to every degree of favour and indulgence which the family of the late Tufuzzool Hoosein Khan possessed on his Excellency and the Company, and by soliciting the Vizier in the strongest terms to abstain from the prosecution of a measure so injurious to the interests of Tujummool Hoosein Khan.

48. The instructions issued to the Resident on this occasion commenced with a communication of the Governor-General in Council's entire approbation of the whole of the Resident's proceedings, as reported in his despatches. After expressions of regret at the failure of the Resident's zealous and laudable endeavours to induce the Vizier to commence the work of reform, the motives and the necessity of the direct interference of Government were stated to the following effect: that its interests were too deeply concerned in the reform of the present vicious system of administration in his Excellency's dominions to permit the Governor-General in Council tacitly to acquiesce in its continuance; that to the evils and abuses of that system, to the oppression and injustice which naturally flowed from it, were principally to be ascribed those disorders which the British troops were so frequently employed to suppress: that this Government had ever viewed with painful regret the employment of its troops in services of this nature, the general tendency of which had necessarily been to uphold and encourage those acts of violence, injustice, and extortion, which a system erroneous in its principle and oppressive in its operation could not fail to engender.

49. That it concerned the reputation of the British Government, therefore, as well as its interest, to interpose the weight of its influence, for the introduction of a reform which might relieve us from the imputation of being the instruments of oppression and injustice, of perpetuating the practical gradation of evils and abuses which, unsupported by the military power of the Company, would speedily produce their natural consequences, successful resistance to the authority of the Vizier, and general anarchy and confusion throughout his Excellency's dominions.

50. A reference being then made to an enclosed copy of the letter to the Vizier for a knowledge of the arrangement recommended by Government for the reform of the administration, it was observed, that adverting to the character and established habits of the Vizier, the Governor-General in Council did not entertain very sanguine hopes that either the proposed arrangement would be carried into complete effect, or that the engagements which might be concluded under it would be faithfully adhered to. That it was to be apprehended his Excellency would not be induced to accede to the terms of a just and moderate assessment; to sacrifice, for the hope of some permanent but distant benefit, any prospect, however fallacious, of immediate pecuniary profit. That while he acquiesced in the expediency of the plan, he would interpose obstacles to its efficient execution; and that its operation would be in a great measure defeated, by practices and abuses which the ordinances of a wise and well-constituted Government, or a strong and steady principle of justice in the governing power, was alone capable of restraining.

51. That at the same time, however, even a defective execution of the plan would be attended with some advantage. That the engagements which might be concluded would at least form a criterion by which to judge of the merits of complaints of oppression, to regulate demands, to afford relief, or to inflict punishment; and that some foundation would be laid for the gradual improvement of the system of administration. That at all events, this Government discharged a positive duty, by employing its efforts for the correction of evils affecting its own interests, the interests of humanity and justice, those of the Vizier and his subjects, and the prosperity and tranquillity of his dominions; and that Government preserved, by asserting and exercising it, that right of interference, which by disuse might prescriptively be lost or essentially impaired, and which if not on the present, might on some future occasion be efficiently exercised.

52. These

52. These observations were followed by directions conveying to the Resident some latitude of deviation from the precise plan of arrangement recommended to the Vizier, but requiring an adherence to its fundamental principles.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1811.

53. Although the Governor-General in Council was aware that both the state of the Vizier's country and his Excellency's views and dispositions were entirely adverse to the success of a proposition for the introduction of that most efficient and beneficial of all systems of reform, a permanent settlement of the land revenue, yet his Lordship in Council deemed it advisable to state some remarks on its peculiar applicability to the condition of a government, which by its dependent connection with another was not subject to great occasional increase of charge by war, and the expenses of which, therefore, might themselves be considered as permanently fixed; and to express to the Resident our opinion, that it should be an object of our policy gradually to bring it about, and that Government could not employ the influence which it had a right to exercise over the affairs of Oude either more usefully or more worthily, than first in promoting the general improvement of the internal administration of that country (which was the purpose of the present measures), and subsequently in introducing, if possible, at a proper season, that radical principle of prosperity, both to Government and people, the permanent settlement of its land revenues.

54. The cause which induced the Governor-General in Council to abstain from recommending in the letter to the Vizier the establishment of regular tribunals of justice was then noticed to the Resident, with an intimation, however, that as a system of judicial administration was intimately connected with the efficient operation of the proposed arrangement for the assessment and realization of the revenues, it was necessary that the Resident should be prepared, at a convenient season, to urge this important topic to the Vizier; and, with this view, the Governor-General in Council deemed it proper, in the instructions to the Resident, to trace the general outlines and principles of the system of judicial administration which should be recommended to his Excellency's adoption, although little hope, it was observed, could be entertained that his Excellency would ever be induced to adopt it more than partially, if to adopt it at all.

55. For the details of this projected system which was founded on the general principles of the British laws and regulations, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the record of the instructions to the Resident, which will be found as noted in the margin.*

56. With regard to the two points on which the Resident had specifically desired the orders of Government, he was informed that his advice and remonstrances to the Vizier on both those points were entirely approved, and he was directed to renew his representations under the express sanction of Government. It was observed, at the same time, that our right to demand the adoption of more just and lenient proceedings, with regard to the unfortunate family of Almass Alee Khan, than those which his Excellency had hitherto pursued, was more questionable than that which we possessed, and were bound indeed by every obligation of justice to exercise, of securing the family of the late Tufuzzool Hoosein Khan from the effects of his Excellency's disposition to injure their condition; and the Resident was therefore directed distinctly to signify to the Vizier, that the British Government considered itself as the guarantee of their rights derived from his predecessor, and could not acquiesce in any violation of them.

57. Before we notice the Resident's reports of his proceedings under the foregoing instructions, it is proper to advert to the substance of his intermediate communications received subsequently to the despatch of those instructions, the execution of which was necessarily delayed until the Resident's receipt of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier, the preparation of which in the Persian language occupied a considerable time.

58. Those

58. Those communications will be found recorded as per margin.* They report the successful progress of the peaceable surrender and destruction of the fortresses in the districts of Purtaubgurh and Dalmow, the consequence not only of the imposing presence of the force under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer, but of the faith reposed in the proclamation issued at the suggestion of the Resident, as already described. But the confidence of the Zemindars in the wise and lenient measures announced in the proclamation appears to have been disturbed, and the obligation of that instrument to have been violated by the proceedings of Mohummud Ashruf (whose conduct has already been substantially noticed) in the temporary settlement of the districts to which he was deputed. His conduct was represented to the Resident by Lieutenant-Colonel Palmer in the following terms:—

“ I am under the painful necessity of making known to you, that contrary “ to the tenor of the Vizier's proclamation that the lands in this province “ shall be assessed at such reasonable rates as to render the payment of the “ revenues easy to the subject, his Excellency's agent, Mohummed Ashruf, “ has lately, in various instances which have come to my knowledge, “ imposed the most burthensome and highest possible terms on many of the “ Zemindars; and I have the mortification to perceive, that the presence of “ the British detachment under my command is made use of solely, though “ under other pretences, to intimidate such persons as venture a remonstrance, “ into an agreement to conclude a settlement at the most exorbitant rates.

“ The obvious consequences of which behaviour of the commissioner are a “ renewal of those discontents which have so long prevailed, and which the “ assurances contained in his Excellency's proclamation in a great measure “ caused to subside, a total distrust in such proclamations in future, and the “ difficulty which will attend the collection of the Revenue, if the payment of
“ it should not be altogether refused or evaded.”

59. His Excellency the Vizier, at the instance of the Resident, issued instructions to Mohummud Ashruf, directing him to abstain from demanding excessive rates of revenue; but we are compelled to admit the belief, that the conduct of that officer had the private sanction of his Excellency himself, who while professing to act in conformity to the Resident's advice, and at this very time giving him reason to expect the early receipt of a scheme of a triennial settlement for the districts to which Mohummud Ashruf was deputed, which however has never been furnished, was very capable of promoting measures of an opposite tendency.

60. The communications from the Resident to which we have above referred, also report the extension of disorders to the district of Toudo, and the consequent necessity of directing a detachment of the British troops to proceed into that district, for the purpose of quelling them and of destroying the forts. Disturbances, also, nearly at the same time, broke out in the districts of Jugdeespore. On this subject the Resident stated the following observations, which we cite as being calculated, in conjunction with the facts and circumstances already noticed, to elucidate the character of the Vizier's administration and his Excellency's personal disposition.

“ It is worthy of particular remark, that the district of Jugdeespore is one of “ those which were long under the management of the late Almass Alee Khan, “ and recently farmed by his adopted son, Mirza Jān; and that the present “ farmer, Hyder Alee, is the grandson of a person named Fyzoollah, who was “ treasurer to the late Almass Alee Khan, and is now under personal restraint, “ on a vague suspicion of his possessing some portion of the wealth of Almass.

“ That his Excellency the Vizier has in his view the appropriation of all the “ wealth of Fyzoollah, either by the measures of personal rigor which are now “ practised against the unfortunate treasurer himself, or by the process of “ imprisonment and confiscation to be hereafter pursued against his grandson
“ for failure in his engagements as an Aumil, cannot reasonably be doubted;
“ and

" and that the supposed wealth of Fyzoolah, and not the capacity of Hyder Afee for the trust which is now in his hands, was the cause of this Aumil's nomination, is, in my mind, an unquestionable fact."

Political Letter
from Bengal,

61. In replying to the Vizier's application for the employment of the British troops to suppress the disorders in Jugdeespore, the Resident observed to his Excellency, that as the Aumil of that district was one of those persons against whose nomination to the charge of the district which he farmed the Resident had some time since remonstrated to his Excellency in earnest terms, on the grounds of his unfitness for the office, and as there was every reason to believe that the disturbances excited in Jugdeespore had arisen from the Aumil's mismanagement, the employment of the British troops on that occasion might, with apparent justice, have been delayed till a due investigation had taken place into the causes of these commotions; yet, as it appeared that the Zemindars had rebelliously opposed the Aumil and killed and wounded several of his Excellency's subjects, the Resident considered their punishment to be necessary, and had issued instructions accordingly.

62. Your Honourable Court will observe in the circumstances above detailed, an additional instance of a requisition (and the necessity of complying with it) for the aid of the Company's troops in suppressing disorders, which the vices of the Vizier's system of management, combined with the unfortunate propensities of his Excellency's disposition, have alone occasioned; and your Honourable Court will infer from it the urgency of the motives which demanded an effort, on the part of your Government, to effect a reform of the existing administration.

63. We now proceed to advert to the Resident's discussions and correspondence with the Vizier on the subject of the general reform of the administration, as recommended in the Governor-General's letter.

64. It would be impracticable, without transcribing the greatest part of the documents on this subject, to represent the whole scope of the extensive and vexatious discussions which, both verbally and in writing, took place on this occasion between his Excellency the Vizier and the Resident: but it is necessary to notice the principal points of those discussions, with a view to exhibit the temper and disposition of his Excellency's mind, and to elucidate the progress and result of this arduous, but, as we have too much reason to apprehend, unsuccessful negotiation.

65. The Resident having read to his Excellency the Governor-General's letter stating such comments and observations as the occasion required, the Vizier stated generally to the Resident that he was disposed to acquiesce in the Governor-General's suggestions to the utmost practicable extent; adding, that he would bestow the most deliberate attention on all the topics of that letter, making his remarks on each, and would convey those remarks to the Resident in writing, for consideration and discussion, before his Excellency prepared his reply to it.

66. This intention the Vizier accordingly fulfilled. In the paper which he transmitted to the Resident he expressed generally, as he had verbally, his disposition to accede to the Governor-General's proposition relative to a reform of the administration, to be carried into effect in the manner prescribed by treaty, but referred to the Resident for the mode in which the particular system recommended by the Governor-General was to be accomplished, adverting to the difficulty of ascertaining the real assets and resources of the country, of procuring trustworthy and capable persons to whom the charge of the several districts should be committed, and of remedying the contingency of the misconduct or incapacity of the persons selected, of investigating the proceeds of the several districts with a view to fix their amount by guaranteed engagements, which engagements, however, his Excellency promised to cause to be executed, when, with the Resident's advice, he should have ascertained the actual proceeds of the several districts, expressing a resolution to punish those who should deviate from such engagements when formed: all which points were specified in the plan of reform recommended by the Governor-General, and on which his Excellency evidently commented in a spirit of resistance to the arrangement proposed to his adoption, while he professed his consent to it.

67. On the subject of the imprudent and ruinous arrangement adopted by the Vizier with regard to the country formerly under the management of Almass Alee Khan, which was specially noticed in the Governor-General's letter, his Excellency stated some remarks tending to justify that arrangement on the grounds of usage; desiring, however, that if it were determined, with or without a good cause, to alter the existing system, the Resident would point out such a manner of carrying this change into effect as might tend to his Excellency's reputation, to the increase of the revenue of his Government and the prosperity of his subjects at large, and at the same time might not be contrary to the engagements already entered into by his Excellency, so as in any degree to affect his reputation or cause pecuniary loss.

68. On the question of relieving the condition of the dependants of the late Almass Alee Khan, the Vizier merely observed, that as the Governor-General had issued particular instructions to the Resident on that subject, he should be prepared to give an answer whenever the Resident might renew his representations.

69. On the subject of Tujummool Hoosein Khan's jagier his Excellency was totally silent.

70. The Resident prefaced his answer to the Vizier's remarks by adverting to the total failure of the measures which, with so much labour and discussion, had been pursued for the settlement of the districts of Purtaubgurb, &c. with the exception only of the reduction of the fortresses; adding, however, that as the means by which the future good order, not only of those districts, but of the whole of his Excellency's dominions, were now under consideration, the Resident proceeded to submit arrangements for that purpose, in the form of replies to his Excellency's remarks.

71. The Vizier had declared generally his acquiescence in the Governor-General's propositions, and his resolution to depute Ameens into his districts, as a measure preparatory to the accomplishment of the proposed arrangement. The Resident, therefore, observed that it was necessary first to consider to what places the Ameens should be deputed, and what duties they should be required to perform: that, in the first place, it was indispensable that a division of his Excellency's dominions into four or five Zillahs or general departments, and then a subdivision of those Zillahs into districts, yielding an annual revenue of from one to three lacs of rupees, should immediately take place: That an upright intelligent Ameen should be selected for each of those districts: that when his Excellency had made the selection he should inform the Resident of their names and characters, in order that he also might investigate their characters, and submit his opinion of their qualifications for his Excellency's consideration, after which they should be ordered to proceed into their respective districts, to act according to instructions, of which the Resident proposed to submit a draft for his Excellency's approval.

72. In reply to the Vizier's remark regarding the impracticability of ascertaining the true revenue and resources of his country, the Resident observed that this would form the grand object of the deputation of the Ameens, which would produce the necessary information. The Resident then proceeded to describe the duties of the Ameens with reference to the attainment of that primary object.

73. In answer to the Vizier's remarks on the difficulty of finding upright and intelligent men to perform the duties of Ameens, the Resident referred that difficulty to the unhappy system of administration that had so long prevailed in his Excellency's dominions, to the instability of employment under his Government, and to the danger of personal dishonour as well as confiscation of property which attended it; observing, that when these obstacles should be removed by the reform of the administration, his Excellency would find many able and upright men desirous of employment in his service: that in the Ceded Districts the the native officers employed by the British Government were originally subjects of his Excellency, yet having confidence in the Government they discharged their duties with zeal and fidelity; and that the same effect would be produced by the operation of the same cause in his Excellency's reserved dominions: that the proofs of the integrity and capacity of the Ameens would appear from the mode in which they executed the duties to be assigned to them, and that those only should be appointed Tehsildars or collectors whose conduct as Ameens should be approved of. This observation had reference to that part of the Governor-General's plan which recommended the appointment of collectors to each Zillah with fixed salaries, as in the Company's provinces.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1811.

74. The Resident took advantage of his reply to that article of the Vizier's paper which stated his intention of causing engagements to be taken, as recommended by the Governor-General, and of punishing those who deviated from them, to introduce the subject of establishing regular courts of justice; observing, that when a satisfactory settlement of the land revenue should be concluded, and when the appointment of capable collectors in all the districts should have taken place, he should earnestly recommend to his Excellency the establishment of an efficient police and of a court of justice in each Zillah, that so a separation of the department of the collections from that of civil and criminal justice might take place, adding, also, some remarks on the beneficial operation of this principle.

75. The Resident entered into some detail of discussion in replying to his Excellency's remarks on the system of management prevailing in the extensive districts formerly under the charge of Almass Alee Khan. After noticing the ruinous consequences of that system, and the benefits to be expected from the change, recommended by the Governor-General, the Resident adverted particularly to the apprehension expressed by the Vizier of a breach of his engagements with the farmers of those districts being the consequence of the proposed change. On this point the Resident observed, that having originally remonstrated with his Excellency against those engagements before they were entered into with the farmers, having repeatedly and earnestly represented to his Excellency the ruinous consequences which they would produce, and the failure of his representations having occasioned the Governor-General's remonstrance on the subject, it followed that his Excellency's perseverance in the formation of those engagements, in opposition to the counsels of the British Government, was a violation of his engagements with that Government; and the Resident referred to his Excellency to decide which of the two considerations was most important, a departure from his engagements with the farmers, or a departure from his engagements with the Company. The former, he observed, if productive of loss to the farmers might easily be repaired without injury to his Excellency's reputation, whereas a breach of his engagements with the Company might be productive of the most ruinous effects, and an adherence to them must be beneficial in every respect.

76. In answer to that article of the Vizier's remarks which related to the dependants of the late Almass Alee Khan, the Resident adverted to his former representations on that subject, and to the orders which, in consequence of the failure of those representations, he had received from the Governor-General in Council to urge his Excellency's attention to them; and concluded his detailed observations on the subject by renewing the request he had formerly ineffectually preferred, that his Excellency would furnish him with a statement of the demands against Mirza Jān and of the several exemptions which that person pleaded, that the Resident might be enabled to form an accurate judgment on the case, and then to suggest to his Excellency what might appear to be most advisable for the recovery of the just dues of the State.

77. The Resident terminated his remarks on the Vizier's paper by noticing his omission of the subject of Tujummool Hoosein Khan's jagier, and after stating some remarks on that question, by earnestly requesting his Excellency to reinstate him in the jagier.

78. The Resident delivered to the Vizier the paper containing his replies, as above described, and subsequently transmitted to him drafts of a proclamation addressed

Political Letter
from Bengal,

addressed to the revenue officers, Zemindars, and peasantry of each district, and of instructions to the Ameens proposed to be deputed into each. The purport of the former was to the following effect:—A statement of the evils of the farming system, and a declaration of its perpetual abolition and the introduction of a system of assessment and collection, calculated to remedy the abuses and evils of the former; the deputation of Ameens for the purpose of investigating the assets and condition of the country, as preparatory to the establishment of the improved system, with a description of their duties, and a requisition to the persons addressed to attend the Ameens and furnish them with the necessary information and documents.

79. The instructions proposed for the Ameens consisted of six articles, the general substance of which it is proper to state, in order to shew the nature of the arrangement recommended by the Resident for the reform of the system of assessment and collection. They were prefaced by an exhortation to integrity and diligence, and an assurance that, in the event of the Ameen's able and upright discharge of the duties now committed to his charge, he should be appointed a Tehsildar of some Zillah with a suitable salary and establishment, and should never be dismissed without sufficient cause.

The first article of the instructions referred to the proclamation and prescribed the mode of giving it currency.

The second article related to the principal object of the duty of Ameens, that of ascertaining the real state and condition of the purgunnah committed to his charge; observing, that this could alone be accomplished by his obtaining possession of all the revenue papers having reference to preceding years, and a list of the papers so to be obtained was inserted under this article.

The third article contained an injunction to the Ameen to respect the rights of the Zemindars, and to make his arrangements with them as the persons naturally interested in the soil, in contradistinction to farmers, whose interests were unconnected with the internal prosperity of the country, and to investigate cases of disputed right to a zemindary, transmitting the documents on the subject for the decision of the Vizier.

The fourth article required the Ameen to inspect the engagements concluded by the farmers (under the general farming system) with the Zemindars and under-renters, and to enforce the just demands of the Aumils, agreeably to the cabooseleat and pottah, or engagement, and deed of lease, and intimated that it was particularly desirable that no just balances should remain after a certain specified date, when the collections of the current year were to cease.

The fifth article required the Ameen to proceed to visit every village and estate in the district committed to his charge, for the purpose of ascertaining the quantity and quality of the lands, the condition and character of the landholders and others, comparing their assets and means with the amount of the present jumma, and adopting various other specified measures with a view to the triennial settlement of the whole of the Vizier's dominions, which, as declared in this article, his Excellency had resolved to introduce from the commencement of the ensuing year, that is the middle of September 1811.

The sixth article described the rate of allowances to be granted to the Ameen during the continuance of his duty as such, which would, of course, terminate with the introduction of the new system, when, if his conduct had been correct, he would be appointed collector of a Zillah with a suitable salary.

80. After some intermediate correspondence with the Vizier, relative to that article of the Resident's replies, in which he had ascribed to the Vizier a breach of treaty, and which his Excellency earnestly desired the Resident to modify, a request with which the Resident so far complied as to alter the terms without departing from the substance of the charges, the Resident received from the Vizier a paper containing his answers to each point of the Resident's observations and propositions.

81. The

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1811.

81. The present report of the progress of this negotiation requires that we should state the substance of that paper, which the Resident, in his report to us, termed a truly extraordinary document.

82. The Vizier began by a very unsatisfactory explanation of the causes which had defeated the projected settlement of the districts of Purtaubgurh, &c., but of which it is unnecessary to state the details.

83. In reply to that article of the Resident's paper which proposed the division and subdivision of his Excellency's country into districts, and the appointment of an Ameen to each, the Vizier observed, most irrelatively, that in the month of March he had issued orders to two of his sons and "to the other officers, to search for and procure some upright and able candidates for the situation of Ameens, who should first be sent to those districts which the Resident considered in an unsettled state." That the draft of instructions which the Resident had prepared should undergo personal discussion, and when the terms should be adjusted the instructions should be delivered; but that the Resident must first detail to his Excellency the necessary qualifications of Ameens, in order that persons so qualified might be selected and appointed exclusively by his Excellency.

84. In answer to that part of the Resident's paper in which he stated the chief and ultimate duty of the Ameens to be to ascertain the new revenues and resources of the country, and described the mode of proceeding to be adopted by the Ameens with a view to that object, his Excellency merely stated that he should issue his orders to the Ameens agreeably to the Resident's suggestions, but recommended actual measurement of the lands in preference to the collection of revenue papers of each village for ten years back, which the Resident had proposed.

85. The Vizier entered into a defence of his own conduct and practice, in reply to the Resident's remark that the want of upright and able men to fill the office of Ameen was to be ascribed to the vicious system of his Excellency's administration, and then suggested a modification of the Resident's proposition of appointing the Ameens to be subsequently Tehsildars, by recommending the separation of those officers, or at least the nomination of the Ameens to be Tehsildars not in the districts where they had acted in the former capacity, but in some other.

86. In reply to the Resident's proposition relative to the future establishment of courts of justice, the Vizier explicitly and satisfactorily declared, that after the new system of assessment and administration of the revenue should have been carried into effect, an efficient police and a court of justice, as recommended, should be established.

87. With respect to the total change of system in the districts formerly under the management of Almass Alee Khan, the Vizier observed, that what the Governor-General had recommended should certainly be carried into effect: that it was, of course, his Excellency's particular desire that the population should encrease, that his subjects should be rendered happy and prosperous, that present and future loss should be guarded against, and that the revenues should annually encrease; and that if all those objects could be accomplished by the change of the present system, his Excellency had no objection to it.

87 A. The Vizier's reply to the Resident's remarks on his Excellency's imputed breach of treaty, by rejecting the counsels of the British Government, was in the following words: "I have not, on the present occasion, done any thing unprecedented or new, that you should have advised me to desist from it. What I have done was in perfect conformity with the long-established usage of the country, against which no Resident at this Court has ever hitherto remonstrated; and thanks be to God, that no bad effects have hitherto arisen from those measures, neither would any objection have been made in Calcutta to those measures if you had not written on the subject; but your representations have, of course, occasioned what has happened. It matters not. You will now consider me as intent on carrying the new system into execution."

Political Letter
from Bengal,

88. To the Resident's observations relative to the case of Mirza Jān, his Excellency replied by the extraordinary argument, that Mirza Jān and his property were the property of Almass Alee Khan, and the latter himself belonged to his Excellency, and that consequently Mirza Jān also was his Excellency's property, and the Resident had no right to interfere; adding, however, that his intention towards Mirza Jān should be communicated to the Resident thereafter.

89. In answer to the Resident's representation on the subject of Tujummool Hoosein Khan's jagier, his Excellency urged his disinclination to grant jagiers and his desire to abridge their number, observing, that as his intention was merely to preserve his authority over the jagier in question, and as the clear revenue would be paid to Tujummool Hoosein Khan, there was no reason why it should not be managed by one of his Excellency's Aumils.

90. The Resident acknowledged the receipt of the document of which the substance has been described, but stated merely some general observations regarding the extraordinary nature of it, referring to a personal conference the discussion of its details.

91. The Resident, in his despatch enclosing copies of the above-described documents, reported at length the tenor of his personal communication with the Vizier on the subject of that last mentioned. He represents himself first to have commented on the irregular form of that document, which it appeared had been sent without authentication and in a blank envelope, without address or superscription; and then, after alluding to the solemn appeal to his Excellency's justice and good faith contained in the Governor-General's letter, and to his Excellency's promise of deliberately discussing with the Resident the several points stated in that letter, to have called upon the Vizier to acknowledge or disavow the obligation imposed upon him by treaty, of carrying into effect a reform of his administration, and to declare whether or not, in his Excellency's own judgment, he had fulfilled, or even attempted to fulfil that obligation. If he had not, his Excellency was bound, he observed, to consider the present remonstrance of the Governor-General in Council as a solemn demand for the fulfilment of a positive obligation, by adopting the plan of reform recommended to him by the British Government, with whose counsels he had engaged to conform, or by suggesting and carrying into execution some other plan of his own, which should be equally calculated to answer the purposes of that obligation, namely, to provide for the security and happiness of his subjects, and to relieve the Company's Government from the extraordinary and disreputable burden of supporting by force of arms an unjust and oppressive administration.

92. The Resident then proceeded to comment on the manner in which his Excellency had met the Governor-General's propositions; observing, that his Excellency, instead of declaring his cordial acquiescence in the general plan of reform recommended to him by the British Government, and of manifesting that acquiescence by an immediate and cheerful assent to the measures which the Resident had suggested, had purposely omitted to notice a few of the most important of those measures to which no plausible objection could be formed, had made frivolous objections to others for the obvious purpose of protracting unimportant discussion and procrastinating the work of reform, had stated some extraordinary assertions, the inaccuracy of which was well known, and had evinced, by the whole tenor of the document in question, a resolution to evade at least, if not to resist, the salutary counsels of the Governor-General in Council, conveyed to him in the language of friendship and in the terms of existing treaties, which were equally binding on both, and a departure from which on one part, might exonerate the other from a responsibility essential to the existence of his Government and to the exercise of his Excellency's authority.

93. These, and further similar observations having made a considerable impression on his Excellency's mind, and having produced from his Excellency an assurance of his sincere intention to abide by his engagements with the Company, Company, as well as to withdraw from the document under discussion all such expressions and remarks as the Resident might now shew to be inconsistent with that assurance, the Resident proceeded to discuss the Vizier's several replies.

94. It is not necessary to notice particularly the Resident's observation on the first topic of the Vizier's paper, that which related to the failure of the project of settlement in the districts of Purtaubgurh, &c. It is sufficient to state, that the Resident deduced from the failure of all the various measures employed on that occasion, supported, too, by a large detachment of British troops, the existence of some radical evils in the system of his Excellency's administration, and the necessity of a total change in that system, in the manner suggested by the Governor-General.

95. On the next point, the appointment of Ameens, the Resident remarked his Excellency's total silence on the two important and indispensable preliminary measures which the Resident had originally suggested to him, namely, the division and subdivision of his dominions into districts, and the selection and appointment of Ameens with the Resident's advice and concurrence. He observed that, on the question of appointing the Ameens, his Excellency had merely referred, in general terms, to orders issued the preceding month to his sons: that his Excellency had further (apparently for no other purpose than procrastination) required the Resident to repeat to him in detail the qualifications of proper Ameens, although those qualifications were sufficiently described in the Governor-General's letter, and amply enlarged upon by the Resident in his replies to the Vizier's original remarks on that letter. That his Excellency had finally declared his desire of restricting the deputation of Ameens to a few particular districts which the Resident should consider to be in a state of disorder, forgetting that the Governor-General in Council had described the whole of his Excellency's dominions as labouring under a baneful system of assessment and collection, to which no remedy but a complete and radical change could be applied.

96. Under these circumstances, the Resident deemed it his duty to call upon his Excellency distinctly to declare, whether he declined or consented to the division and subdivision of his dominions in the manner suggested, and to the subsequent deputation of an Ameen to every district, giving previous information to the Resident of the characters and qualities of the Ameens, with the view of enabling him to judge of their fitness and capacity for the trust to be reposed in them.

97. To these two propositions his Excellency after some deliberation signified his assent, reserving only for future discussion the proposal of the Resident's being previously informed of the character and qualities of the Ameens, and of his being entitled to a voice in their nomination; which proposal, it appeared, his Excellency considered as inconsistent with the provisions of treaty, a point which the Resident combated, but finally left to future discussion.

98. The Resident's observations on the two succeeding topics of the Vizier's paper do not require particular notice. With regard to the next, of the establishments of courts of justice, the Resident expressed his satisfaction at the assurance which his Excellency had afforded on that subject, and stated, that he should be prepared in due season to submit to his Excellency such suggestions regarding it as the importance of the subject required.

99. The Resident then proceeded to advert to the Vizier's denial of the Resident's right to interpose his counsel and remonstrances respecting the management of the extensive lands formerly under charge of Almass Alee Khan, demonstrating, by reference to the words of existing engagements, the right of the British Government to interpose its advice "in all affairs connected with " the ordinary government of his Excellency's dominions and with the exercise " of his Excellency's established authority," and the confirmation and approval of the Resident's counsels and remonstrances on the subject in question, as expressed in the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier, deducing from his Excellency's absolute rejection of this authorized counsel, the imputation of a direct

direct infraction of his engagements, which bound him to attend to the advice of the British Government. The Resident then referred to the practice of the Representatives at the Court of Lucknow during the time of the late Amf-ood-Dowlah, to prove that the species of interference of which his Excellency denied the right had ever been exercised, and pointing out the particular urgency and necessity of that interference with respect to the districts in question, and demonstrating it to be a case to which the provisions of the treaty respecting the offer and acceptance of advice were peculiarly applicable.

100. In answer to that part of the Vizier's paper which reproached the Resident with being the cause of the remonstrances and propositions his Excellency had lately received from the Governor-General, the Resident merely observed that this reproach could be considered in no other light than as a proof of the conscientious discharge of his duty to both States, in having faithfully reported his proceedings at his Excellency's Court, and that he felt persuaded of receiving from his Excellency's justice and candour, at some future period, the most ample credit for his motives in every stage of those proceedings and discussions, which had now excited his Excellency's reproach. The Vizier, in reply, offered to withdraw this article of his remarks altogether; an offer which, however, the Resident declined, with the exception of the particular words, "that you should have" advised me to desist from it," which the Resident desired might be expunged.

101. At the same conference the Resident pleaded in a very forcible manner the cause of Tujummool Hoosein Khan, and finally succeeded in obtaining his Excellency's unqualified consent to the restitution of the jagier.

102. At the conclusion of the conference, the Vizier requested the Resident to furnish him with a draft of the several alterations which he required in the other articles of his Excellency's paper. This was accordingly done, and the alterations proposed by the Resident substantially were: a declaration of his Excellency's concurrence in the division and subdivision of his country, and in the deputation of Ameens possessing, if possible, all the requisite qualities, to all the districts, his Excellency furnishing them with the instructions and proclamations proposed by the Resident, modified only in such manner as should be mutually agreed upon after consultation: that the rigorous measures hitherto adopted with respect to Mirza Jān should cease, and a statement of the just balances against him should be sent for the Resident's investigation.

103. The Vizier's reply to the Resident's paper of proposed alterations was far from being satisfactory. His Excellency signified his consent to take into consideration the draft of instructions to the Ameens proposed by the Resident, rejecting after discussion such parts as his Excellency might not approve. He consented, also, to a division of his country into districts, in the manner that might be determined by mutual consultation, and to the deputation of Ameens to all the districts; but his Excellency decidedly objected to the Resident's having any voice in the selection of them, on the ground of its being a supersession of authority.

104. The Vizier assented to the Resident's proposition relative to Mirza Jān, but insisted on retaining the assertion contained in his former paper, that Mirza Jān was his property, and that the Resident had no right to interfere in the case. The Vizier further retained his anterior observations relative to the justification of the resumption of the jagier of Tujummool Hoosein Khan, although he at the same time declared the restitution of it in compliance with the Governor-General's desire.

105. In consequence of the receipt of this unsatisfactory reply, the Resident obtained another conference with the Vizier; at which, after acknowledging that all the important measures which the Resident had suggested, under the instructions of the Governor-General in Council, had been assented to, with the exception of that which related to the Resident's participation in the selection of Ameens, the Resident remonstrated on his Excellency's persisting, contrary to promise, in retaining in his amended replies the whole of the exceptionable arguments to which the Resident had objected at the former conference.

106. The

Political Letter

106. The Resident then repeated his former observations on those arguments, and the Vizier finally consented to withdraw them; expressing, however, his reluctance to abandon those which related to Mirza Jân, whom he persisted in considering as his slave and property, a position which the Resident combated with great force and justice.

107. The Resident then proceeded to the discussion of the only point remaining unsettled, namely, his Excellency's refusal to admit of the Resident's participation in the selection of Ameens. On this topic the Resident entered into great detail, conceiving it essential to the success of the projected reform, and to be a point of obligation involved in the provisions of the treaty.

108. The Vizier, however, continuing inflexible on this point, although he waved any replies to the Resident's arguments, the latter found it necessary to refrain from further urgency, and signified his intention of referring the question to our determination.

109. The Resident then submitted for his Excellency's consideration a few questions, proceeding on the supposition of his choice and appointment of Ameens without the Resident's previous knowledge or concurrence. Was it his Excellency's intention, the Resident enquired, not only to exclude him from a participation in the choice of the Ameens and collectors, but to keep him, as heretofore, in ignorance of the proceedings of those officers? Did his Excellency intend, as formerly, to convey to him detached and desultory papers and articles of intelligence transmitted by venal news-writers in the pay of his several Ameens, and to withhold from him every paper of importance or authentic document, on the ground that it had not or could not be prepared, or that his Excellency himself considered it as unsatisfactory? And did his Excellency continue to entertain the wish, or indulge the vain expectation of receiving the support of the British troops to the proceedings and demands of his Ameens and Tehsildars under the new system, as to those of his farmers of revenue under the old, without satisfying the Resident, or enabling him to satisfy himself, of the propriety and justice of those proceedings and demands? If such, the Resident observed, were his Excellency's designs, it was now his duty to undeceive him, and to caution him, in a manner the most solemn, against the fallacy of such expectations; adding, that the repeated and positive instructions of his Government precluded his compliance with any future requisition for the aid of the British troops, till entirely satisfied of the justice and expediency of the measures which those troops might be required to support.

110. The Resident, in his report of this conference, stated that the Vizier was visibly affected by the foregoing remarks, and that after some further conversation his Excellency took down in writing the terms of an agreement respecting the conduct of Ameens and Tehsildars, which he promised to insert as a qualification of his Excellency's rejection of the Resident's original proposal, declaring at the same time with earnestness, that it never was his intention to withhold from the Resident any information that he might desire, but that the conduct of his officers had frequently been such as to prevent his deriving or conveying satisfactory information of their proceedings.

111. This intention his Excellency carried into effect by the transmission of a paper of amended replies, the substance of which was, that all the proceedings of the Ameens, and copies of the several papers which they might transmit to his Excellency, should be explained and forwarded for the Resident's information, and that the Resident's opinion of those proceedings and papers, after investigation and discussion with his Excellency, should guide the continuation of the Ameens or their dismissal from their offices, and that copies of all engagements whatsoever which might be received or entered into by the Tehsildars should be furnished for the Resident's information. These were the points proposed by the Vizier, as qualifications to his Excellency's refusal to permit the Resident to have a voice in the selection and nomination of the Ameens.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1811.

112. The first of those points the Resident admitted to be satisfactory ; but under the terms of the second, the Resident justly observed that he should possess no information regarding the proceedings of any of the Tehsildars until a commotion should have been excited in the country, and even then would only be apprized of the proceedings respecting such individual landholders, or others, as resisted the demands of the Tehsildars and were actually in a state of rebellion.

113. In consequence of this representation, the Vizier finally modified the last-mentioned article, by engaging that the papers transmitted by the Ameens which might be ultimately approved with the advice of the Resident, should be given to the Tehsildars, with strict orders to abide by them in forming the settlement of the districts, and after the conclusion of the settlement to transmit all the original engagements of the Zemindars and renters which they might grant, to his Excellency, for the purpose of being recorded, keeping copies for their own guidance, and for all payments of revenue to grant receipts, that so, if at any future period a Tehsildar represent to his Excellency the failure of Zemindars in their engagements, or their resistance to the authority of the Tehsildars requiring troops to coerce them, the several engagements of the Zemindars might be ready for the Resident's inspection ; so that, after satisfying himself of the rebellious conduct of the Zemindars, and their actual breach of their engagements, the Resident might take measures for their coercion and punishment.

114. The Resident's despatch from which the preceding report is taken will be found recorded as per margin.*

115. For the better comprehension of the result of these discussions, which as before observed we have stated with a view to shew the temper and disposition of the Vizier relatively to the proposed reform, it will be useful to insert in this place the Resident's original remarks and propositions and the answers of the Vizier, in the form in which they were finally modified.

Resident's Remarks and Propositions.

I have derived considerable satisfaction from the general tenor of your Excellency's remarks on the Right Honourable the Governor-General's letter, because they evince a conviction in your Excellency's mind of the importance of a complete and immediate reform of the system of assessment and realization of the revenue in your dominions, and a desire of obtaining information regarding the best practicable method of carrying that reform into effect.

As it is by no means my wish or intention to revive any former discussions of a disagreeable nature between us, or to suspend your Excellency's attention to the future important arrangements by any retrospect of the past, I shall pass over in silence the remark with which your Excellency has commenced on this occasion, observing merely, with a reference to the conduct of your officers in the districts of Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh, that the scheme of a triennial settlement for those districts, which was the first and most essential requisite Vizier's final Replies.

With regard to what you have stated in the first of those answers, namely, that the scheme of a settlement for the districts of Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh, which was the first and most essential requisite towards a beneficial arrangement, &c. The case is this :—that the causes of the delay in transmitting a perfect scheme of settlement for the districts in question have already been explained to you, and that the non-arrival of a perfect scheme can only be ascribed to some of those causes. In the scheme which I received from the Aumils it is written, that a correct statement of diminution and increase in the jumma would be afterwards furnished when the real assets were ascertained. I did not myself consider that scheme as satisfactory, and accordingly told you so at one of our personal interviews. A document, therefore, which was considered as incorrect by myself, to what purpose should I send it to you? With respect, again, to your observation of our not having received the jumma bundy of any one village or estate, if a perfect requisite towards a just and beneficial arrangement for the future management of the districts, as repeatedly and earnestly suggested by me, and as often promised by your Excellency, has not even yet been produced; and that although both your Excellency and I have been frequently told by your Aumils, and Mohummud Ashruf in particular, that a moderate assessment has been made, and an advantageous settlement concluded or nearly concluded, of all the districts under his charge, neither your Excellency nor I have yet been informed of the jumma of any one estate or village in the country, nor has a single revenue paper, of any description whatever, been hitherto submitted by the Aumil, whose duty it unquestionably was to transmit copies of all the engagements of the Zemindars and vouchers of the statements in those engagements, for your Excellency's knowledge and approbation, before the settlements were concluded.

In short, I consider the districts of Purtaubgurh and Sultanpore, notwithstanding all that we have heard from Mohummud Ashruf and the Aumils, to be at this moment, and after all the trouble which they have occasioned to both your Excellency and me, with the exception of the reduction of fortresses, which we owe entirely to the British troops, in a condition as far removed from good order and advantageous settlement as they were in the time of Hoolas Sing. But the measures by which the future good order of not these districts alone, but of the whole of your Excellency's dominions, is to be restored and permanently established, are now in our joint contemplation, and to the delineation of those measures I shall therefore proceed immediately, and shall submit them for your Excellency's consideration, in the form of answers to your remarks.

Your Excellency, in the second of those remarks, has declared your acquiescence in my original proposal, that Ameens should be deputed to those districts, &c.

Before proceeding, however, on the present occasion, to the adoption of this measure, let us first consider to what places the Ameens shall be deputed, and what duties they shall be required to perform. It appears to me to be indispensable that a division of your fect scheme of the settlement had arrived, the jummaundy would have doubtless been contained in it; and with regard to your remark, that notwithstanding Mohummud Ashruf's and the other Aumil's representations, &c. every paper conveying information of the conclusion, or approaching conclusion of the settlement of those districts which I have received, copies of them have invariably been sent to you, because it is not my wish or desire to conceal any thing from you.

In the second article you have stated that it is first necessary to consider to what places the Ameens shall be deputed, &c.

On the 18th of Suffer 1226 (15th March 1811) I issued orders to my beloved sons, Shums-ood-Dowlah and Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, and to the other officers of my Government, to search for and procure some upright and able candidates for the situation of Ameens. The your Excellency's dominions into four or five Zillahs, or general departments of proper extent, and then a subdivision of those Zillahs into districts, yielding an annual revenue of from one to three lacs of rupees each district, be determined on, and carried into execution with the least practicable delay. Then let an upright and intelligent Ameen be selected for each of those districts; and when your Excellency shall have made the selection, be pleased to inform me of the names and characters, as far as known to you, of the persons thus to be employed in offices of so high importance, that I also may endeavour to investigate their characters, and submit my opinion for your consideration; after which let them be ordered to proceed to their districts respectively, under written instructions for their guidance, a draft of which I shall have the honour of submitting for your approval.

The draft of instructions to the Ameens which you have furnished shall be attentively perused. Such parts as I may not approve after consulting with you shall be withdrawn from it, and final instructions shall then be prepared and delivered to the Ameens; and such division and subdivision of my dominions as you shall suggest, after discussion between us, shall be carried into immediate effect, under my authority and by my officers: and for this purpose Raze-Dya-Krishen has already been summoned to the Presence, that the situation and extent of the several Zillahs and muhāls, and the amount of the jumma of each, may be ascertained from the records in his possession; after which the division and subdivision shall take place, and Ameens possessing the qualities described in the Governor-General's letter shall be deputed by me to all the muhāls. In short, the Ameens must be chosen and appointed by me, and the whole system must be established under my authority and by my officers, with your advice. But the mode which you have suggested for the appointment of Ameens cannot be acceded to by me; because, in this case, it would be necessary that after selecting proper persons for the office, I should write to you to inform me who should be appointed and who should not be appointed. You will naturally approve some and reject others, and I should be obliged to comply with your suggestions on this point. Hence it is obvious, that the selection and appointment or rejection of the Ameens would proceed under your authority, and that I should have no further power or authority in the matter, but merely those of informing you and requiring your consent; and this circumstance being generally known, not one of the Ameens would be obedient to my orders or regard my authority. I can never, therefore, consent to the appointment of Ameens in a manner which would diminish my own authority; more particularly, as it is stipulated in the concluding part of the seventeenth article of the treaty concluded with the British Government in the time of Sir John Shore, that "I shall possess full authority over my household affairs, hereditary dominions, my troops and my subjects;" and in the sixth article of the Treaty of Cession, it is stated, that the Honourable the East-India Company thereby "guarantee cessors, the possession of the territories which will remain after the territorial cession, together with the exercise of mine and their authority within the said dominions; and I engage always to advise with, and act officers of the said Honourable Company.”

The Ameens having proceeded to their respective districts, all papers and documents relative to the scheme of a settlement, and of every other nature whatever which they may transmit to the Presence, shall be submitted to your investigation, and copies of them shall be furnished for that purpose; after which, if the papers or proceedings of any Ameen shall appear to you to be improper, and you satisfy me of the impropriety of his proceedings, that Ameen shall be immediately dismissed, and another person shall be selected by me to succeed him. But if the proceedings and papers of the Ameen shall be approved, he shall continue in employment and be appointed to some other district.

Further, the papers transmitted by those Ameens which may be finally approved with your advice, shall be given to the Tehsildars, with strict orders to abide by them in forming the settlement of the districts, and after the settlement is concluded, to transmit all the original engagements of the Malgoozars, such as ekrarnamah, ca-booleat, mālzaminee, and hazirzaminee, with copies of the pottahs which they grant to the Presence, for the purpose of being recorded, keeping copies for their own guidance, and for all payments of revenue which are made, to grant dakhelahs or receipts under their seals, that so, if at any future period a Tehsildar represent to the Presence the failure of Zemindars in their engagements, or resistance to the authority of the Tehsildars, requiring troops to coerce them, the several engagements of the Zemindars, which will then be on the records of the Government, may be ready for your inspection, and copies of them, with copies of the dakhelahs, shall accordingly be sent for your perusal, that after satisfying yourself of the rebellious conduct of the Zemindars, and their actual breach of their engagements, you may take measures for their coercion and punishment.

Political Letter

In the third article your Excellency has doubted the practicability of ascertaining the true revenue and resources of your country, and has enquired how this is to be done, &c.

The investigation and ascertainment of the revenue form the grand and sole object, and will prove to be the happy result of the deputation of Ameens, as I have suggested. The duty of those Ameens, as prescribed by the instructions which I shall submit, will be to assemble and conciliate, in the first instance, the Chowdries, Canoongoes, and Putwarries of the several districts under their charge, and then to require from those officers the whole of the revenue papers of every village distinctly, for a period of ten years, with the wasilbaukee accounts of the last and preceding years, and the scheme or register of the settlement for the year now drawing to a close. Those papers, after the minutest investigation which may be practicable, to be transmitted under the signature of the revenue officers, to the Presence, when your Excellency and I shall consider them, and be enabled to form an accurate judgment of the real resources and assets of every district in your dominions.

In the fourth article your Excellency has desired me to inform you where intelligent and upright men are to be found.

The absence or deficiency of such men as your Excellency has described is, in my opinion, alone to be attributed to the unhappy system of the administration which has long prevailed in your dominions, to the instability of employment under your Government, and to the danger of personal dishonour as well as confiscation of property which attends even temporary employment. When these obstacles shall be happily removed by the improved system of your administration, your Excellency will find many able and upright natives desirous of employment in your service.

In the provinces which your Excellency ceded to the Honourable Company, a majority, if not the whole, of the native officers employed by the British Government as Tehsildars, &c., were the subjects of your Excellency's dominions, yet they, having entire confidence in the Government, performed their duties with diligence, fidelity, and zeal,

In the third answer you have stated that the duty of those Ameens will be to require from the Chowdries, Canoongoes, and Putwarries, the whole of the revenue papers, &c.

I shall issue my orders to the Ameens agreeably to what you have suggested; but I recommend that this measure be carried into effect by actual measurement of the cultivated and waste lands, and of lands capable of being cultivated; in which case the exact measurement of the lands, as well as the amount of the jumma will be ascertained, and the boundaries of villages will also be fixed, so as to preclude future claims or disputes among the Zemindars on questions of unsettled boundary.

In the fourth answer you have stated, that the deficiency of men of abilities is, in your opinion, alone to be attributed to the present system of the administration in my dominions, to the instability of employment under my Government, and to the danger of personal dishonour, &c.

I have never broken my engagements nor retracted my promise in any way so as to create want of confidence in the people; on the contrary, many of the Aumils have broken their engagements with my Government, and I have knowingly put up with the loss and released them from confinement. With regard to those who are still confined, I have frequently required them, in the first instance, to liquidate their arrears, agreeably to the statements prepared by my officers, and afterwards to their own statements, giving credit for all their claims, nay, for more than they could justly require; yet, destitute of shame as well as honesty, they still retain the just dues of the Sirkar.

You suggest that such Ameens as perform their duties properly shall hereafter be appointed Tehsildars: but, in this zeal, to the advantage and satisfaction of their employers. On the same principle, under an improved system of administration for your Excellency's dominions, your Excellency may be perfectly assured that many able and upright men will be found to fill those offices under your Government, and I will cheerfully take it upon myself to procure as many as may be necessary. The proofs of their capacity and integrity, if possessing those qualifications, will hereafter fully appear upon an examination of the documents which they transmit from their districts, respectively, to the Presence; and those only should, of course, be appointed Tehsildars whose conduct as Ameens should be approved of.

In the fifth article your Excellency desires to be informed of the means of ascertaining the real state of the muhāls.

The real condition of the country will, I doubt not, be fully ascertained by the appointment of Ameens as I have suggested, and by their exertions, in the manner pointed out in my answer to the third article, and in obedience to the instructions which I shall furnish.

Your Excellency has stated in the sixth article, that when, with my advice, &c.

The intention which your Excellency has declared in this article is highly commendable; but the views of the British Government, as hinted at in the passage of the Governor-General's letter, to which your Excellency has here referred, and detailed in his Lordship's instructions to me, are still more extensive in their nature, and far more beneficial in their consequences, than your Excellency would appear to have conceived. When a satisfactory settlement of your Excellency's land revenue shall be concluded, and when the appointment of capable Tehsildars in all the districts shall have taken place, the establishment of an efficient police and of a court of justice in each Zillah will be earnestly recommended to your Excellency, as a measure manifestly indispensable to give complete effect to the salutary arrangements which precede, so that a separation and distinction of the department of collection of revenue in all its branches, from that of the dispensation of civil and criminal this case, if the Ameens be previously informed that after ascertaining the jumma of their Elakas (districts), and transmitting the revenue papers for ten years with the wasilbaukee accounts of the revenue, they will be appointed to the office of Tehsildar it is probable that, for their own future advantage, they will knowingly lower the jumma and state less than the real amount. I therefore think it would be more advisable to separate the two offices entirely; or, at all events, that no Ameen should be appointed Tehsildar in the Zillah in which he may have acted as Ameen. In this latter mode, the Ameens who are found to be deserving may still be rewarded, and the opportunity for fraud may be prevented.

No answer to this article on the part of the Vizier.

In the sixth answer you have stated, that the views of the British Government, as hinted at in the Governor-General's letter to my address, &c.

After the new system of assessment and administration of the revenue shall be carried into effect, an efficient police and a court of justice, as recommended by the Governor-General and by you, shall also be established by my orders.

nal justice throughout the country, may take place, that the subjects of your Excellency's Government at large may have the gates of justice and redress of grievances open to them at all times, that the hand of oppression or extortion in the Aumils and collectors of revenue against the landholders and peasantry may be restrained, that the just demands of those Aumils and collectors against the landholders and peasantry may be enforced, if necessary, by the regular process of the law, and the revenues of the Government may thus be duly realized, that the lives and property of the subjects may be protected, and the detection and punishment of thieves and plunderers may be insured.

Your Excellency has stated in the seventh article of your remarks, that your measures with a reference to those districts have been in conformity with the established usage of the country, &c.

Although I have not heard that serious disturbances do actually exist in any other of those muhāls than Jugdeespore, yet the ruinous consequences of the present system of farming are equally to be apprehended in all of them while that system shall prevail; and on this principle it is, that a total change of the system has been so earnestly recommended to your Excellency by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, as absolutely necessary and indispensable to remedy the evils which exist. That the suggested reform will be productive of those benefits, will serve to increase your Excellency's reputation, and greatly tend to the increase of your revenue as well as to the welfare and prosperity of your subjects, cannot reasonably be doubted; and with regard to your Excellency's apprehension of a breach of your engagements with your farmers, it must be sufficient for me to remark, that having originally remonstrated against those engagements before they were entered into by the farmers, having repeatedly and earnestly represented to your Excellency the ruinous consequences which they would produce, and the failure of my representations having occasioned the Governor-General's remonstrances on the subject, it follows that your Excellency's consignment of those muhāls under the engagements which are now referred to was in direct opposition to my

In answer to the seventh article, you have stated, that to remedy the evils which at present exist, a total change of the system has been earnestly recommended to me by the Governor-General, &c.

What the Governor-General has recommended shall certainly be carried into effect. It is, of course, my particular desire that the population of the country be increased, the happiness and prosperity of my subjects be provided for, that present or future loss of revenue to the Sirkar be effectually guarded against, and that the revenues should yearly increase. If those objects can be accomplished by the change of the present system it is well, and I have no objection whatever.

With regard to what you have stated, that my apprehension of a breach of my engagements, &c.

Praise be to God, that as yet no breach of engagements has ever been committed by me, nor can any take place hereafter.

I have not, on the present occasion, done any thing unprecedented or new. What I have done was in perfect conformity with the long-established usage of the country, against which no Resident at this Court had ever hitherto remonstrated, and thanks be to God that no bad effects have hitherto arisen from those measures; neither would any objection have been made in Calcutta to those measures if you had not written on the subject; but your representations have, of course, occasioned what has happened. It matters not. You will now consider me as intent on carrying the new system into execution.

my advice and to the counsels of the British Government, and consequently that your Excellency's adherence to those engagements, or refusal to comply with my suggestions of reform on the ground of them, would necessarily now imply (which God forbid) a departure from your engagements with our Government.

Under these circumstances, I leave it to your Excellency to judge which of the two considerations is the most important. A departure from engagements with those farmers, which were entered into contrary to my advice, or in other words, to the terms of your engagements with the Company, if productive of loss to the farmers may very easily be repaired without injury to your Excellency's reputation; whereas a breach of your engagements with the Company may be productive of the most ruinous effects, and an adherence to those engagements must be beneficial in every point of view.

Your Excellency has stated in the eighth article, that as the Governor-General has transmitted particular instructions, &c.

The Right Honourable the Governor-General has left little for me to add to his own earnest intercession in behalf of the dependants of Almass.

Your Excellency cannot but be aware of the nature of my original instructions on this subject, which were issued on the death of Almass. In pursuance of those instructions, I have repeatedly and on various occasions had the honour of addressing your Excellency in favour of many of the dependants of Almass, more particularly after the death of Rehmut Alea Khan, in favour of his women, and after the dismissal of Khanazad Khan (Mirza Jān), on the subject of the adjustment of his accounts and recovery of his demands from subordinate Aumils. Your Excellency having been pleased to inform me on one of the occasions in question, and in answer to my earnest representation, that I had nothing whatever to do with the affairs or accounts of Mirza Jān, nor any title to address you in his behalf, it became my duty to report this discussion to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, who has been pleased to notice it in his Lordship's letter to your Excellency's

In the eighth article you have requested me to furnish you with a statement of the demands against Mirza Jān and of the several exemptions which he pleads, &c.

In compliance with the wishes of the Right Honourable the Governor-General, which it is my duty and my inclination to attend to, the troopers and others placed over Khanazad Khan have been withdrawn, and two Chuprassies only are over him. A statement of the just balances against him shall be sent for your investigation.

cellency's address, and not only to approve my former representations on the subject, but to direct that the discussion be now renewed, under the express sanction of his authority, and be carried on to a satisfactory conclusion, by the equitable adjustment of the balances which are claimed from this unfortunate Aumil, so as to encrease your Excellency's reputation.

You will, I trust, do me the justice to believe, that I am by no means desirous of conducing to your Excellency's loss in the adjustment of accounts with your Aumils; and my recovery, on a former occasion, by your Excellency's particular desire, of the balances which were due by Almass, is a proof of the sincerity of this assurance. I therefore take the liberty of suggesting, that your Excellency, as on the former occasion, will now also be pleased to furnish me with a statement of the demands against Mirza Jān, and of the several exemptions which he pleads, that I may be enabled to form an accurate judgment on the case, and then to suggest to your Excellency what may appear to be most advisable for the recovery of the just dues of the Sirkar. Your Excellency may be fully assured, that after inspecting the documents which you may send to me and ascertaining the just amount of your demands, I shall be ready to support those demands with all the influence of my authority; and that, in the case of Mirza Jān's refusal to discharge them, I shall myself submit to your Excellency the justice and expediency of his renewed and still more rigorous confinement.

The foregoing are my detailed observations in answer to your Excellency's remarks on the subject of the Governor-General's letter. The concluding paragraph of that letter, however, which relates to Tujumool Hoosein Khan's jagier, having been passed over by your Excellency in silence, and I having in consequence, at our last personal interview, not only submitted my own sentiments on the subject, but also conveyed to you, in explicit though delicate terms, the sentiments of surprise and concern with which the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council had heard of the violation of rights considered as under the guarantee of his Government, Although no injury nor loss could, in my opinion, arise to Tujumool Hoosein Khan from committing the management of his jagier to an Aumil of my selection, yet, in compliance with the Governor-General's desire, the jagier shall be restored to the Khan.

Political Letter

ment, I naturally expected as the result of those communications, that your Excellency would have ordered Tujummool Hoosein Khan to resume the management of his jagier. Disappointed in this expectation, I now most earnestly request that, from a consideration of the extraordinary claims of this family to the favour of both States, your Excellency will be pleased, without any further delay, to reinstate Tujummool Hoosein Khan in the unmolested possession of his jagier, as an act of justice on the part of your Excellency, which cannot fail to be gratifying to the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council in the highest possible degree.

116. In reply to the Resident's report of his proceedings, he received the commendation due to the zeal, judgment, and ability which he had certainly displayed in conducting these discussions; but he was informed, that the satisfaction we derived from the result of the negotiation, as far as it had hitherto proceeded, was qualified by the reflection that the Vizier's acquiescence in the main points of the proposed arrangement must be ascribed more to the energy and firmness with which the Resident had urged them, than to a cordial admission on the part of his Excellency of the expediency of the suggested measures and to a sincere desire to carry them into effect. With regard to the specific measures recommended by the Resident, it was observed to him that we considered them to be generally judicious, and the most effectual that could be devised under the disadvantages arising from the inherent vices and defects of his Excellency's Government. That on one point alone we entertained considerable doubt; not, however, on the abstract ground of expediency, but upon that of public faith, as affected by a resumption of the farms before the expiration of the leases, and with or without the consent of the farmers.* That we were not entirely satisfied of the argument with which the Resident met the Vizier's objection, founded on that very ground; because, admitting even the constructive violation of his engagements with the Company, which the Resident had maintained,† it could not be considered to affect the validity of a contract between the Vizier and his farmers, and that we therefore recommended, in all practicable cases, a compromise with the farmers, but in none a compulsory resumption of the farms.

117. On the only essential article of the Resident's propositions to which the Vizier had ultimately withholden his consent, namely, the Resident's participation in the selection and appointment of Ameens, it was observed to him, that whatever might be our opinion with regard to the importance of this participation, we approved his having yielded the point; first, because some doubt might be entertained of the right of the British Government to insist upon having a voice in the appointment of the Vizier's officers, even for the execution of measures prosecuted under the influence of its counsels; and secondly, because the object would, in some degree, be obtained by the compromise; to which his Excellency had assented. The Chief Secretary's letter conveying the above, and some additional remarks, will be found recorded as per margin.‡

118. We now proceed to report the substance of the Resident's communication of the further progress of his negotiations, from which we had the mortification to find our opinion of the Vizier's real reluctance to the introduction of any effectual reform into the system of his administration practically confirmed.

119. It is not necessary to follow the further argumentative correspondence between the Vizier and the Resident with the detail which appeared expedient in reporting the discussions antecedent to his Excellency's acquiescence in the proposed plan of reform. It will be sufficient to state, in general terms, the nature of the objections which the Vizier now brought forward against the prosecution of the very measures to which his Excellency had given his positive assent.

120. He stated his conviction of the impracticability of ascertaining the assets and resources of his country by the means suggested by the Resident, and at all events the impossibility of inspecting and deciding on the voluminous documents which, preparatory to that object, the Ameens were to be instructed to transmit to Lucknow. He expressed his apprehension, that the operation of the measures in question would throw into disorder the districts where at present no disorder existed, and where the revenues were collected with regularity. That this effect would be produced by the deputation of Ameens, because (as his Excellency conceived) their authority would supersede that of the Aumils. He alleged that the introduction of the new system would not secure the accomplishment of one of his principal objects, that of preventing the necessity for the frequent employment of the Company's troops; and maintained, that in the districts subject to Mehdee Alee Khan (viz. Khyrabad and Mohumdie, the northern quarter of the Vizier's dominions), in the districts lately farmed by Mirza Jân, and in the district of Baraiteh, and other places where no disorders existed, and where the rents were regularly paid, there was no occasion whatever for changing the present system. That the flourishing state of those districts implied that the peasantry were perfectly satisfied with it, and that a change would only be productive of loss to his Government. His Excellency, on these grounds, proposed that the new system should for the present be introduced merely for trial into some one district which might be considered as in the greatest disorder; and if the result of this experiment should prove satisfactory, it could be introduced into the whole.

121. The Vizier, in support of what he had stated regarding the practical difficulty of carrying into effect the measures proposed by the Resident, transmitted to him a representation, signed by six of the selected Ameens to whom his Excellency had shewn a copy of their proposed instructions, which representation referred article by article to the draft of instructions, specifying such of the duties as the Ameens would engage to perform and such of the revenue papers as they would be able to furnish, and stating the impracticability of performing the other required duties and of furnishing the remaining documents. But with regard to this transaction the Resident stated the following singular facts, namely, that from two of those six persons who were formerly in his employment while agent to the Governor-General in Bundelcund, the Resident received information that they had been furnished, by the Vizier's orders, with drafts of the above-mentioned representations, which they were required to seal and present to his Excellency under pain of his displeasure.

122. The Resident met the objections stated by the Vizier by remarks and explanations which were certainly of a nature to satisfy his Excellency's doubts and apprehensions, if such were really entertained by him, or if he had been sincerely desirous of promoting the system of reform; but the following passages of his Excellency's reply to the Resident's arguments sufficiently demonstrate his total disinclination to the introduction of any change.

123. To an observation of the Resident's, that his Excellency's cordial concurrence in the propriety of the proposed measures, and his sincere resolution of carrying them into complete effect, was all that could possibly be required to ensure advantage and success, the Vizier replied as follows: "The case is this: that as, immediately on the introduction of the new system, the present settlement of the country must be entirely subverted and no part of it can remain, and consequently the failure of the new system, or the delay or impossibility of carrying it into complete effect, must be productive of certain loss and injury to me, it follows that a want of attention or diligence on my part to give effect to the system in question cannot be supposed. But with regard

Political Letter
from Benigh,

“ to a system of administration, the adoption and execution of which are extremely difficult and impracticable, my attention and diligence must, of course, be totally unavailing. If, on the other hand, you will be pleased to suggest such a plan for the introduction and exercise of the system as shall be conformable to the terms of the treaty and compatible with the perfect exercise of my independent authority, so that no injury nor falling off, the most minute, in my authority can be occasioned, nor any, the smallest, loss of revenue from whatever cause can arise, and you satisfy me as to all those particulars, how then can I refuse to comply with and adopt your suggestions ?”

124. Again, in answer to an observation of the Resident, that the new system of assessment was much milder than the former, and tended evidently to the comfort and happiness of the Ryots and to the ease and security of the landholders, the Vizier stated as follows: “ Although the new system appear milder to you, and though it be also my wish that this system should be successfully administered, yet the fact is, that the Talookadars and the whole of the Zemindars in my dominions have long been in the habit of concealing and withholding the real assets of their lands; and the new system being calculated to bring those practices to light and to expose the real capability of each particular estate, it is impossible, in my judgment, to expect that this system should be agreeable to them; and, on the contrary, I am greatly apprehensive that its introduction will cause the Zemindars to retire, nor can we possibly expect that it will be established in the manner we wish, since it has not yet been properly carried into effect in the Honourable Company’s Ceded and Conquered Provinces, although upwards of ten years have elapsed since its first introduction into those provinces. Of what avail, therefore, will be my cordial concurrence in a business which it is impossible or extremely difficult to accomplish ?”

125. It is worthy of remark as a singular instance of inconstancy in his Excellency’s professions, that the preceding observations were communicated to the Resident only five days after his receipt of a paper in which his Excellency desires him to “ rest assured that he had no hesitation whatever as to the introduction of the system recommended, and that, on the contrary, his Excellency was zealously employed in putting it into a train of execution.”

126. In the course of these discussions, which were conducted verbally as well as by correspondence, and embraced a great variety of subordinate points, and among others a modification of the Resident’s proposed instructions to the Ameens, the Resident properly intimated to the Vizier, that any further alteration or correspondence regarding the excuses, whether valid or frivolous, alleged by the Ameens, could tend only to procrastinate the introduction of the salutary system of reform recommended by the Governor-General in Council; that not one of those excuses, even admitting their validity, was of a nature to preclude the introduction of that system or to impede its progress, in the manner which the British Government desired, namely, to the immediate improvement of the condition of his Excellency’s landholders and peasantry, and to the consequent advantage of the State, as well as to the future increase of its revenue; and on these and other grounds, the Resident again earnestly recommended to his Excellency to dispatch the Ameens into every district of his dominions without further delay, delivering to them, however, the proclamations and instructions in the terms of the Resident’s original drafts.

127. The Resident observed, that a perpetual, or even a decennial settlement of the revenue, which would require a minute investigation to ascertain the real assets of the land, had not been recommended to his Excellency; that neither was it advisable for the present; that, on the contrary, a triennial settlement at a moderate rate of assessment, for the purpose of giving confidence to the Zemindars and peasantry and encouraging the cultivation of the soil, was all that had been suggested; and that, for this beneficial purpose, the duties which the six Ameens had engaged for (in the representation alluded to in the one hundred and twenty-first paragraph), and the documents which they had promised to furnish, if executed and prepared with fidelity and zeal, in the spirit of the proposed instructions, by all the officers whom his Excellency

from Bengal,

lency might appoint, would be amply sufficient; and that a triennial settlement, proceeding out of the labours of the Amesna, if concluded agreeably to the Resident's suggestions, would fully answer the object proposed by the introduction of the new system in its commencement.

128. The Resident's letter enclosing the correspondence, of which we have briefly stated the substance, contained a detailed and a satisfactory explanation, on that point, of his proceedings, which had attracted our particular notice, namely, his supposed suggestion relative to the resumption of farms before the expiration of the leases or without the consent of the farmers. It appeared, indeed, from the result of the Resident's enquiries, instituted after his receipt of our remarks on the point in question, that all the leases in the Vizier's dominions, with the exception of those of Khyrabad and Mohumdie, which had three years to run, and a few other inconsiderable districts under charge of Mehdee Ale Khan, would actually expire at the close of the current year; and with regard to those which formed exceptions, the Resident deemed it his duty, in consequence of our remarks, to signify to the Vizier that the introduction of the new system of assessment into those particular districts, although expedient in the highest degree on general grounds, and for the sake of uniformity in his Excellency's administration, ought not to take effect but by compromise with the farmer, which compromise his Excellency promised to endeavour to settle with Mehdee Ale Khan.

129. The Resident's despatch above referred to will be found recorded as per margin*.

130. From all that had now passed, it was evident, in our opinion, that the Vizier, while he admitted the necessity of a reform, because he could neither deny the facts, nor resist the arguments on which that necessity was founded, and while he acknowledged the obligation imposed on him by treaty of executing such reform at the suggestion and with the advice of the British Government, did not desire that it should take effect; and that, under the influence of this disposition, his efforts were employed to render the proposed system abortive, by means consistent with an ostensible solicitude to promote the success of it.

131. We could not but apprehend that the inclination of his Excellency's mind would lead him, and his unlimited means of clandestine influence and control would enable him, to realize all the difficulties and impediments which he had represented as opposing the practicability of the meditated plan of reform, but which do not really belong to it: that he would then be disposed to triumph in the fulfilment of his predictions, to charge the British Government, as in fact he actually had charged it, with the pursuit of a chimerical system of theoretical improvement, tending only to produce confusion and loss of revenue, and to deduce from its failure the practical superiority of that mode of assessment and collection, which having been established from distant times, was, however defective, best adapted to the habits and genius of the people, and best calculated to realize the resources of the country.

132. In truth, those enlarged principles of polity which embrace a consideration for the comfort and happiness of the people, which provide for the security of the rights and property of the subjects of the realm, for their protection against the abuses of power, for the control of injustice and oppression, which reject the allurements of immediate pecuniary advantage in favour of the more distant but solid benefits arising from the purity of the administration and the general prosperity of the country, are foreign to the character of the Vizier, and adverse to the natural propensities of his mind and disposition. From the tenor of the Resident's reports, these propensities appeared to be too firmly established to admit of the expectation which Government was willing originally to indulge, that they might be made to yield to the force of argument and reason, addressed to an understanding certainly of no ordinary class, and supported by all the influence of the British power, the stipulations of treaty, and the present Resident's zealous and able agency.

133. We

133. We directed those observations to be stated to the Resident in replying to his last mentioned despatch, intimating to him, at the same time, that the object of stating them was not to discourage the continuance of his efforts, but partly to afford him the satisfaction of knowing that we were fully aware of the difficulties which opposed them, and would not be disposed to ascribe their too-probable failure to any defect of ability or exertion on his part, and partly to place him on his guard against those arts, by which the just and benevolent intentions of the British Government, in urging the reform, might be converted into the charge of having occasioned a material defalcation of his Excellency's revenues, and involved his country in confusion, by effecting the subversion of a long-established system of assessment and collection, without substituting another, either efficient in its operation or adequate to the purposes for which it was proposed. While he persevered in his endeavours, therefore, to accomplish, at least, a partial reform of the Vizier's administration, the Resident was instructed to be careful not to suffer the effects of his Excellency's open or clandestine obstruction to be charged upon the inefficacy of the system itself, as recommended to his adoption. These instructions, which were dated the 21st June, will be found recorded as per margin.*

134. In his next despatch the Resident reported the details of a conference with the Vizier to which he had alluded in his preceding letter. On that occasion the Resident answered categorically, and with much force and justice, every point of the Vizier's objections, doubts, and apprehensions; previously noticing, however, his Excellency's total silence on those points at the time when he consented to all the fundamental articles of the Resident's propositions, and the consequent inadmissibility of the arguments now employed by the Vizier, in a form inconsistent with his previous unqualified assent: an assent which, with reference to the positive obligations of treaty to establish an improved system of administration, became as binding as the treaty itself, and to which therefore the Resident observed he had a right to insist on his Excellency's adherence. For the details of this discussion we refer your Honourable Court to the Resident's despatch recorded as per margin.†

135. Having refuted all the grounds on which his Excellency founded either his avowed disinclination to fulfil the engagements to which he had consented on the subject of the reform, or the pleas under which he evidently sought to evade the execution of them by procrastination, and having drawn from his Excellency a repeated recognition of the obligation of those engagements, the Resident proceeded to recapitulate each article for his Excellency's reconsideration, connecting each in its turn with one of the four fundamental principles of reform stated in the Governor-General in Council's instructions of the 28th December 1810, viz.:—First, A division and subdivision of his Excellency's dominions into Zillahs and muhāls, with a view to facilitate the adoption of all the subsequent arrangements. This preliminary measure his Excellency declared to be totally unobjectionable as far as it was practicable, and offered to send his Dewan to the Resident for the purpose of concluding that arrangement. Secondly, The deputation of Ameens to all the muhāls, to investigate the state of the country and to collect revenue documents, with a view to the moderate assessment of the lands. To the immediate and universal adoption of this measure his Excellency opposed, as before, his apprehension of general disorder in the country by the supersession of all his officers at once, and also his engagements with some farmers who deserved well of his Government, and whose districts he alleged were in excellent order.

136. This last objection led to a discussion, in the course of which his Excellency admitted that almost the whole of the leases were for a single year only, and mentioned the death of the farmer of Baraitch, the farm of which district, therefore, although it had been granted for a term of years, was resumable. The districts of Khyrabad and Mohumdie, under Mehdee Alee Khan, he stated, were also farmed for a term of years, as before noticed.

137. Th

137. The Resident gathered from his Excellency's further remarks, that a moiety, if not more, of his Excellency's dominions was already under the management of amānee Aumils, or officers corresponding in some degree in their functions with those employed by the British Government in similar trusts; and this circumstance suggested a proposal which the Resident was about to make for the removal of the Vizier's apprehensions, when he interrupted the Resident by stating it himself, namely, that the investigation and collection of revenue papers should be committed to the officers already employed in those districts, under the instructions which the Resident had suggested for the Ameens, and with the further benefit of the proclamation in the Vizier's amended terms. By this arrangement his Excellency admitted that a number of his apprehensions would be removed; and it was agreed that this proposal should be committed to writing and maturely considered by his Excellency, who promised to signify his determination upon it in the course of a few days.

138. The Resident then proceeded to state the third and fourth articles of agreement, viz., a provision for a triennial settlement with the landholders, &c. at a moderate rate of assessment under a gradation of engagements for that period to be guaranteed by the State, and ultimately the establishment of a court of justice and efficient police in each Zillah, when the settlement of the revenue should be concluded. To both these articles his Excellency signified his implicit adherence; and the conference concluded with a promise, on the part of the Resident, to submit the heads of it to his Excellency on the same or the ensuing day.

139. This was accordingly done, and that document will be found on record as noted in the margin.* His Excellency, in his reply to that document, still professed his adherence to all the articles of agreement, although he declared the fulfilment of them to be dependent upon the removal of a few remaining apprehensions, of which, as his Excellency neglected to specify them, having referred for a knowledge of them to documents already in possession of the Resident, the latter desired an explanation.

140. This correspondence, also, had reference to other points of detail which it is not material to notice; with the exception of his Excellency's positive objection to the insertion of the words "with the advice and concurrence of the British Government" in the proclamation proposed by the Resident. His Excellency conceived that the insertion of those words would affect his authority, as they implied that the arrangement was adopted under the guidance of the British Government. The Resident deemed their insertion essential, with a view to give to the people that confidence which they would derive from the declared association of the British Government in the new arrangement: but finding the Vizier inflexible on this point, he ultimately relinquished it.

141. The Vizier's withholding any reply during fifteen days to the Resident's written request for an explanation of his Excellency's remaining doubts and apprehensions, produced a further correspondence, which the Resident reported in another despatch recorded as per margin.†

142. In consequence of that delay, the Resident addressed a letter of remonstrance to the Vizier, in which he again called upon his Excellency to fulfil his own positive engagements, by immediately transmitting to the Resident a sketch of the division and subdivision of his country, by adopting the necessary measures for the collection of the revenue papers and the investigation of the state of the districts, either by deputing Ameens, as proposed by the Resident, or by issuing instructions to the Aumils, according to the modified proposal before mentioned.

143. On this occasion the Resident, with a view to remove every pretext on the part of the Vizier to an immediate fulfilment of his engagements, conceded the points to which his Excellency had objected, namely,—First, The deputation of new Ameens; in lieu of which the Resident agreed that the investigation of the state of the districts, and the collection of the revenue papers should be committed to to the Ameer in authority under the new character of Ameer, and with the benefit of the proclamation and instructions; and, Secondly, The insertion of the words "with the advice and concurrence of the British Government" in the proclamation.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1811.

144. These concessions might certainly have been expected to induce the Vizier to proceed to the adoption of the measures to which he had given his unqualified assent; but, on the contrary, his Excellency had recourse to new evasions, as well as to the revival of his former objections, although those objections had reference solely to the very arrangement which the Resident had consented to abandon, namely, the deputation of Ameer. The Vizier referred to the Resident's desire of being acquainted with his Excellency's remaining doubts and apprehensions, with a view to remove them; to the Resident's having transmitted to the Presidency a copy of the Vizier's statement of objections to the deputation of Ameer, and also to the Resident's have objected to the partial deputation of Ameer to the two districts of Purtaubgurh and Sultanpore, a deputation proposed by his Excellency in the course of the negotiations, under his suggested scheme of making a trial of the new system in one or two districts; and on these grounds the Vizier founded an assumption, not only that the subject of his doubts and apprehensions was under reference, but that the deputation of Ameer was suspended at the Resident's own request, and that consequently this measure being preliminary to the whole project of reform, every other measure connected with it was necessarily suspended.

145. To this extraordinary document the Resident replied in great detail, exposing and refuting every plea on which his Excellency had endeavoured to justify his departure from his engagements; and on the same occasion, with a view to leave his Excellency no shadow of pretext for further delay, the Resident entered into a discussion of the evils represented by his Excellency to be the necessary consequence of deputing Ameer to collect materials and pave the way for the future assessment of the lands on moderate terms, and under a triennial settlement; evils which, on the present occasion, his Excellency thought proper, in exaggerated language, to describe as being the subversion of his authority, the retirement and disaffection of his subjects, general disorder in the country, a suspension of the collections, and a total loss of balances.

146. The Resident demonstrated the absurdity of these assumed apprehensions by adverting to the exactly-parallel case of the Ceded Provinces, which at the period of the cession were in the same state as the reserved dominions, but which were brought into their present flourishing condition under the British Government, by the very measures now recommended to the Vizier, and were by the agency of Ameer formerly his Excellency's subjects.

147. The Resident, in his despatch enclosing copies of the above-mentioned documents, stated the following observation relative to the state of the negotiation: "The effect of this last letter (meaning that described in the preceding paragraph) remains yet to be seen. I cannot relinquish the hope of his Excellency's being ultimately induced to evince a cordial concurrence in the just views of the Government for his own eminent advantage, as well as the comfort and happiness of his people; and I am further encouraged to indulge this expectation, by reflecting that the expiration of the present current Fusly year will shortly of itself supersede the existing revenue arrangements, and that as his Excellency can scarcely entertain the design of renewing the leases of the farmers in direct opposition to the advice of the British Government, as conveyed by the Governor-General's letter, nor can he propose to himself, at any future period, the support of the British troops to the exercise of the present system of his administration. He must soon see the necessity of adopting the measures of reform, or of sacrificing wantonly a large portion of his revenue."

148. In this expectation, however, the Resident was deceived; and in his next despatch, recorded as per margin*, he had occasion to transmit a copy of a letter letter from the Vizier, in which his Excellency asserted that he had never made any positive promise with regard to the introduction of the system of reform recommended by the British Government, denied the application of the provisions of the treaty to the measures proposed to his adoption, and reasserting his former refuted pleas and arguments, declared his resolution not to adopt any of those measures, unless every subject of doubt and apprehension regarding the effects of their operation should be removed from his mind.

149. It is remarkable that this retraction followed a personal conference between the Vizier and the Resident, in which the latter exposed in a forcible manner his Excellency's continued prevarications and evasions, and by argument and remonstrance apparently succeeded in persuading his Excellency to abandon his untenable objections to the prosecution of the measures in agitation.

150. The arguments which, according to the Resident's report, seemed to produce the most impression on the Vizier's mind, were substantially those to which he adverted in his former despatch, as quoted in the 147th paragraph, and were stated to the Vizier in the following terms, viz. :—"That a renewal of " any of the leases which were now about to expire, or the consignment of any " portion of his dominions to the future management of farmers, in direct oppo" sition to the advice of the British Government and to the express terms of the " Governor-General's letter, could not, the Resident trusted, be in his Excel" lency's contemplation : that the future assistance or support of a single soldier " of the British army to the present baneful system of assessment and collection,
" or to any of its instruments in the person of his Excellency's Aumils, was " totally out of the question ; and that, under all those circumstances, it behoved
" his Excellency to consider under what so beneficial arrangement as the plan
" suggested by the British Government, the resources of his country could be " realized and the internal tranquillity of his dominions secured against the " probable insurrections of the landholders, the effects of their oppression and
" despair."

151. A note of these observations his Excellency requested the Resident to leave in his hands, promising to make a personal consideration of the subject of them in the course of a few days. The Resident had accordingly prepared, though not transmitted, a letter containing the substance of his verbal remarks and arguments, when he received the extraordinary letter from his Excellency already noticed, which however only rendered the more necessary the transmission of that which the Resident had prepared.

152. The Resident closed his report upon this unexpected issue of the negotiation in the following terms : " On a retrospect of the whole of the proceed" ings in this arduous and important negotiation, his Excellency the Vice-" President in Council will, I doubt not, do me the justice to believe, that " every possible exertion of my judgment and zeal has been applied, in " the first instance, to prevail on his Excellency the Vizier to acquiesce in
" the salutary arrangements proposed to him by the Right Honourable
" the Governor-General in Council : that, further, no arguments which the " instructions of the Government suggested, or the nature of the case and " subsequent occurrences required, has been omitted on my part, with the " view and for the purpose of inducing his Excellency to banish his imaginary
" fears and to adhere to his original engagements ; and that his Excellency's " ultimate denial of those engagements, in direct opposition to the terms of a " written document authenticated by a letter under his seal, when every argu" ment and even plausible pretext for further delay had been repelled, is a " circumstance which I could not have foreseen, and which no exertion of my " judgment could at any time have enabled me to guard against.

" I am still encouraged to hope for some favourable change in the mind of his " Excellency the Vizier as the effect of my last letter ; and I shall not fail to " take advantage of such a change, if produced, for the purpose of renewing
" the discussion and of prosecuting it to a satisfactory conclusion.

" A firm and decided refusal of the future assistance of our troops to sup" port the proceedings of the Aumils or coerce defaulting Zemindars, must of " necessity

"necessity to produce the desired effect in a very limited time, and a declaration of this resolution on the part of the Government, in a direct address from the Honourable the Vice-President to his Excellency the Vizier, would, I humbly conceive, be of use in accelerating the accomplishment of the object."

153. From the tenor of these last reports we were finally compelled to entertain a conviction of the impracticability of obtaining the Vizier's concurrence in the system of reform so earnestly recommended to his adoption, excepting only by measures of absolute compulsion, that is to say, by a renewed and direct urgency on the part of this Government, founded on the obligations of treaty, and accompanied by the declaration suggested in the last paragraph of the Resident's despatch, as above quoted; and from the adoption of measures of this description we considered ourselves to be withheld, not only by considerations affecting, in our judgment, the very existence of the connection on its actual basis between the two States, but by the conviction that the Vizier's involuntary acquiescence in the system of reform, even to the full extent proposed by the Resident, would fail to secure its successful operations; for perverted and erroneous as are the views and sentiments of his Excellency, he would have an interest in rendering that system abortive, and we were well aware that his means of doing so were unlimited and beyond control. This consideration, indeed, was present to the mind of the Governor-General in Council when he issued his instructions to the Resident of the 28th December 1810, and it consequently was never in the contemplation of Government to carry the negotiation to the extreme now suggested by the Resident.

154. The object of the reference in those instructions to the obligation imposed upon the Vizier by treaty, and to the reluctance with which the British Government employed its troops for the suppression of disorders occasioned by the evils and abuses of his Excellency's administration, or to state the case more strongly, in supporting the course of injustice and oppression, was to demonstrate the right of that Government to demand from the Vizier the reform of his administration, and to supply the arguments which might be supposed to have the greatest efficacy in convincing the Vizier of the necessity of a reform and in persuading him to adopt it. We could not but be of opinion, therefore, highly as we approved the Resident's zeal and able exertions, manifested in the conduct of this arduous negotiation, that he had gone too far in declaring to the Vizier a positive resolution, on the part of the British Government, to refuse in future the aid of its troops in the suppression of disorders in his Excellency's country, although those disorders should be occasioned by the oppressions or misconduct of his officers, for the introduction of compulsory measures as above explained would entirely change the ground of negotiation, would bring into immediate question the continuance or dissolution of the relations between the two States, as established by treaty; but the course of proceeding suggested by the Resident appeared to us to be objectionable on other grounds, namely, on the doubt which we entertained of its being supported by the laws and principles which regulate the interpretation of treaties.

155. In the instructions which on this occasion were issued under our authority to the Resident, these several points were discussed at great length. Instead of stating the details of these discussions in the body of this address, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the record of those instructions which will be found on the Consultation noted in the margin.*

156. These observations, the Resident was informed, were not intended, in any degree, as a defence of the Vizier's conduct, which we admitted to have been marked by prevarication, evasion, and insincerity, throughout the whole course of the late arduous negotiation; but they were stated, first, because we deemed it of importance that the Resident should be apprized of our sentiments on a question affecting the stability of the engagements subsisting between the British Government and the Vizier, and the obligations of public faith; and, secondly, as being introductory to the resolution which we found ourselves compelled to adopt, under the certain disappointment of all the Resident's zealous and able efforts to accomplish the object of the Governor-General in Council's instructions of the 28th December 1810, and under the conviction already stated, that even the Vizier's acquiescence in every part of the proposed plan of reform, in the actual temper and disposition of his mind, would fail to secure any of the benefits which his cordial adoption of it would unquestionably produce.

157. That resolution was the relinquishment, for the present at least, of any further efforts, on the assumed ground that the protraction of the negotiation, and the subsequent delay in the adoption of preliminary measures and arrangements, occasioned solely by his Excellency's insincere and disingenuous conduct, until the near approach of the termination of the current Fusly year, had rendered the prosecution of the plan of reform at the present season impracticable. The Resident, at the same time, was instructed not to disguise from the Vizier the sentiments of disappointment with which we had contemplated his Excellency's conduct during the whole of the negotiation, and now contemplated the effects of it in the suspension of the salutary and unobjectionable system of reform recommended to his adoption.

158. The Resident, in his despatch on the subject of the negotiation received next after the transmission of the above described instructions (which despatch is recorded as per margin),* having noticed an indisposition with which the Vizier had been troubled, and which had occasioned a suspension of the negotiation, stated that he had received information of a circular order having been issued to all farmers of revenue (with the exception of Mehdee Alee Khan, whose lease, as before mentioned, had several years to run), purporting that no renewal of their leases would be granted, and that the revenues were in future to be collected under the aumance system exclusively.

159. The Resident took this occasion to reply to the instructions of the 21st June (the substance of which is stated in the one hundred and thirtieth and following paragraphs of this report), expressing our opinion of the Vizier's decided disinclination to the adoption of the proposed reform, and our consequent apprehension of his Excellency's probable endeavours to render its operation abortive, and putting the Resident on his guard against those arts, by which the just and benevolent intentions of the British Government in urging the reform might be converted into the charge of having occasioned a material defalcation of his Excellency's revenues, and involved his country in confusion, by effecting the subversion of a long-established system of assessment and collection, without substituting another, either efficient in its operations or adequate to the purposes for which it was proposed.

160. The Resident stated himself to be well aware of the necessity of this caution, and to have kept it uniformly in view: observing, however, that with regard to this point of our apprehension, Government might be considered to be sufficiently secure; for that, in the case of the Vizier's being at length happily induced to fulfil his engagements with the Resident, and to execute the measures of reform under the constant influence of his suggestions, proceeding on his Excellency's own correct and unreserved communication of the circumstances to which the Resident's advice might be intended to apply, the information which he (the Resident) already possessed regarding the character and disposition of the principal landholders, and the state of the country and population at large, enabled him with confidence to predict the successful progress of those measures in every district of his Excellency's dominions, without any material defalcation of his revenue during even the first three years of reform, and with a certain prospect of increase at the beginning of the second settlement of the revenue; whilst, on the other hand, if his Excellency were seriously disposed, and being so disposed should be permitted to depart from any one of his engagements with the Resident, to commence hereafter, as he had already on one or two occasions commenced, what his Excellency termed a partial and experimental reform of the system of assessment and collection of his revenue; if his Excellency continued, as heretofore, to withhold every degree of useful and important important information from the British Resident at his Court, to ask the advice of the Resident occasionally on a few unimportant points, and to evince a total disregard of that advice in every instance where it might oppose his own baneful propensities or the oppressive views of his Government; under such circumstances, the Resident observed, the failure, whether partial or total, of the projected measures of reform, and the future decrease of a revenue which was actually decreasing with extraordinary rapidity every year, could not, on any principle, be referred to the councils of the British Government or of its representative, nor could they constitute a valid charge against the efficiency of a general system of reform, which to be executed in the terms of the treaty and existing engagements between the two States, must be executed with the uniform concurrence and advice of the Honourable Company's officers, and the total failure of which might, in this latter case, and in this case alone, be made a ground of charge or reproach against the wisdom and justice of the British Government.

161. The despatch above referred to was succeeded by another three days later in date (and recorded as per margin),* communicating a copy of a letter to his address from his Excellency the Vizier, representing, in the language of apparent alarm, his extreme indisposition, entreating the Resident to visit him, taking with him two or three physicians, and expressing in terms of extraordinary warmth his Excellency's confidence in the Resident's friendship and sympathizing kindness. The Resident stated, that he instantly obeyed the summons: that the physicians pronounced his disorder to be merely rheumatic, and though severe not dangerous: that he had remained a considerable time in attendance on his Excellency, administering every degree of consolation which the nature of his complaint, the apparent condition of his mind, and the kindest offices and expressions of friendship could afford; and that on his second visit he had found his health considerably improved.

162. We mention this circumstance, because the Resident appeared to found on this apparently sincere manifestation of the Vizier's confidence in his friendship and attachment, the expectation of a change in his Excellency's disposition with regard to the pending question of reform, and of his being ultimately induced to yield to suggestions, which this display of the feelings of confidence and personal regard in the hour of sickness and distress implied on the part of his Excellency a consciousness of having been dictated by an anxious desire to promote the welfare and prosperity of his Government.

163. These communications appeared to render expedient the expression of our sentiments upon them, with reference to the tenor of our last instructions; and accordingly, after noticing in suitable terms our concern at his Excellency's illness, and referring to a letter which the Vice-President deemed it proper to address to the Vizier on the occasion, we directed the Resident to be informed, that the circumstances and observations stated in the first of the two above-described despatches, combined even with the conciliatory language of the Vizier's letter to the Resident's address, had not appeared to us to render necessary any alteration of our instructions, because they indicated no material change in that disposition of his Excellency's mind with regard to the projected system of reform on which those instructions were founded.

164. If, it was observed, his Excellency could be supposed to be sincerely desirous of effecting a reform of the present vicious system of assessment and collection; if his objections to the proposed plan were not (as they unquestionably were) fictitious; if (to use the language of the Resident's despatch) any prospect existed of inducing his Excellency "to fulfil his engagements with the Resident and to execute the measures of reform under the constant influence of the Resident's suggestions, proceeding on his own correct and unreserved communication of the circumstances to which the Resident's advice might be intended to apply," it would be the duty of Government to persevere in urging his Excellency's execution of the suggested plan; not, however, by the compulsory means of menacing the withholding of our troops from the internal service of his country, for which, indeed, no necessity would then exist, but by arguments arguments calculated to remove his objections; arguments to which, in the temper and disposition of mind above described, his Excellency might be expected to yield, or by compromises not subversive of the object in view: but that, under the Vizier's most manifest aversion to the change of system, no advantage could be expected to arise from our perseverance. That he had resisted the force of argument, had retracted his own positive engagements, and had declined to accept the compromise proposed by himself. That the removal of one objection has been succeeded by another; and, finally, the whole course of his Excellency's conduct during the negotiation had demonstrated a systematic design to avoid the adoption of the proposed measures of reform, and warranted a conviction, that if his acquiescence were enforced by menace or by importunity, he would clandestinely employ the means within his power of rendering it abortive.

165. That the case which, as above cited, the Resident had himself described as enabling him with confidence to predict the success of the meditated measures of reform could not be expected to arise. That in the disposition which his Excellency had so unalterably displayed, he might be compelled, but could not be persuaded, "to fulfil his engagements with the Resident, and to execute the measures under the constant influence of his suggestions;" but that there the effect of compulsion would cease. The disposition would be wanting, which should lead his Excellency to render the Resident's suggestions beneficial, by "his own correct and unreserved communication of the circumstances to which the Resident's advice might be intended to apply;" and that disposition would still prevail, which as it had hitherto led his Excellency to obstruct by every species of artifice and evasion the introduction of the plan of reform, would actuate his secret endeavours to demonstrate the justice of his uniform aversion to it, by precluding the efficiency of its operation.

166. That unless, therefore, such a change should have occurred in the temper and disposition of his Excellency's mind, as to lead him cheerfully to co-operate in the measures of reform proposed to his adoption, limiting his objections to points of real doubt, not raising them, as hitherto, with the secret design of preventing the execution of those measures, we must consider a further prosecution of the negotiation to be more than useless.

167. The next despatch from the Resident contained a reply to our instructions of the 6th of July, the substance of which is stated in the one hundred and fifty-third and following paragraphs of this address. The Resident stated some explanations on two points which formed the principal topics of the discussions contained in those instructions.

168. We had disputed the justice, on the ground of those principles which regulate the interpretation of treaties, of founding a refusal to afford the aid of our troops in suppressing disorders in his Excellency's country; that is to say, a refusal to fulfil a specific obligation of treaty, on the Vizier's declining to accede to a specific plan of reform proposed to him under that article of the treaty of 1801, which imposes on his Excellency an obligation to introduce into his country an improved system of administration and to conform to the counsels of the British Government; in other words, we contended that this refusal on the part of the Vizier could not be deemed such a violation of the articles of treaty, as to warrant what we could not but consider to be tantamount to a declared dissolution of the alliance.

168A. The explanations of the Resident tended to demonstrate, not that the Vizier had violated the treaty by refusing his consent to a specific system of reform recommended to him by the British Government, and that the penalty of that violation should justly be the withholding the aid of our troops for the suppression of disorders in his country (a position which he never intended to maintain), but that his Excellency had evinced a disposition to refuse the fulfilment of a positive obligation of treaty, by abstaining from the adoption of any system or measure of reform, which justified the ultimate declaration of a refusal of the aid of our troops to the oppressive and arbitrary demands of the Vizier's Farmers and Aumils, combined with the exercise of the essential right of of every Government to investigate and ascertain the justice of the demands which its power might be required to enforce, before proceeding to enforce those demands, by extensive and hazardous, as well as in most cases, unnecessary warfare.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1811.

169. The Resident supported the first part of this position by observing, that his Excellency, in the outset of the negotiation, acknowledged his obligation to reform the system of his Government. That he tacitly admitted his own inability to suggest an efficient plan for that purpose, and that he called upon the British Government, in the person of its representative, to devise and arrange the details of an improved system of administration, such as that Government might consider itself bound and authorized to support, without incurring any longer the reproach of abetting injustice and oppression. That his Excellency after mature deliberation and discussion acquiesced, and declared his acquiescence in the principal measures of reform which had been suggested at his own desire for his adoption, and had finally retracted his acquiescence under circumstances of extraordinary aggravation.

170. In the second place, the Resident contended that his declaration to the Vizier, relative to the future refusal of the aid of our troops, fell far short of that of a positive resolution to refuse their aid for the suppression of any future disorders in his Excellency's country, to be occasioned by the oppression of his Aumils, and that it had been limited to the future refusal of the aid or support of our troops to the oppressive demands of the Aumils in the progress of their collection of the revenue, a peculiar description of support for which (the Resident observed) no article of the treaty provided, and which, in fact, was expressly superseded by the second clause of the third article, authorizing and requiring the Vizier to retain in his service such number of armed Peons as should be deemed necessary for the purposes of the collections, and a few horsemen and Nujeebs to attend the persons of the Amcens; although the practice of the British Government, proceeding on principles of liberality to his Excellency the Vizier, had certainly tended to establish a belief in his Excellency's mind, that the British troops, like the armed Peons in his service, were the bounden slaves of his will, the necessary instruments of his oppression.

171. The Resident added, that the only question in his contemplation, in suggesting (as noticed in the hundred and fifty-second paragraph of this address) a direct declaration on the part of the Vice-President, in a letter to the Vizier, of our resolution to refuse the future assistance of our troops to support the proceedings of the Aumils or coerce the defaulting Zemindars, was, whether the belief above mentioned should be removed from the Vizier's mind, by a solemn declaration of the future intention of the Government to investigate the justice of the demands which its power might be required to enforce, or should continue to influence the Vizier's conduct in direct opposition to our counsels.

172. The Resident concluded his despatch (for the details of which we refer your Honourable Court to the record of it on the Consultation noted in the margin*) by signifying his intention of carrying our instructions of the 6th of July into effect, as soon as the state of the Vizier's health should admit of his entering on the subject.

173. The last despatch of the Resident connected with the subject of reform, reported that the Vizier appeared to have recovered his usual state of health. That his Excellency had requested, in an earnest manner, the discontinuance of the daily visits of enquiry that the Resident had paid him; expressing the highest sense of the Resident's friendship and the extraordinary gratification of his Excellency's mind by the sedulous attention of the Resident during the whole course of his illness: on which the Resident observed, that the then apparently happy frame of the Vizier's temper and disposition, if there were any certainty of its continuance, would authorize the hope of success from the renewal of the negotiation; but that he considered himself precluded from taking advantage of any circumstances for that purpose by our recent orders, and that he should therefore content himself with receiving such proposals on the subject as the Vizier might think think proper to convey to him. The Resident, in the same despatch, also described the terms on which he proposed to communicate to his Excellency our resolution relative to the suspension of the negotiation.

174. In the reply to the two last-mentioned despatches, a reference was made to specific passages in the Resident's preceding reports, on which we had founded the construction of the Resident's declaration relative to the future employment of our troops. Without disputing the accuracy of the Resident's explanations on that point, it was merely observed that the intent and meaning of the declaration as described by the Resident required that it should have consisted not of an indefinite and unqualified refusal of the future aid of our troops to support the proceedings of the Aumils or coerce the defaulting Zemindars, but of an alleged right of previous investigation, of a right to arbitrate the demands which the troops might be called upon to support, and of an intimation of the resolution of the British Government to exercise that right on all future occasions.

175. The case, it was observed, might be supposed, of one or more Zemindars in a province, driven perhaps to extremity by the injustice or exactions of an Aumil or farmer refusing to pay any portion of the public revenue, assuming an attitude of resistance, and preparing to oppose any attempt on the part of the latter to enforce his demands. Such Zemindars must then be considered to be in a state of rebellion, and under the supposition that the local authority did not possess the power of reducing them to obedience, the demand of assistance from the British troops would be authorized by the stipulations of the treaty, and the case would require the march of our troops to the scene of these disorders; not, however, necessarily for the purpose of enforcing the demands of the Aumil, but for the preservation of tranquillity in the first instance, and ultimately for the enforcement of the demands which, on investigation, might be found to be just, at the same time that investigation would be prosecuted in the manner that might be settled between the Resident and the Vizier.

176. It was observed, that this course of proceeding would obviously require, as the alternative of the Vizier's declining the adoption of any reform, a declaration essentially differing from the terms of that which the Resident actually conveyed to him, since it would require that the right of investigation and arbitration should be asserted and recognized in all cases in which the aid of our troops should be demanded.

177. The Resident was directed actually to convey the intimation above described to the Vizier, adjusting with him, at the same time, the mode of inquiry to be prosecuted for ascertaining the justice of the demands which our troops might be required to enforce.

178. The Resident was informed, that this instruction was founded on the supposition that the Vizier could not be induced cordially to enter into the scheme of reform which had been proposed, because that scheme involved an effectual restraint on the oppressions and exactions of his Excellency's officers, and the means of ascertaining the equity of their demands on the landholders. But that if the change of disposition adverted to in the Resident's last mentioned despatch should have proved so essential as to lead his Excellency to acquiesce in the beneficial arrangements which he had till then resisted, the Resident would, of course, have prosecuted the negotiation which, by the orders of Government of the 6th ultimo, he had been directed to suspend.

179. With the preceding instructions (which will be found recorded as per margin*) the correspondence on the subject of the proposed reform of the Vizier's administration has for the present closed. We learn from the private advices, that on the plea of ill health, the Vizier has continued studiously to avoid any further communication on this subject, and that it is his Excellency's object to observe this course, and to refrain from replying to the Governor-General's letter of the 28th December 1810 until after his Lordship's return to the Presidency.

180. Our object, in conveying to your Honourable Court this detailed report, is to bring under your notice the peculiar character and disposition of the Vizier's mind, mind, and to exhibit the difficulty, and we fear the impracticability, of influencing him to the adoption of any arrangements which are calculated to affect the operation of his inordinate desire for the accumulation of wealth, however conducive to the prosperity of his country, the happiness of his subjects, and even to the future augmentation of his revenues.

181. When the lands are let in farm, they are leased on exorbitant terms. The farmer, with a view both to fulfil his engagements and to secure a profit to himself during the limited period of his tenure, naturally exercises rigour and oppression within the limits of his authority. When the lands are held aumance, that is, placed under charge of an officer of the Government appointed to collect the revenue, that officer is rendered reponsible for the realization of the imposed jumma, and the excess of the assessment is generally such as cannot be levied without extortion, violence, and injustice. When a compliance with such demands is refused, the farmer, Aumil, or officer, represents the Zemindar or under-renter to be a defaulter and rebel, and urges the necessity of employing troops for his coercion. Thus the Vizier employs the British troops as the instrument of these wide-extended exactions, while their presence, and the knowledge of the obligations imposed on the British Government to suppress disorders within his Excellency's country, precludes that natural remedy which overstrained and unprotected oppression carries within itself.

182. Disappointed in our endeavours to relieve the British Government from the necessity of supporting the activity of a system of rapacity and injustice, without assuming a degree of interference in the internal concerns of the Vizier's dominions which would amount to the absolute control of his Excellency's authority, no alternative seems left but the establishment and exercise of that right of investigation and arbitration which is described in our last instructions to the Resident. This course of proceeding, however, even supposing it to be unobstructed by the perverted interests and artifices of the Vizier, can only be expected to remedy the evils complained of in a very partial degree. The abuses of a system radically vicious must continue to exist, and under the most favourable operation of the proposed arrangement, we can only hope, in some cases, to be the means of preventing specific acts of injustice, and to avoid the pain and the discredit of enforcing exactions by the terror of the British arms.

Par. 147. On the consultation of the date noted in the margin* is recorded a despatch from the Resident, containing a report of his discussions and correspondence with his Excellency the Vizier on the subject of the just complaints of the Begum, Shums-oon-Nissa, widow of the late Asuf-ood-Dowlah, against the conduct of the Vizier towards her, and also expressing her Highness's anxious desire to be permitted to quit Lucknow, from which it appears that the Resident had made several unavailing attempts to procure the redress of her grievances.

148. After the expression of Government's entire approbation of the efforts which the Resident had employed for that purpose, and of its concern at their failure, Major Baillie was directed to renew his remonstrances to the Vizier, under the express sanction of Government; and he was at the same time informed, that if his further endeavours should be equally unsuccessful, it was the wish of Government that he should persuade the Vizier, if possible, to permit the Begum to retire within the Company's provinces, making the necessary arrangements for her passport, and that in that event Government would not object to his employing the argument suggested in his despatch, namely, to urge the the necessity of her Highness's departure from Lucknow with a view to the restoration of her health, which was not considered to be inconsistent with the spirit of our instructions of the 18th April 1808, adverted to in the two hundred and forty-third paragraph of our despatch of the 27th of September of the same year, those instructions being applicable to the case of our encouraging and assisting the Begum to withdraw from the Vizier's territories and to retire to a far distant country, without consulting the Vizier, and against his consent, and having reference to the inconvenience and embarrassment of making arrangements for her voyage to Mecca, and to considerations which rendered the prosecution of her design undesirable.

149. The Begum's sufferings under the Vizier's most discreditable persecution and enmity, and under the pressure of a severe malady, however, were considered to be sufficient to overbalance those motives of repugnance to grant her an asylum, or even to favour her desire of retiring to Arabia, if she should still earnestly retain it.

EXTRACT POLITICAL LETTER from BENGAL,

Dated 11th June 1812.

Par. 182. On the Consultation noted in the margin* are recorded extracts from our proceedings in the Judicial Department relating to robberies committed in the districts of Elahabad and Goruckpore, by persons who took refuge from the pursuit of justice in the neighbouring territories of his Excellency the Vizier. The Resident at Lucknow was desired to make the necessary communication to the Vizier on the subject, with a view to the apprehension of the offenders. In the instance of the robberies committed in the district of Elahabad, the perpetrators were subjects of the Vizier. The daring robbery in Goruckpore was perpetrated by subjects of the British Government who derived the means of prosecuting their depredations from the asylum afforded them in the Vizier's territories.

183. The Magistrate of Elahabad has had repeated occasion to complain of the conduct of some of the Vizier's subjects in committing depredations in the district under his charge; and the Resident at Lucknow, in his reply to the instructions of Government, stated that he had made frequent and urgent remonstrances on his part to the Vizier, on the subject of the complaints of the Magistrate of Elahabad.

184. We have now the honour to report to your Honourable Court the renewal of the more serious depredations of the notorious rebel and marauder, Budjha Sing, in the Company's provinces bordering on the dominions of his Excellency the Vizier, and the decisive measures which we have deemed it our duty to adopt, in order to prevail on the Vizier cordially to co-operate in the endeavours of the British Government, directed to the apprehension or extermination of Budjha Sing and his banditti.

185. In consequence of the intelligence contained in the extract from our proceedings in the Military Department, recorded as per margin,† of the aid afforded to the depredations of Budjha Sing by certain Zemindars within the territories of the Vizier, the Resident at Lucknow was instructed, on the 24th of April last, to suggest to the Vizier, and urge his Excellency to adopt such measures as, in the Resident's judgment, might appear calculated to put a stop to the evident collusion of his Excellency's officers and Zemindars with Budjha Sing.

186. Shortly after the despatch of those instructions to the Resident, we received from him a letter recorded on the annexed date,‡ enclosing copies of his correspondence relative to the proceedings of the detachments which were employed employed in pursuit of the rebel, Budjha Sing, and the protection and support which he derived from the Vizier's landholders in the district of Mohumdie. The Resident also requested the instructions of Government regarding a suggestion contained in Lieutenant-Colonel Adams's address to him of the 12th April, of employing a party of Captain Skinner's irregular horse, to be united with the detachment of infantry stationed at Seetapore, in the protection of the frontier of Bareilly and the pursuit of the rebel.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
11 June 1812.

187. Your Honourable Court will concur in our regret, that the zealous endeavours of Major Baillie to persuade the Vizier to adopt those measures with regard to his landholders which could alone counteract the inducement they have to abet the depredations of Budjha Sing, and to aid him in eluding the pursuit of our troops, have hitherto been rendered unavailing by the untoward disposition of his Excellency's mind.

188. It has ever been a subject of surprise and of just complaint on the part of the British Government, that the Vizier should so pertinaciously refuse his consent to the measure of authorizing the British troops stationed in the Ceded Provinces to enter his territories in pursuit of marauders, who are enabled to commit depredations in the former by the asylum which they find in the latter.

189. Although it must be admitted as a general proposition, and was indeed distinctly declared to Colonel Collins, the late Resident at Lucknow, under date the 12th August 1805, that consistently with the provisions of treaty, the British Government cannot authorize the entrance of its troops into the Vizier's dominions in pursuit of rebels and fugitives against his Excellency's consent, a point in confirmation of which, also, your Honourable Court was pleased to transmit to this Government decisive orders, yet the grounds of that proposition become in our judgment essentially changed, and the proposition itself must consequently be deemed susceptible of modification, if, as in the case under notice, the most irrefragable proof exists of encouragement, assistance, and protection being afforded to marauders infesting the British territories by the Vizier's officers or landholders, and if, with a knowledge of this fact, his Excellency neglects or refuses to adopt the measures necessary to remedy the abuse.

190. This view of the obligation of the article in question we communicated to the Resident, and observed that the authority of the Vizier within his reserved dominions could not be more absolute than that of the ruler of a State unconnected with the British Government, or any other power, by the obligations of defensive alliance; yet that, according to the principle of public law, no doubt could exist of our right to insist upon any adjoining State's consent to such measures, as after long forbearance and experience had been proved to afford the only efficient means of protecting our own territory, either from the rebellious invasion or the predatory incursions of persons who were enabled to commit those offences against us, by the refuge habitually found within the neighbouring frontier; and if the evils of which the remedy was sought by us were sufficiently great to merit a full exercise of our right, we should be warranted, we observed, by the same principles, in considering a pertinacious refusal on the part of the other Sovereign, amounting in its effect to a protection of the offenders, not merely from punishment but in the continued molestation of our country, as a just cause of war, much more as affording a justifiable motive for passing the boundary in pursuit of a public enemy, for the purpose of doing ourselves and our people the justice which had been refused to amicable and frequent representations.

191. The Resident, however, was desired not to consider these observations as authorizing the actual exercise of that right, but as eventually conducive to the accomplishment of the arrangement suggested by Lieutenant-Colonel Adams, as well as intended to support the efficacy of the Resident's endeavours, and persuade the Vizier to exert his authority with respect to the landholders of Mohumdie, in the manner he had hitherto ineffectually proposed to him.

192. The Resident, we observed, would infer from this intimation, that we concurred in the expediency of Lieutenant-Colonel Adams' suggestion; but as the practicability of employing a detachment of Captain Skinner's irregular horse in the manner proposed was doubtful, their services being in general so much required within the Company's territories, we informed the Resident that a reference on the subject would be made to the Resident at Delhi, and we accordingly instructed Mr. Metcalfe to ascertain, and report directly to the Resident at Lucknow as well as to Government, whether the services of a party of Captain Skinner's horse employed in Hurriana could be spared for the purpose suggested by Lieutenant-Colonel Adams, and in the event of its being so disposable, to order its immediate march to Bareilly, directing the Risāla-dār of the party to place himself under the orders of the commanding-officer at that station, to be advanced to Seetapore on Major Baillie's requisition.

193. We stated our opinion to the Resident at Lucknow, that the Vizier could not, as apprehended by the Resident, object to the measure of stationing this or any other additional force within his territories, and that our right to adopt it might be maintained, on the ground that the number and description of the British troops to be stationed within his territories is not limited by treaty. That in a spirit of cavil, indeed, his Excellency might possibly allege, that as the number of our troops so to be employed was intended to be regulated by the arrangements necessary for the protection and tranquillity of his dominions, we were not entitled to augment it for any other purpose; but that we were unwilling to believe that his Excellency would resort to that argument, which would afford the strongest reason to impute to him a settled resolution to withhold his co-operation in any measures directed to the object of effecting the destruction of the marauder Budjha Sing. If, however, on that or any other ground, the Vizier should oppose the arrangement, the Resident was authorized to maintain the absolute right of the British Government to carry it into effect, not only on the specific ground above stated, but if necessary on the more general foundation of the provisional right, which must be deemed à fortiori to admit the adoption of the arrangement in question.

194. On the day on which those instructions were dispatched to the Resident we received from him the letter recorded on the annexed date,* transmitting his further correspondence with his Excellency the Vizier relative to Budjha Sing, from which we learned the satisfactory intelligence of the Vizier having at length been so far induced to comply with the Resident's recommendation, as to direct the seizure and confinement of some of the Zemindars of Mohumdie who had been proved to have sheltered the marauders.

195. On this occasion we desired the Resident to signify to his Excellency our satisfaction at this apparent disposition on the part of his Excellency to fulfil the positive obligation of contributing, by the exertion of his authority, to the success of the measures in progress for the apprehension of Budjha Sing.

196. We likewise conveyed to Major Baillie our high approbation of the efforts which he had employed to effect this beneficial change in his Excellency's disposition.

197. A subsequent despatch from the Resident, recorded as per margin, notifies the Vizier's having authorized the apprehension of several other Zemindars, subjects of his Excellency, who had been proved to have assisted Budjha Sing.

198. Being desirous of bringing the correspondence relative to Budjha Sing under the review of your Honourable Court in a connected series, we have abstained from noticing some despatches of importance intermediately received from the Resident at Lucknow which have occupied our deliberations.

199. We allude to the three letters, with their enclosures, recorded on the annexed date,† in which the Resident has communicated the correspondence which had taken place between the Vizier and the Resident, in consequence of the oppressive conduct of his Highness towards the Bhow Begum and Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, violating, with respect to the former, the obligations of an engagement concluded by his Excellency the late Governor-General Lord Teignmouth mouth in 1798, by an article of which the Vizier engaged to preserve certain rights and privileges to the Bhow Begum.

200. By that article the superintendence and management of the khoord muhl (the females of the family of the late Nawaub Shooja-ood-Dowlah) at Fyzabad were vested in the Bhow Begum, and the maintenance of its establishment provided for by a grant of territory to her Highness, under the guarantee of the British Government.

201. Among the correspondence is a translation of a letter from her Highness the Bhow Begum to the Resident, stating that the Vizier, without any previous consultation with her, had dismissed Tuhseen Alee Khan, the Nazir of the khoord muhl, from that office, which he had held for near forty years, and placed a person selected by himself in that situation. The Bhow Begum justly complained of the violation of her rights on this occasion, and claimed the interference of the Resident in her behalf.

202. In compliance with her Highness's request, the Resident addressed a letter to the Vizier, pointing out the impropriety of removing Tuhseen Alee Khan from his office without the previous consent and advice of the Begum and of the British Government, and urgently recommended his reinstatement. The Vizier, in reply, stated that he had been induced to remove Tuhseen Alee Khan from the situation of Nazir, in consequence of the complaints made against him by the ladies of the khoord muhl of his want of punctuality in the distribution of their allowances; and his Excellency denied having acted contrary to treaty in removing Tuhseen Alee Khan, on the ground that, according to the tenor of the treaty, he had full power and authority to act as he pleased in his household, being the sole heir and guardian of all his female relations.

203. To this letter the Resident returned a reply, in which he was compelled to combat and refute the assertions and arguments of his Excellency, and in particular to point out the inaccuracy of his Excellency's statement of the dissatisfaction of the ladies of the muhl against Tuhseen Alee Khan, to whom repeated and numerous acknowledgments of his extraordinary kindness towards them, during the period of thirty-eight years, had been made by the ladies of the khoord muhl, and a number of which, under the seals of the ladies, were in the Resident's possession.

204. Your Honourable Court will observe, that after the interchange of further letters, the Vizier signified his consent, if Tuhseen Alee Khan would offer any satisfactory suggestions on the subject of the future management of the muhl, and the ladies of the muhl should approve of it, to reinstate him in his office.

205. We have, on a former occasion, brought under the notice of your Honourable Court the oppression exercised by the Vizier towards his sister, Shums-oon-Nissa Begum. The correspondence to which we have adverted contains a letter from Shums-oon-Nissa Begum to the address of the Resident, expatiating on her numerous grievances, and declaring her resolution, if the Resident should evade her requisition, to quit Lucknow without any further communication to him.

206. The Resident addressed an urgent remon-trance to the Vizier in behalf of Shums-oon Nissa Begum, to which, as your Honourable Court will perceive, no satisfactory reply was returned.

207. Your Honourable Court will observe in the first* of Major Baillie's despatches on which we are treating, that Major Baillie remarks, that, in addition to the cases of their Highnesses the Bhow Begum and Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, and to others of great importance, in which the interference and remonstrances of the British Government and the Resident have been disregarded and neglected, the subordinate points of complaint against his Excellency's Government and its officers were such as in his judgment authorized and required the severe animadversion of the Government, with the view of recalling the Vizier to a due sense of his engagements, and of preserving that just and necessary degree of influence over the affairs and Government of Oude which it has ever been thought advisable to maintain.

208. The

208. The systematic opposition of his Excellency the Vizier to every representation made to him on the part of the British Government, appeared to us to require that the influence of the representative character of the Resident should be supported by a letter of remonstrance on the part of the Governor-General to the address of his Excellency, embracing not merely the primary subjects of the Resident's present despatches, but generally all depending points of negotiation between the two States.

209. The Governor-General therefore addressed a letter to the Vizier, an English copy of which is recorded on the annexed date.*

210. The points which form the subject of the Governor-General's letter have been brought under the notice of your Honourable Court in the late despatches from the Vice-President in Council and the Governor-General in Council; and although his Lordship, in his letter to his Highness, has deemed it proper to discuss at some length the various questions on which representations on the part of the British Government have been treated by his Highness with invariable neglect, we do not consider it necessary to swell this despatch, by introducing into the body of it a recapitulation of the arguments and remonstrances by which his Lordship has urged the Vizier to adopt a line of conduct more creditable to himself, and more consistent with the manifest obligations of existing treaties.

211. It will be sufficient, therefore, to state, that among the points above alluded to, the negotiations which took place during the last year on the subject of a reform of his Excellency's administration, and which formed the subject of a separate address to your Honourable Court, under date the 15th of October 1811, is the most prominent. His Excellency omitting to return any reply to the Governor-General's letter of the 28th December 1810, although near six months had elapsed since his Lordship's arrival at the Presidency, and his evident resolution to avoid, if possible, a re-agitation of that question, clearly demonstrated his Excellency's fixed disinclination to attend to the wishes and advice of this Government and to the obligations of treaty in this respect. The former of these omissions appeared to us to demand particular animadversion, and this topic has accordingly been noticed in suitable terms by his Lordship.

212. The Governor-General also referred to the right possessed by the British Government of investigating and arbitrating all such claims and demands, on the part of the Vizier and his Aumils, as the British troops may be required to support, and adverted to the letters from the Vice-President in favour of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan and Hoosein Alee Khan.

213. His Lordship also judged it necessary to enter into some detail of discussion respecting the Vizier's unwarrantable encroachments on the guaranteed rights of her Highness the Bhow Begum, with a view to demonstrate the injustice of his Excellency's proceedings, and to manifest the determination of this Government to fulfil the obligation of its guarantee on that and on every future occasion; and finally, his Lordship animadverted on the failure of every effort of remonstrance on the part of the Resident to produce even a mitigation of the distresses to which her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum is subjected by the rigour of his Excellency's measures.

214. An English copy of the Governor-General's letter was transmitted to the Resident at Lucknow, for his information and guidance. The tenor of that document, and the intimate knowledge possessed by the Resident of every subject to which it related, precluded the necessity of any other instruction beyond an intimation desiring him, as opportunity might offer and occasions require, to resume, and endeavour to bring to a satisfactory conclusion, the numerous depending questions between the two Governments, regulating his representations to the Vizier by the spirit of his Lordship's letter.

215. The letter addressed to Major Baillie on this occasion, is recorded on the Consultation above noted.†

Having perused the voluminous correspondence referred to in these paragraphs, and in your subsequent despatches‡ of the 26th August (paragraph 108) and 30th October 1810 (paragraph 79), relative to the movements and operations of the troops stationed in the dominions of his Excellency the Vizier, recently employed at his Excellency's request in the reduction of several forts belonging to his rebellious Aumils and Zemindars, we have the satisfaction to observe that except in the attack made on the fort of Praiegpore, which occasioned the loss of two gallant young officers, Lieutenants Woolley and Dixon, besides several native officers and sepoy killed and wounded, this service, as far as it has proceeded, has been accomplished without any material inconvenience.

Par. 252. In the one hundred and eighty-second and following paragraphs of our despatch of the 11th of June, we reported to your Honourable Court the communications which we had directed the Resident at Lucknow to address to the Vizier, relative to robberies committed in the districts of Elahabad and Goruckpore by persons who found a refuge from the pursuit of justice in the neighbouring territories of his Excellency the Vizier, and that the Resident had, in conformity to our orders, made frequent and urgent remonstrances on the subject to his Excellency. We now beg leave to call the attention of your Honourable Court to two despatches from Major Baillie recorded as per margin, § one enclosing translations of his correspondence with the Vizier on that subject and copies of instructions issued by him to the officer commanding the troops at Purtaubgurh for the apprehension of a marauder called Kishen Sing, the second enclosing translations of a letter from the Vizier founded on the correspondence reported in the first, and Major Baillie's answer.

253. Your Honourable Court will observe, that the Vizier, in his letter to the Resident last noticed, disputed the right of the British Government to ascertain the justice of the cause in which the services of the subsidiary troops might be required, and the Resident successfully replied to that argument.

254. Your Honourable Court will recollect, that the Governor-General, in his letter to the Vizier of the 8th of May last (an abstract of which was included in our despatch of the 11th of June), has asserted that right. We have not received the Vizier's reply to that letter, but on its receipt we shall be enabled to judge what measures it may be advisable to pursue, with a view either to the efficient exercise of the right in question, or to the more fundamental object of a reform in the system of his Excellency's administration. Major Baillie was therefore desired to continue to maintain it.

255. The

255. The Resident also very properly frustrated an attempt of the Vizier to convert the alleged necessity for the employment of the British troops at Purtaubgurh for the apprehension of the robbers infesting the district of Elahabad, into the means of placing those troops at the disposal of the Aumil for the purposes of oppressive coercion, by issuing guarded instructions on that occasion to the commanding officer at Purtaubgurh.

256. On the Consultation last noticed* are recorded two despatches from the Resident, enclosing translations of his correspondence with the Bhow Begum and the Vizier on the subject of the arrears of stipend due to the families of the Nawabs Mirza Alee Khan and Salar Jung, brothers of the Bhow Begum, and payable under an assignment on the lands formerly held by Mirza Jān, the adoptive son of Almass Alee Khan, which after having been long withheld by the Vizier had at last been discharged.

257. The following are the circumstances of the above case.

258. During the life of Almass Alee Khan and his brother, Rehmüt Alee Khan, the stipends of the families of the late Nawabs, Mirza Alee Khan and Salar Jung, were issued by the Vizier by assignments on the revenue of the districts which were farmed by those Aumils, and the same arrangement was continued while Mirza Jān, the adoptive son of Almass Alee Khan, was the farmer of the districts in question. On the removal and imprisonment of Mirza Jān, about two years ago, the stipends of some branches of those families fell into considerable arrear, and a balance of those stipends, amounting to Rupces 10,550, was still due by his Excellency the Vizier, who persisted in withholding the payment of this small sum, to the great distress of the claimants and vexation of her Highness the Bhow Begum, although he admitted that it was justly due, and recognized the title of the Resident, in conformity with ancient and established usage, to intercede in behalf of the claimants, as the near relations of the Begum.

259. The ground of the Vizier's refusal to pay the balance at the request of the Resident, was his original assignment on the Aumil who had failed to pay the amount, but who had been rendered incapable of discharging it by having been kept under close confinement and his property placed under attachment. Mirza Jān having been liberated from his confinement by the intercession of the Resident, paid the amount of the arrear, which was remitted to her Highness the Begum. Considerable delay, however, appeared likely to take place in the adjustment of the Vizier's demand on Mirza Jān.

260. We concurred entirely in the justice of the arguments which the Resident employed in his letters to the Vizier, with a view to demonstrate that his Excellency's treasury was properly responsible for the arrears of stipend due to the families of the Bhow Begum's brothers; more especially, as by retaining the person of Mirza Jān in confinement and his property under attachment, the Vizier deprived him of the means of discharging the amount, and we informed the Resident that we entirely approved his interference and exertions in the affair.

261. On the proceedings which we have last quoted are recorded letters from the Resident enclosing copies and translations of his correspondence with the Vizier; first, on the subject of a complaint of a non-commissioned officer in the Company's service of an act of outrage committed against his brother by a Cutwal in his Excellency's service; secondly, on the subject of a complaint preferred through the British officer commanding at Byramghaut by a sepoy in the Company's service, of gross maltreatment on the part of an officer of the Vizier's government. For a detail of the circumstances of these outrages, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the documents in which they are reported.

262. It appears to us that the violent and unjust proceedings of the Cutwal were wholly unwarrantable, and we instructed the Resident to insist on the reparation reparation of the wrong which the family of the non-commissioned officer had suffered at the hands of the Cutwal.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1812.

263. The examinations of the complaint preferred by the sepoy, taken both before the Resident and the Vizier, fully established the justice of it, and the Resident was enjoined not to relax his endeavours to obtain redress.

264. In the one hundred and eighty-sixth and following paragraphs of our letter of the 11th of June, we described the instructions which we had issued on the 8th of May to the Resident at Lucknow, for the guidance of his conduct in the event of continued opposition on the part of the Vizier to the measures and arrangements suggested for the seizure or destruction of the marauder Budjha Sing.

265. The despatch from Major Baillie, recorded on the annexed date,* is in reply to those instructions. Major Baillie reported, that the Resident at Delhi had informed him that it was impracticable to detach a portion of Captain Skinner's irregular horse to aid in the pursuit of Budjha Sing (as authorized by us on the 8th of May), but that the zealous and active exertions of the detachment employed in the Vizier's district of Mohumdie had superseded the necessity of that measure. The Resident at the same time stated the satisfactory intelligence, that at a conference which he had with the Vizier, he had obtained the consent of his Excellency to the unconditional reappointment of Tuhseen Alee Khan to the office of Nazir of the khoord muhl, as well as his Excellency's cheerful acquiescence in some important measures recommended by the Resident with reference to Budjha Sing, and the satisfactory adjustment of a few other subordinate points on which they had long differed in opinion, but that the remaining points of discussion between the two Governments remained in their former state.

266. On the consultation noted in the margin† is recorded an extract from our proceedings in the Judicial Department, relative to a robbery committed in the month of March last in the district of Sarun by some banditti who found protection in the Vizier's district of Baraitch. We deemed it proper to transmit a copy of that extract to the Resident at Lucknow, with directions strongly to urge to the Vizier the expediency of adopting effectual measures for the apprehension and punishment of the banditti, especially of their chiefs, and of instituting a proper enquiry into the conduct of the Zemindars by whom the marauders in question were stated to be protected.

267. Major Baillie prepared a translation of the documents above-noticed for the consideration of the Vizier, and in his letter reporting his proceedings‡ suggested the expediency of detaching a portion of the Honourable Company's troops from Secrota to Atrawla and Bulrampore, and seizing the persons of such marauders as might be found to reside in those districts, without any reference to the Vizier or to the local authority of the Aumil, as was done on a recent occasion, at the suggestion of the Magistrate of Elahabad, in the district of Purtaubgurh.

268. On the subject of this suggestion, we addressed to the Resident the following remarks :

269. We observed, that his suggestion was expressed in terms which created a doubt in our mind with respect to the exact nature of it, as the measures actually adopted in the district of Purtaubgurh, to which Major Baillie referred as the measures which he proposed to be authorized on the occasion under notice did not seem to correspond with the description contained in his letter before us. Major Baillie proposed, that the British troops should be authorized to proceed to Atrawla and Bulrampore, and seize the persons of such marauders as might be found to reside in those districts, without reference to the Vizier or to the local authority of the Aumil: but in the case to which he referred, the orders issued by him to the commanding-officer at Purtaubgurh, directing him him "on receiving information of Kishore Sing's concealment, either from the "Magistrate of the district of Elahabad or from the Vizier's Aumil of Pur-taubgurh, to take the necessary measures for the apprehension of that "marauder," were communicated to the Vizier previously to their being dispatched.

270. The mode of proceeding, therefore, adopted on that occasion, could not be said to have been adopted without any reference to the Vizier. If, however, Major Baillie's proposition was to be understood in a more limited sense, that is to say, if he intended as in the former case previously to apprise his Excellency of the nature of the orders to be issued and to obtain his consent, and if by the expression "reference to the Vizier or his Aumil," he merely meant that after obtaining his Excellency's general concurrence in the proposed measure the troops should be at liberty to proceed to the apprehension of the marauders on receiving intelligence of their concealment, without any additional reference or communication to the Vizier, or the Aumil, we apprized the Resident no objection existed to that mode of proceeding, because the only objection would arise from the want of the Vizier's consent, which was not supposed in the latter case.

271. The foregoing instructions were issued to the Resident on the 17th August; but a further consideration of the proposition contained in his despatch last noticed, suggested to us the expediency of endeavouring to obtain the Vizier's consent to a modified employment of the British troops stationed within his dominions, for the apprehension of robbers and criminals who found a refuge and asylum therein from the pursuit of justice. On the 21st August, therefore, we directed the Chief Secretary to address a letter to the Resident, which is recorded as per margin.*

272. It was stated to Major Baillie, that adverting to the interest which, under the existing system of the Vizier's Government, his Aumils and Zemindars had, in conniving at the depredations and protecting the persons of professional robbers, a material advantage would be gained by our possessing the liberty of employing our troops, in certain cases, for the apprehension of such criminals, without previous reference to the Vizier or to the officers of the district in which they might be concealed. The Resident was informed, that the cases in which this employment of our troops was alone contemplated were, when the commanding-officer might receive authentic intelligence that any of the marauders whose seizure was desired were concealed at some place within the distance of a rapid march from the station of the troops, and might have reason to believe that by the delay of a reference to the Vizier, or of application to the Aumil or Zemindar of the district, or even of the latter's knowledge that such movement was intended, the opportunity of effecting the seizure would be lost, or would be defeated.

273. Strong objections, however, oppose the measure of authorizing such a system of proceeding without the Vizier's consent; for, although it is true, that without such consent that system might be rendered necessary, and might finally be justified by provocations even of a negative kind, such as the refusal or the neglect of the Vizier to afford the assistance which we have a right to require against rebels and plunderers who take shelter in his territories, yet to redress ourselves at our own hands in the manner above stated, would be a measure of at least modified hostility, and would throw a degree of perplexity upon the nature of our relations with Oude, in regard to the change which such a state of affairs might be supposed to operate upon them, as might create inconvenience and embarrassment of various kinds: besides, it would be desirable to avoid any act which would afford to the Vizier even a plausible ground for complaining of a breach of treaty, as the movement of troops, and any operation executed by them without reference to him, for purposes of our own, would probably do.

274. For these reasons, we informed the Resident that we were not prepared to authorize the employment of our troops in the manner suggested by him, without a reference to the Vizier, and without a general, if not a specific consent sent on his part. We therefore desired the Resident to request, and endeavour to obtain, the Vizier's consent to such orders for the sudden march of detachments, in the cases only of the emergencies we had described, being issued to the officers in command at the frontier stations within his Excellency's dominions, and to make the application for this general sanction, without specifying any particular case for which that power might be desired, but upon the general and well-established ground, that such occasions for the immediate employment of troops might and actually do arise, and that without the power requested, it must occasionally happen that the object which might otherwise be obtained must be defeated.

275. Lastly, we observed to the Resident, that as the Vizier had repeatedly and solemnly declared his solicitude for the seizure of the marauders who infest our territories, by means of the refuge which they found in his own, he could not, consistently with these declarations, withhold his consent to the proposed measure, unless he could disprove the exigency on which the application was founded, or unless he should maintain the probability of our availing ourselves of the solicited privilege, in a manner to disturb the tranquillity of his country and to subvert the authority of his Government in the districts where that privilege might be exercised, a supposition which, under the specified circumstances and restrictions, he would not be warranted to assume, and which the Resident would of course be prepared to combat.

276. The despatch from the Resident recorded on the Consultations noted in the margin,* contains copies of his correspondence with the Magistrate of Elahabad on the subject of the latter's suggestion, that a small detachment from the troops at Purtaubgurh should be stationed in the principal haunts of the marauders who have recently infested the frontier of the district of Elahabad.

277. Concurring entirely in the Resident's opinion of the expediency of the measure suggested by Mr. Fortescue, we directed the Resident to point out to the Vizier the advantages to be expected from that measure, and to request his Excellency's consent to its adoption.

278. We remarked to Major Baillie the similarity of this arrangement to that which, in our instructions of the 21st of August, he had been directed to submit for the sanction of the Vizier, and observed, that the latter would include the former, excepting so far as related to the previous march of a detachment to the vicinity of the haunts of the marauders for the purpose of being in readiness to effect the seizure of them. Although, therefore, the general permission suggested in the former instructions should have been obtained on the Resident's receipt of our reply to his despatch before us, we still stated the necessity of his obtaining the Vizier's specific sanction to the arrangement proposed in the district of Purtaubgurh.

279. Your Honourable Court will find recorded on the annexed date† a despatch from the Resident, in continuation of his letter referred to in the two hundred and sixty-seventh paragraph of this address, relative to the banditti who find refuge in the province of Baraitch, and enclosing copies and translations of the Vizier's reply to his communication on that subject, with further correspondence which had taken place with his Excellency connected with it.

280. The Vizier having, at the recommendation of the Resident, consented to adopt, with regard to the robbers of Baraitch, the same measures that he had been persuaded to adopt with regard to Budjha Sing, Major Baillie stated that the suggestion contained in his former despatch was superseded, and that if a similar course of proceeding were pursued with respect to the marauders who had lately infested the district of Elahabad, and who found refuge in that of Purtaubgurh, it might equally supersede the necessity of the measure proposed by the Magistrate of the former district, and referred for the orders of Government, as noticed in the two hundred and seventy-second paragraph of this despatch.

281. It

281. It was satisfactory to us to learn, that the Vizier had been prevailed upon to issue the proclamation and orders proposed by Major Baillie (translations of which are enclosed in his despatch); and we signified our concurrence in his opinion of the expediency of issuing the same in the district of Purtaubgurh, with a view to the apprehension of the marauders who had been in the habit of infesting the district of Elahabad, and desired him to make the necessary application to the Vizier on the subject. We left it to the discretion of the Resident to decide whether or not the adoption of these measures should supersede the proposition of the Magistrate of Elahabad above described.

282. We stated, however, to Major Baillie, that it did not appear to us that the more general arrangement suggested in our instructions of the 21st August need be suspended, in consequence of the measures which the Vizier had consented to adopt in the district of Baraitch, although Major Baillie was at liberty to suspend the prescribed proposition if he should judge it expedient so to do, submitting the grounds of his determination for our consideration.

283. At our last meeting of Council on the 2d instant, a despatch from the Resident was laid before us, in reply to our instructions of the 21st and 28th August, referred to in the preceding paragraphs; from which it appears that, at a personal conference with the Vizier on the 12th ultimo, the Resident pointed out to his Excellency the essential benefits to be derived by both States from the arrangement suggested by us, and described in a letter from the Resident to the Vizier, the draft of which the Resident submitted to the Vizier on that occasion. The Vizier desired that the letter might be sent to him immediately, and promised to pay due attention to its contents, and to the further remarks on the subject of it which the Resident advanced at the conference.

284. Major Baillie stated it as his opinion, that his Excellency would readily concur in the measure of stationing a portion of our troops on the frontier of the district of Purtaubgurh, but that his Excellency would make many objections to the other part of the proposed arrangement, viz a general licence to the commanding-officer of our troops for the seizure of marauders in his dominions, without previous application, on every occasion, to himself.

285. In the two hundred and fifth and two hundred and sixth paragraphs of our letter of the 11th June, we adverted to the oppression exercised by the Vizier over his sister-in-law, Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, and to the resolution expressed by the Begum to quit Lucknow and retire to her jagier in the event of her not obtaining redress.

286. The despatch from the Resident recorded on the annexed date,* reports the actual retreat of the Begum to her jagier, and her declared intention of remaining there but for a short time, and then proceeding to the Presidency, or to some intermediate station in the Honourable Company's territories where her residence may hereafter be fixed.

287. The Resident stated, that the Vizier did not appear to be much concerned at the Begum's departure from Lucknow, probably from a consciousness that his own ungenerous conduct was the only original inducement to that measure; and observed, that a timely change of conduct on the part of the Vizier, in compliance with the earnest and repeated advice of the British Government and its representative, would have sufficed to prevent her Highness from executing her design. The Resident added a suggestion, that the Begum Shums-oon-Nissa, might be permitted to take up her residence in one of the principal cities in the Company's dominions.

288. We intimated to Major Baillie, that if, as appeared to be the case, all hope of a reconciliation between the Vizier and the Begum were extinguished, we should concur in his suggestion that her Highness should be permitted to reside at some one of the cities in the Company's territories, and stated our opinion that Patna would be the most convenient. Under that arrangement, it would remain to make the necessary arrangements for her subsistence, which we were were of course desirous to render, as far as might be practicable, agréable to her wishes.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 Oct. 1812.

289. In the year 1802, the late Resident at Lucknow, Colonel Scott, transmitted an earnest application from the Begum for permission to proceed to Kerbullaw; and she at that time proposed, that the collections from her jagier should be made from her own servants, subject to the authority and guidance, or in other words under the guarantee of the British Government, and that after paying such salaries as she should appoint, the balance should be remitted to her monthly or annually through our officers. The Begum also proposed, that the provisions provided for her use from the Vizier's kitchen should be commuted for an annual payment in money, and the amount be remitted to her.

290. The whole of the Begum's requests were complied with, but her relinquishment of her design precluded the agitation of the question with the Vizier.

291. A similar arrangement, on the present occasion, appeared to us to be unobjectionable: but in communicating this opinion to the Resident, we observed that the consent of the Vizier would be necessary, and that his Excellency would probably be disinclined to admit the intervention of the proposed guarantee.

292. It occurred to us, however, a preferable arrangement would be to commute the jagier for a stipend equal to its produce, the Vizier paying the amount regularly into the Resident's treasury, and the collector of the station at which the Begum might reside paying the same to her by fixed instalments from his. To this arrangement the Begum might object; but we observed to the Resident, that he would not perhaps find it difficult to overcome her objections. We authorized the Resident, however, to adjust the mode of providing for the Begum's subsistence in either way, according to his discretion, expressing our preference of the second suggested arrangement.

293. It being in our judgment by no means advisable, nor under the resolution adopted for any purpose necessary, that the Begum should proceed, as she appeared to have intended, to the Presidency, we desired the Resident, if she should still entertain that design, to dissuade her from carrying it into effect.

Political Letter

Para. 288. In the two hundred and eighty-third paragraph of our address to your Honourable Court of the 15th of October last, we referred to a despatch from the Resident at Lucknow on the subject of the arrangement which we had directed him to propose to the Vizier for the suppression of gang-robbery on our frontier districts, by banditti who found refuge within his Excellency's dominions.

289. On the Consultations of the date inserted in the margin,* your Honourable Court will find a continuation of the subject of the despatch above referred to, enclosing copies and translations of a further correspondence with the Vizier relating to the mode which had been suggested to his Excellency of employing detachments of the British troops stationed in his Excellency's country for the apprehension of those banditti, and reporting the seizure of four of the principal offenders who were secreted in the district of Baraitch, and of the apprehension of Lootf Alee Khan, the Zemindar of Atrowla, the chief protector and abettor of the marauders.

290. We signified to the Resident our entire approbation of the answer which he returned to the Vizier's futile objections and discontented remarks contained in his letter to the Resident, the tenor of some of which appeared to call for some more special notice on our part. We observed, that the Vizier, in objecting to the employment of our troops for the apprehension of robbers and banditti, who acquire the means of committing depredation and murder within the British territories by the asylum afforded to them in his Excellency's country, had entirely lost sight of the positive obligation imposed on his Government, and of his disinclination or inability to fulfil that obligation. The measure in question, it was remarked, was proposed solely in consequence of the experienced inefficacy of reiterated applications for the due exertion of his Excellency's authority in effecting the apprehension or expulsion of the marauders; and the observations contained in the Secretary's letter of 8th May last, of which the substance is stated in the one hundred and eighty-eighth and following paragraphs of our despatch from this department of 11th June 1812, had demonstrated, that in applying for his Excellency's consent to the arrangement described in the Secretary's letter of 11th August following, this Government had fallen far short of the exercise of its undoubted rights. It was, moreover, we observed, a subject of just offence to the British Government, that the Vizier had withheld his consent, not on the ground of a real or even professed resolution to supersede the necessity of the proposed arrangement, by the due exertion of his authority over his own officers, but on the plea, or rather the unfounded imputation, of a declared design on our part to refuse the aid of our troops in the execution of the services prescribed by the stipulations of existing engagements, and of our declining to employ a military force for the coercion of debtors and defaulters, which formed no part of the obligations imposed on the British Government by those engagements.

291. We accordingly deemed it necessary to desire the Resident to explain to the Vizier the principles described in the Secretary's letter of the 8th May last above referred to, intimating to his Excellency, at the same time, that in the event of his Excellency's continuing to manifest his aversion to concur in the prosecution of effectual measures for the redress of the grievous evils of which we had so long and so justly complained, the British Government would be compelled to pursue the steps best calculated for the attainment of that object, without reference to his Excellency's authority. Our instructions to the Resident of 23d October last, of which the substance has now been stated, will be found recorded as per margin.*

292. On the proceedings of the annexed date† are recorded two despatches from the Resident, in continuation of the subject of the arrangement above adverted to, for the apprehension of the banditti from the Vizier's country, and for the tranquillity of the Company's frontier in the district of Elahabad, and reporting the seizure of one of the principal marauders. In the latter of these two despatches the Resident stated that he had made the communication to the Vizier prescribed by our instructions of 23d October, and expressed his belief that it had made a due impression on his Excellency's mind, and would be attended with the most beneficial effects.

293. In a subsequent despatch, recorded as per margin,‡ the Resident transmitted a copy and translation of a letter from the Vizier, in reply to the communications above adverted to, respecting the mode of employing detachments of our troops in his Excellency's territory, and reported the subterfuges of his Excellency with a view to prevent the due effect of the measures which had been adopted. On this occasion the Resident observed, that his disappointment in the hope of apprehending a noted marauder and his associates, through the exertions of his Excellency's Aumils, had been aggravated in a peculiar degree by the tenor of his Excellency's reply to the communications which had been made by him to his Excellency of our orders, in which his Excellency had manifested a continued disposition to oppose the just and necessary arrangement proposed, under under the flimsy disguise of a declared solicitude, combined with an ineffectual proposition for the accomplishment of the object in view, by means which had been repeatedly tried and uniformly proved unavailing.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 June 1813.

294. On a perusal of the Vizier's letter to Major Baillie, above adverted to, your Honourable Court will observe, that the conditions which the Vizier thought proper to annex to his consent for the employment of our troops stationed in his territory for the service in question, demonstrate either the absence of any cordial desire on his Excellency's part to co-operate with the British Government in repressing so great an evil and depriving the offenders of the shelter and support which they find in his territories, or some unwarranted and offensive suspicion and jealousy respecting the object which this Government might have in view in the proposed plan. The almost invariable failure of every attempt to secure offenders in which his Excellency's officers have had any share, left no room to hope that they could be more successful in future; and in insisting on a mode of proceeding, of the inefficacy of which experience had afforded the strongest proof, it will be obvious to your Honourable Court that his Excellency's conduct could be ascribed to no motive consistent with friendship or sincerity.

295. Under a deliberate conviction, therefore, of the truth of this proposition, we considered it to be our duty, after one more attempt to obtain his Excellency's co-operation, to resort to the only means which remained to secure the territory and subjects of the Honourable Company from the evils to which they continued to be exposed by the weakness, treachery, and corruption of the Vizier's officers, namely, by the employment of the troops stationed within his Excellency's dominions, as often as occasions for employing them on this species of service should arise, without reference to his Excellency's authority.

296. We accordingly informed the Resident* of our resolution to authorize the officers commanding posts and detachments in Oude, on the receipt of an application either from Major Baillie or from the Magistrates of the neighbouring districts, accompanied by certain information of the hiding-places of public offenders, to detach the troops under their command for the apprehension of the persons pointed out, without any communication with the officers of the local Government. It was judged proper, however, to limit this authority to cases in which the information should be precise and authentic, as any such movements of the troops on uncertain grounds would afford some countenance to those objections, raised by the Vizier, which were so entirely destitute of force and plausibility.

297. With the limitation above specified, we desired the Resident to furnish the commanding-officers with authority and instructions to the foregoing effect, and to make the necessary communication to the Magistrates of the adjoining districts in the Company's territory.

298. As it was on all accounts, however, desirable that the measure which we had now determined on should be taken in concert with the Vizier, we intimated to the Resident that it would be proper for him, previously to issuing the instructions in question, to apprise his Excellency of the orders which he had received, and to make another attempt to obtain his assent to the arrangement, and his cordial co-operation in carrying it into effect. On this occasion we suggested to the Resident the propriety of recalling the attention of his Excellency to the former representations which had been conveyed to him, of the moderation which we had observed in the exercise of our unquestionable rights, which not only entitled us to employ the force within his country for the apprehension of robbers, but under the many ineffectual applications to his Excellency for that purpose, to march troops across the frontier in order to effect it. We furnished the Resident with another argument, not inappropriate to the present purpose, namely, the contrast between his Excellency's conduct and that of other States in.

in alliance or friendship with us, on similar occasions; and we particularly alluded to the cordial and effectual co-operation afforded by the Government of the Nizam, for the purpose of seizing or destroying marauders who plunder our territory and find refuge in the dominions of his Highness. The recent proceedings of Scindiah's Government, also, in the apprehension of the banditti who attacked Mr. Halhed, as will be noticed more particularly in a subsequent part of this despatch, afforded another subject of representation to the Vizier, whose much more intimate connection and intercourse with the British Government, we observed, would naturally have led to the expectation of a very different result of any comparison between his conduct and that of other princes.

299. If his Excellency should continue to refuse or evade compliance with our just expectations, we instructed the Resident to proceed, without further delay, to carry into effect the orders which he had received.

300. On the Consultations of the annexed date is recorded* a despatch from the Resident in reply to our instructions of the 29th January, above referred to, reporting the successful result of his efforts to obtain the acquiescence of the Vizier in the indispensable measure of authorizing the employment of British troops, on the requisition of the Magistrates of contiguous districts, for the seizure of public offenders.

301. Tardy and reluctant as the Vizier's consent has been, it has afforded us satisfaction, that the measure has been effected in apparent concurrence with his Excellency, instead of being promulgated as the act of this Government, independently of the authority of the Vizier, thus exhibiting to the public a marked disagreement between the British Government and his Excellency on a question of primary importance.

302. With respect to the principal condition annexed by his Excellency to his concurrence in the arrangement, namely, that he should be previously furnished by the Magistrate of the contiguous districts, through the Resident at his Court, with a general list of the delinquents who are supposed to have found refuge in his territory, and whose apprehension may hereafter become the subject of a requisition for the employment of our troops, on the place of their concealment being ascertained, your Honourable Court will observe, that the condition in question is not likely to affect the efficacy of the measures to be pursued.

303. Thus has one of the most vexatious and embarrassing of the subjects of contention between this Government and his Excellency the Vizier been removed; and to the judgment, spirit, and firmness with which the Resident executed our instructions, is to be attributed the satisfactory accomplishment of this most desirable arrangement.

304. For the detail of the instructions issued by the Resident to the commanding officers of the troops, and the communications to the Magistrates in consequence of the conclusion of the arrangement above described, the tenor of which has been entirely approved by us, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the enclosures in the Resident's despatch already noticed.†

305. On the proceedings of the annexed date‡ is recorded a despatch from the Resident in continuation of the subject of his despatch last adverted to, transmitting copies of letters from the Magistrate of Elahabad and the commanding-officers of the troops at Sultanpore and Purtaubgurh, in reply to his communications and instructions noticed in the preceding paragraph. The circumstances stated in one of those letters (Colonel Frith's), of the deplorable state of the wretched inhabitants of some villages in one of the Vizier's districts, as reported by the officer who had been detached there for the apprehension of some offenders, although neither new nor surprising, the Resident remarks, and such such as have been frequently submitted by him to the Vizier in the course of his correspondence on the subject of reform, exhibit such a picture of the misery and oppression which prevail in his Excellency's country, as to afford a striking proof of the manifest justice and necessity of the measures which we have so urgently recommended to the Vizier for the improvement of the administration of his dominions, and which will form the subject of a separate* despatch to your Honourable Court from this department.

306. The despatch from the Resident recorded on the proceedings of the 26th ultimo* contains the report of the conference which the Resident held with the Vizier previously to obtaining his Excellency's consent to the arrangement for the employment of our troops in the apprehension of banditti in his Excellency's territories, but was not received until after the despatch of our instructions of the 29th January, although the general tenor and result is stated in the Resident's previous despatches. We beg leave to attract the particular attention of your Honourable Court to that despatch, as exhibiting in the amplest manner the unhappy disposition of his Excellency's mind, the character and grounds of his resistance to every proposal, the most simple, unobjectionable, and salutary, which this Government may have occasion to suggest to him, and the extraordinary difficulties which oppose the successful conduct of the duties of the British representative at his Excellency's Court. We have no doubt that the perusal of that document, which embraces the discussion of a variety of arguments with his Excellency on the subject of the negotiation in question, will impress your Honourable Court with a high sense of the address and ability with which the conference was conducted on the part of Major Baillic.

311. On the proceedings of the date noted in the margin† is recorded a despatch from Major Baillic, reporting his proceedings relative to a person named Hyder Bukhsh, a dependant of the late Almass Alee Khan and a native of Corah in the Ceded Provinces, who had for a considerable term of years during the life of Almass held an office under that person's authority in the service of the Vizier. His Excellency now objected to his departing from Lucknow according to his intention, charging him with having embezzled a part of Almass's wealth, which, on that person's death, ought to have become the property of the Vizier.

312. The Resident, aware that this statement was groundless, the Vizier having, through the agency of the Resident, given an acquittance in full to Hyder Bukhsh in common with all Almass's servants, and believing that Hyder Bukhsh's detention had no other object than to gratify the caprice and tyranny of the Vizier, and being of opinion that, as a dependant of Almass, Hyder Bukhsh was entitled to the protection of the British Government, the Resident warmly espoused his cause, and finding the Vizier determined to prevent him from leaving Lucknow, Major Baillic, after several ineffectual attempts to obtain his consent, resolved to sanction the departure of Hyder Bukhsh of his own authority, and to afford him the protection of an escort of British sepoys, to prevent him from being molested by any of his Excellency's officers in the case of their attempting to detain him, and of his Excellency's persisting in his refusal to grant a passport to Hyder Bukhsh, corresponding with that which he had previously obtained under the seal of the Governor-General, to proceed to Calcutta.

313. For a detailed statement of the grounds on which the Resident conceived that he was justified in adopting the resolution above stated, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the Resident's despatch referred to in the preceding paragraph. It appears by a letter from the Resident recorded as per margin,‡ that his Excellency finally consented to the departure of Hyder Bukhsh in the manner described in that despatch. We shall have the honour of stating our sentiments on this transaction to your Honourable Court in a subsequent part of this address, the affair in question being connected with the consideration ation of a subject which we shall now proceed to bring under the notice of your Honourable Court.

314. On the proceedings noted in the margin* is recorded a letter from the Resident, enclosing the translation of one addressed by his Excellency the Vizier to the Governor-General, exhibiting a formal charge against the Resident of intemperate and disrespectful language and conduct towards his Excellency, concluding by the expression of his Excellency's desire to proceed on his long-talked-of pilgrimage. The Resident accompanied the transmission of that extraordinary document with some remarks on the subject of it, and with the translation of a statement which he addressed and submitted to the Vizier on the receipt of his Excellency's letter to the Governor-General.

315. The Resident prefaced his observations on the charges exhibited against him, by stating that it could not be a matter of surprise that the nature of the negotiations and discussions which had arisen at the Court of Lucknow during the last two years should have excited the resentment of the Vizier against the immediate organ of communication with his Excellency, and the agent for the accomplishment of our just views; yet that a formal and serious complaint, of the nature of that which was now brought forward, was as unexpected on his part as the object of his Excellency's letter, and the principal circumstances which were stated in it, would probably appear to us to be evasive and destitute of solid foundation.

316. In the statement addressed to the Vizier, for which we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the proceedings noted in the margin,† Major Baillie has adverted specifically to every point stated in the Vizier's letter to the Governor-General; and as it appears to us, with one exception, successfully vindicated himself from the charge alleged against him by his Excellency. Major Baillie stated the purpose of presenting the statement to the Vizier to be to enable him to reply to it, if the contents should suggest to him an answer to what he had stated in refutation of his Excellency's accusation.

317. A few days after the receipt of the Resident's despatch above adverted to,‡ we received a further despatch in continuation of the first, transmitting a translation of a letter which he had received from the Vizier in answer to the statement submitted by him to his Excellency, and of his further reply to that letter. On this occasion the Resident stated that it had been his original intention to abstain from further correspondence with the Vizier on the subject of his letter to the Governor-General, and after submitting a copy of the Vizier's answer to his statement, with such remarks as the tenor might have suggested to him, for our decision, to await the communication of that decision to his Excellency directly, or to himself, before he should address him again on any subject whatever, unless it were of a nature so urgent as could not with propriety be postponed until he should receive our instructions. Such an urgency, the Resident stated, had in his opinion actually arisen, with reference to the general tenor and the manner of the Vizier's letter to his address, and particularly to some of the doctrines laid down in that letter, which seemed to the Resident's judgment so novel and extraordinary, that he could not, consistently with his sense of duty, refrain from submitting to his Excellency his sentiments on the nature of the degradation which he had thus attempted to impose on the high official station of the representative of the British Government at his Excellency's Court.

318. Your Honourable Court will observe, on a perusal of the Resident's despatch last adverted to, which contains a copy of the answer which the Resident had returned to the Vizier's letter, that the circumstance of degradation, to which the Resident alluded, was the exceptionable manner of writing which the Resident stated that the Vizier began to adopt in the latter years of the Residency of the late Colonel Scott, and had gradually brought to a pitch, in the Resident's judgment, highly offensive. After stating the causes and motives of the omission, sion, on the part of his predecessors and also of himself, to notice the conduct of the Vizier in this respect at an earlier period, which had thus afforded an opportunity to the Vizier, not only to persist in and to aggravate his own exceptionable style, but to be the first to complain, however groundlessly, of a want of respect on the part of the Resident, Major Baillie stated his intention to transmit to the Persian Department copies of a number of letters from the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah to Mr. Ives and Mr. Lumsden, of letters from those gentlemen to the late Nawaub, with copies of a number of letters from the present Vizier to Mr. Lumsden and Colonel Scott, and from them to his Excellency; a comparison of the style and manner of which with those of his Excellency's recent letters to himself, would enable the Persian Secretary to report on the general accuracy of the Resident's remarks on that subject. On the receipt of that report, the Resident stated that it would remain for us to decide whether the present forms of correspondence adopted by his Excellency towards the British representative at his Court, and the submissive and derogatory style which his Excellency required to be continued on the part of that officer, or the less exceptionable practice of former times and of the early part of his Excellency's Government, should be resumed and established for the future.

319. The Resident having accordingly transmitted the documents* mentioned in the preceding paragraph to the Persian Secretary, that officer was directed to prepare a report on the subject, to which we shall have the honour to call the attention of your Honourable Court in the sequel.

320. In the meantime we directed the Secretary to address a letter to the Resident, containing our sentiments on the charges of disrespectful and intemperate language and conduct which his Excellency the Vizier had preferred against him, and stating our resolutions, with respect to the other subjects introduced by the Vizier in the same letter, namely, the renewal of his desire to travel.

321. We shall briefly state our sentiments in this place regarding the nature of the charges exhibited against the Resident, referring your Honourable Court for the detailed expression of our sentiments to our Secretary's letter to Major Baillie, recorded on the Consultations of the annexed date.†

322. The extraordinary and groundless accusation in question appeared to us to require the decisive interference of Government, in order to vindicate the official conduct and proceedings of the Resident, to uphold and strengthen the influence of his representative character, and to counteract the evident design of the Vizier in framing the letter to the Governor-General's address, viz. to deter the Government from persevering in the prosecution of the objects which have formed the topics of the Resident's recent discussions with his Excellency, by accusations against its representative at his Excellency's Court, and by renewing the subject of his travels.

323. We were accordingly prepared to address a letter to the Vizier calculated to effect the important object above stated, when the receipt of the Resident's second despatch, noticed in the three hundred and seventeenth paragraph of this letter, enclosing the continuation of his correspondence with his Excellency, appeared to us to render it advisable to take the new and higher ground which we should be enabled to assume, by the discovery of the improper and indecorous style in which the Vizier himself had of late been accustomed to indulge in his correspondence with the British Resident.

324. It became necessary, therefore, to suspend the preparation of an answer to his Excellency's letter, under the different view which we had taken of the question, in consequence of the receipt of the Resident's last despatch, until a particular report should be received from the Persian Secretary, founded on the communications from the Resident to that officer, and on the materials which the records of his office would supply, of the several changes which had occurred in the manner of conducting the correspondence between the Vizier and and the successive Residents at his Court, the origin of the departure from those terms of respect which were formerly observed, both by the present Vizier and his predecessor, and the nature and extent of those deviations from the proper style of address. Such a report was necessary to form the foundation of a grave and official remonstrance with the Vizier on the subject; and of a requisition, in the name of the Governor-General, that his Excellency would revert to that correct and decorous mode of conducting his correspondence with the British Resident, from which he ought never to have departed.

325. We directed the Secretary, in his letter before referred to, to signify to the Resident that we did not consider it necessary to enter into a particular and minute examination of the several charges of intemperate and disrespectful language and conduct brought against him by the Vizier, which had been in general successfully refuted in his letter to the Vizier; the only exception to this remark being the case of Hyder Bukhsh, to which we have adverted in a preceding paragraph of this address.

326. With respect to Hyder Bukhsh's case we observed, that it involved the very delicate question of the degree in which our interference with the Vizier in favour of persons of that class could properly be exercised; and as our view of it differed materially from that which had been taken of it by the Resident, we entered at some length into a consideration of the whole transaction. We remarked, that we were unable to consider Hyder Bukhsh in the light of a British subject, on the ground stated by Major Baillie, merely of his having been born and possessing landed property in the Ceded Provinces, since the circumstance of his having been from his infancy resident within the dominions of the Vizier, and employed from an early period of his life in the service of the Government of Oude, combined with the relation in which he stood towards Almass Alee Khan, himself a servant of that State, must, in our judgment, be considered to supersede any claim to the personal privileges and rights of a subject of the Company, which, perhaps, he might otherwise derive from the possession of lands in a province now belonging to the Company but formerly to the Vizier, and ceded by the latter at a period long subsequent to the origin of Hyder Bukhsh's connection with Almass and the Government of Oude. After reviewing the situation in which Almass Alee Khan had stood to the Company, and the peculiar claim which he had acquired to our countenance and support, and acknowledging the disposition which we entertained to afford, to a certain extent, similar countenance and favour to his family and dependants after his death, we observed, that the whole spirit and tenor of our instructions to the Resident of 10th October 1808, by which we had authorized him to interpose in their behalf by employing the language of representation and remonstrance in order to divert the Vizier from any measures of harshness and injustice, nay (as applicable to any supposed designs to deprive the persons in question of their property) the express letter of them demonstrated the objection of the British Government to the adoption of measures of a more decided character, any right to employ which we disclaimed, as inconsistent with the acknowledged prerogatives of the Vizier and the provision of treaty.

327. As connected with the personal claim of Hyder Bukhsh to our support, we observed, in reply to an argument employed by the Resident, that Hyder Bukhsh being possessed of a passport under the signature of the Governor-General, might be considered to be placed in the condition of a person enjoying the protection of the British Government, and on that ground, that his being allowed to depart from Lucknow might be insisted on: that the Governor-General's passport could only become of authoritative force, on the entrance of the person holding it, being the subject of another State, within the Honourable Company's territories.

328. By the stipulations of the treaty of 1801, explained and confirmed by the result of the subsequent negotiation between the Marquis Wellesley and the Vizier at Lucknow, the British Government is empowered to offer its advice to the Vizier on all matters connected with the affairs of his Excellency's Government, and the Vizier is bound to act in conformity to the advice of the Government; but this reciprocal obligation, we observed to the Resident,

Resident, must be interpreted by the general spirit and objects of the alliance, and cannot be made the ground of indiscriminate interference on our part in questions between the Vizier and his subjects. We remarked to Major Baillie, that it was indeed desirable, on many grounds of practical expediency, as well as because it is consonant to the general spirit of the treaty, that we should abstain from interposing in cases of inferior importance, as the frequent occurrence of such interposition would be apt, by exciting irritation and discontent, to indispose the Vizier to listen to our remonstrances in affairs of greater magnitude, for which the weight of our authority ought to be reserved. On all these grounds, we signified to Major Baillie that we should have wished that he had not taken up the cause of Hyder Bukhsh so warmly, as his just and natural feelings of compassion for the hardship of his situation, combined with his conviction of Hyder Bukhsh's claim to the protection of the British Government, prompted him to do. We added, that it could not be denied that the character of the Vizier's conduct towards Hyder Bukhsh partook largely of that capricious and tyrannical exercise of his power, which had unfortunately become habitual to his Excellency, and which appeared to afford him peculiar gratification, when it was directed against any person who either was, or expected to be, an object of the consideration and regard of the British Government.

329. In communicating these sentiments to Major Baillie, we directed the Secretary to signify to him that we fully appreciated the delicacy of his situation, and the difficulty which he must experience in cases in which the limits of interference and forbearance are so inaccurately defined, in avoiding the opposite evils of trenching upon the independent authority of the Vizier, on the one hand, and withholding the support of his representative situation from persons looking up to the British Government for protection on the other. The repeated testimonies which Major Baillie had received from us, of our approbation of his conduct in the discharge of the arduous duties of his station, we intimated to him would, we had no doubt, satisfy his mind that, in forming a judgment of the course which he was called on to pursue in the affair in question different from his own, we had given the most unqualified credit to the motives of public zeal and of warm and generous feeling which had governed his conduct.

330. We observed, on this occasion, to Major Baillie, that the part of his proceedings relative to Hyder Bukhsh which proved the least satisfactory to us, was the menace which he had held out to the Vizier of affording to Hyder Bukhsh the protection of an escort of sepoys, to enable him to quit the city of Lucknow and his Excellency's dominions. This, it was remarked to Major Baillie, was the more to be regretted, as it might have placed us in the embarrassing dilemma of withholding our support to the proceedings of an officer high in rank and in the confidence and esteem of the Government, or of enforcing an act which our judgment could not approve. Fortunately the difficulty was removed, and the question closed, by the departure of Hyder Bukhsh from Lucknow with the sanction of the Vizier; and in expressing our satisfaction at the termination of this affair, we directed the Resident to intimate to the Vizier, that although Hyder Bukhsh had left his dominions, he would still be liable to be called on to answer any charge or demand which his Excellency might produce against him. We signified to the Resident our desire, that he would take an opportunity of intimating this to the Vizier, at such a time, and in such manner, as he might judge most likely to impress him with a sense of our desire to do impartial justice between his Excellency and an alleged defaulter.

331. On the subject of the desire expressed by the Vizier, in his letter to the Governor-General, to travel, we remarked that we were satisfied that he had no serious intention of putting his plan in execution. His design in bringing it forward was evidently to induce the Government to remit its endeavours to obtain his compliance with its requisitions, by leading it to apprehend that he really would put in force his scheme of leaving his dominions, if he should be pressed on any unpleasant subject of negotiation. His expectation of success was probably encouraged by the great desire which had, on former occasions, been evinced to prevail on him to abandon his intention. As it was highly desirable, however, that he should be made to understand that Government viewed it as a matter of indifference, we informed the Resident that we should express our readiness to afford every facility to the accomplishment of his Excellency's wishes, requiring no other condition than that he should make a suitable arrangement for the administration of his Government during his absence. The arrangement we alluded to was that pointed out in the instructions of the 11th November 1802 to Colonel Scott, the then Resident at Lucknow, on the occasion of a similar intention having been expressed by the Vizier to travel, viz. the appointment of a Regent, who should be bound by a specific engagement to regulate all his official proceedings by the advice and recommendation of the British Government. If his Excellency were to consent to such an arrangement, his departure, we observed, though certainly an undesirable event even then, would be the less to be regretted from the opportunity which it would afford of introducing an improved system of administration into his dominions. We concluded this part of the subject, by observing that while the conditions formerly annexed to our consent to the Vizier's undertaking the proposed journey, viz. that he should previously carry into effect the reform, would not be insisted on, it would be proper to intimate to his Excellency that his departure would not cause any relaxation of the endeavours of this Government to accomplish that important object.

332. In conclusion, we directed the Secretary to state to Major Baillie, that recurring to the complaint against him, our confidence in his zealous, able, and judicious performance of the arduous duties of his office continued unabated, and that we were satisfied that the calumnious charges against him were to be ascribed to the displeasure excited in the mind of the Vizier, by his zealous and persevering endeavours to mitigate the rapacious and oppressive system of his Excellency's Government, and to prevail on him to regulate it by the principles of justice, moderation, and good faith.

333. We have now the honour to solicit the attention of your Honourable Court to the report submitted to us by the Persian Secretary on the subject of the forms of correspondence observed between the Vizier and Major Baillie. Your Honourable Court will find it recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date,* and you will observe with satisfaction the testimony borne by Mr. Monckton to the general accuracy of the remarks contained in Major Baillie's address to his Excellency the Vizier, already adverted to, founded on a critical examination of the documents transmitted by the Resident to the Persian office. It would be superfluous, nor could the subject, as involving a critical knowledge of the Persian language, be generally intelligible to your Honourable Court, to follow the Persian Secretary through his discussion of the different terms of address, with reference to the minute rules prescribed for the selection of words and phrases according to the relative rank of the parties, rules complicated and extensive, and altogether unknown in the system of European correspondence. The Persian Secretary stated the result of his investigation to be, that Major Baillie, as he himself had stated, had only reverted to the forms which were observed by the Residents during the late Vizier Asuf ood-Dowlah's administration, and continued for a time after the present Vizier's accession; while, on the other hand, the Vizier had addressed the Resident in a style which placed that officer in a rank relatively to his Excellency far inferior to those of his predecessors in office, who practised the same forms of correspondence as now used by Major Baillie. In corroboration of the conclusions drawn by Mr. Monckton, we beg leave to call the attention of your Honourable Court to a minute recorded on this occasion by Mr. Edmonstone.

334. In that minute, which your Honourable Court will find recorded as per margin,† Mr. Edmonstone stated that the Persian Secretary's analytical observations on the relative forms of correspondence between the Vizier and the British Resident were entirely consistent with all the knowledge which he possessed of the rules and principles by which those forms were regulated, and that he fully concurred in the conclusions which Mr. Monckton had drawn. It was to be observed, however, Mr. Edmonstone remarked, that the Vizier's charge against the Resident on the subject of the latter's written and verbal communications, and the Resident's statement relative to the impropriety of the style of writing adopted by the Vizier, stood on very different grounds. It was the matter and spirit of the Resident's representations of which the Vizier complained. It was the assumption of a high and authoritative style of address, unsuited to his Excellency's relative rank, that constituted the Resident's charge against the Vizier. The first was compatible with the observance of the strictest forms of oriental correspondence, the latter was inadmissible and offensive, however gracious the substance of the communication might be.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
15 June 1813.

335. Mr. Edmonstone observed, that although the severity of some occasional passages in the series of the Resident's letters to the Vizier might perhaps have been avoided, without weakening the force and effect of his representations, yet the general language of argument and controversy employed by the Resident, naturally and even necessarily proceeded from the very nature of the subjects of negotiation, combined with the peculiar temper and disposition of the Vizier, the defects of his character, and the vicious system of his Government. That language of argument and controversy offended the Vizier, because it was addressed (unavoidably addressed) to him. In every other State, Mr. Edmonstone observed, there was a Minister, who conducted with the representative of a foreign power the details of negotiation. The freedom of discussion was not embarrassed by the inequality of rank, and offence to the Sovereign was avoided by the intervention of an agent. If the Vizier thought proper to undertake the detail of duties which belonged to an officer of Government, he must submit to the inconvenience which necessarily attends his assumption of that subordinate character.

336. The Vizier, it was remarked by Mr. Edmonstone, had no title to complain of the spirit and matter of communications which belong to the subject of negotiation, and which, under the system adopted by him for the conduct of public affairs, could only be addressed to himself. The language of Major Baillie's letters, considered with reference to the minute rules prescribed for the selection of words and phrases according to the relative rank of the parties (rules complicated and extensive, and altogether unknown in the system of European correspondence), was not merely unexceptionable, but perfectly respectful; and Mr. Edmonstone stated his opinion, that the Vizier did not appear to him to accuse Major Baillie of a departure from those rules.

337. Mr. Edmonstone concluded his minute by observing, that the Vizier himself, however, had deviated from those rules essentially, and that the style of his letters to the Resident was that which no person of a rank inferior to that of royalty was entitled to employ in addressing the representative of a foreign State. It was an offence to the British Government, as well as personally to the Resident. The relative terms applied to his own letters and to the representations of the other party, were precisely those which he would adopt in writing to the lowest of his subjects; a gross impropriety, which Mr. Edmonstone remarked should certainly be corrected.

338. The improper and highly disrespectful style of the Vizier's correspondence with the British representative having been thus fully established, the Governor General was enabled to assume the high ground which had been anticipated in framing a reply to his Excellency's letter of complaint, and after specifically answering each article of charge against the Resident, to call upon his Excellency, in the most explicit terms, to revert to those observances of respect which had uniformly been practised from the early periods of the intercourse between the two States, until they had been set aside by his own act. An immediate compliance with this requisition was stated to be essential to the maintenance of the dignity of the British Government, and of its accredited agent at his Excellency's Court. The Vizier was at the same time assured, that as no just cause of offence in that respect had ever been given by the Resident, so in his future correspondence the Resident would always conform to those observances of respect and honour which were due to his Excellency's exalted rank and station, and would manifest every possible regard to his Excellency's feelings on the points on which it would be Major Baillie's duty to address him.

339. With

339. With respect to that part of the Vizier's letter which related to his wish to travel, his Excellency was informed that the Resident had been instructed to make known to him the sentiments of the British Government; and that when his Excellency should have made the necessary arrangement for the administration of his Government during his absence, every practicable facility should be afforded to his Excellency for the accomplishment of his wishes.

340. For the detail of the replies which were returned to each article of charge against the Resident, and of the sentiments entertained by us on the several topics of his Excellency's letter, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the Governor-General's letter to his Excellency which is recorded on the Consultation of the annexed date.*

341. On a perusal of that letter, your Honourable Court will observe, that it has been so framed as to prepare his Excellency's mind for the renewal of the subject of the reform of his administration, and other depending points, on which the extreme pressure of other business of more immediate urgency has rendered it necessary for us to suspend our deliberations, but which are now under consideration, and will form the subject of an early communication to the Resident. It will be obvious to your Honourable Court, that the question of the reform will now be urged with all the advantage to be derived from the effect which must be produced by the decided interference of the Government on the occasion, which was the immediate subject of the letter to his Excellency above adverted to; and a similar advantage may be expected to be found with respect to the other questions depending with the Vizier, which still remain unadjusted.

342. Since the date of the latest proceedings to which this letter especially refers, we have received from the Resident the report of his proceedings under the instructions of the 22d January and 5th March, and of the effect of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier. Copies of the Resident's despatches and of our reply are transmitted as numbers in the Packet, and we congratulate your Honourable Court on the success which has already attended the proceedings which the conduct of the Vizier had rendered it absolutely necessary to adopt.

343. We have, as intimated above, reserved the report of our proceedings on the important question of reform, and the few other points still depending with his Excellency, for a separate despatch, in continuation of that which was addressed to your Honourable Court by the Vice-President in Council, on the same subject, on the 15th October 1811. Your Honourable Court will learn with satisfaction, that of the several subjects of discussion with his Excellency the Vizier which were depending when that letter was written, and others which subsequently arose, there remain but two unadjusted, exclusive of the question of reform.

On the proceedings of the annexed date is recorded a despatch from the Resident, reporting the extreme illness of the eunuch, Tuhseen Alee Khan, and enclosing an arzee from him respecting the disposal of his property after his death, and soliciting the protection of the British Government to his surviving relations and dependants. Tuhseen Alee Khan at the same time addressed a letter to the Governor-General, which is recorded as per margin.†

291. For the detail of the instructions which, under this impression were issued to the Resident, and which provided also for the question which might arise with his Excellency respecting the succession to the office of superintendent of the khoord mulh, in the event of the Khan's decease, as well as for securing a suitable maintenance for the women belonging to that establishment, and for the reputed children of Asuf-ood-Dowlah, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the letter addressed by our Secretary to Major Baillie, recorded on our proceedings of the annexed date.*

292. On the 6th ultimo we received a despatch from the Resident,† notifying the intelligence of Tuhseen Alee Khan's decease. Major Baillie reported, at the same time, the communications which had passed between him and the Vizier, relative to the property of the late Khan. In the reply which we directed the Secretary to address to the Resident, we signified our approbation of the arrangement which he had made, in concert with the Vizier, for the custody of the property and the suspension of any further proceedings, until the receipt of a reply from us to the reference from the Resident on the subject.

293. With a view to mark our respect for the memory of the late Tuhseen Alee Khan, we have directed the Resident to confer khillats on the grand nephews of the deceased, and his confidential agent Shuhab-ood-Deen; intimating, at the same time, that it would be proper that this mark of regret and esteem for Tuhseen should be bestowed in concurrence with his Excellency the Vizier. Our instructions to the Resident, in which we provided also for the case of the Vizier refusing to pay this tribute of regard on his part for the memory of Tuhseen Alee Khan, are recorded on the Consultations noted in the margin.‡

Negotiations with the Vizier for effecting a reform in the administration of his Excellency's affairs.

Para. 131. Your voluminous despatch in the Political Department of the 15th October 1811, contains a narrative of your proceedings connected with the endeavours employed by your Government to introduce into the territories of the Nawaub Vizier a reform in the present vicious system of his Excellency's administration. The nature of the existing disorders, and the remedies which it was proposed to apply for their correction, are fully detailed in your instructions§ to the Resident of the 28th December 1810, and in the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier of the same date, as well as the consequences naturally resulting from a continuance of the present system of revenue administration, namely, to perpetuate every species of oppression, exaction, and disorder, and ultimately to destroy the productive sources of the country.

132. In the second paragraph of the despatch before us, our attention has been called to the frequent occasions for the employment of British troops in reducing to obedience the Zemindars of the Vizier's territory, who have been represented by his Excellency or by the Aumils to be refractory. You observe, that the cause of resistance on the part of the Zemindars to the authority of the Aumils has too frequently been the oppression and undue exactions of the Vizier's officers, and the over-assessment of the lands; and that the British Government has thus often been required to support, by the aid of its troops, the cause of injustice, and to contribute to the continuance of a system injurious to the real interests of the State, and destructive of the rights, the comfort, and and prosperity of the people. Our despatches of the 14th September 1808; paragraph 57; 20th April 1811, paragraph 79; and the 4th September 1811, paragraph 43, will shew that this subject had not escaped our observation.

133. It is deeply to be regretted, that the negotiation with the Vizier, so ably and zealously conducted on the part of the Resident, under your instructions, for procuring a reform in the administration of his country, has failed of success. Your object in conveying to us the detailed report of this negotiation in your despatch of the 15th October 1811, is, according to the one hundred and eightieth paragraph of that despatch, "to bring under our notice the peculiar character and disposition of the Vizier's mind, and to exhibit the difficulty and (you fear) the impracticability of influencing him to the adoption of any arrangements, which are calculated to affect the operation of his inordinate desire for the accumulation of wealth, however conducive to the prosperity of his country, the happiness of his subjects, and even to the further augmentation of his revenues."

134. We entirely concur in opinion with you, that the refusal, on the part of the Vizier, to accede to a specific plan of reform proposed to him under that article of the Treaty which imposes on his Excellency an obligation to introduce into his country an improved system of administration, and to conform to the counsels of the British Government, could not be deemed such a violation of the articles of treaty, as to warrant the refusal, in future, of the aid of its troops in the suppression of disorders in his Excellency's country, although those disorders should be occasioned by the oppressions or misconduct of his officers. At the same time, we approve of your having caused a declaration to be made to the Vizier, that you had resolved to exercise the right to arbitrate in demands which the troops might be called upon to support, leaving the mode of inquiry to be prosecuted for ascertaining the justice of such demands to be adjusted between the Vizier and the Resident.

135. By your subsequent despatch of the 11th June 1812, we are concerned to observe that the systematic opposition of his Excellency the Vizier to every representation made to him on the part of the British Government, was such as to require that the influence of the representative character of the Resident should be supported by a letter of remonstrance on the part of the Governor-General, embracing generally all depending suits of negotiation between the two States. We hope to hear that remonstrance on the part of the Governor-General has induced the Vizier to adopt a line of conduct more consistent with the manifest obligations of existing treaties.

EXTRACT POLITICAL LETTER from BENGAL,

Dated the 31st March 1814.

Para. 212. On the proceedings of the annexed date* are recorded two despatches from the Resident at Lucknow, reporting the result of his conferences with his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, under the instructions of the 3d and 10th September last, respecting the disposal of the property of the late Tuheen Alee Khan, as reported to your Honourable Court in the two hundred and ninetieth and subsequent paragraphs of our address from this department of the 1st of October last.

213. On a perusal of the despatches above adverted to, your Honourable Court will perceive with concern the determined opposition of his Excellency the Vizier to the desire which we had instructed the Resident to convey to his Excellency, on the part of the British Government, to carry into effect the provisions of Tuhseen Alee Khan's will. We stated to Major Baillie, that we considered the refusal of his Excellency to comply with the dying request of a person so long and faithfully attached to his family, and to whose firmness and integrity integrity he is himself so largely indebted for his succession to the musnud of Oude, to reflect discredit on his Excellency's character.

214. Whatever might be the sentiments, however, which we entertained on this subject, the decision of the British Government on a question involving the independent exercise of the rights of the Vizier over his own subjects and servants, must necessarily be determined, not by the dictates of personal feeling, but by considerations of public equity and good faith. Entertaining the warmest sense of Tuhseen Alee Khan's merits and services and of his attachment to both States, and convinced of the obligation imposed on the Vizier, by every principle of gratitude and honour, to fulfil the reasonable and just bequests of the deceased, as well as of the right and duty of this Government to urge it to the utmost extent compatible with a due regard to his Excellency's right of final judgment in his own concerns, still it did not appear to us that we should be warranted, by the consideration above stated, in endeavouring to carry the measure against the declared opposition of the Vizier. The duty of the British Government, we stated to the Resident, is performed by the sincere and zealous exertions of the influence which it derives from its relations with the Government of Oude, in favour of the family and dependants of Tuhseen; but the interference of the Government must be bounded by these limits, and we could not reconcile to our sense of justice or expediency the prosecution of this demand to the consequences to which it would lead, if the principle of unlimited interference were admitted.

215. Viewing the question in this light, and adverting, also, to the opinion expressed by the Resident, that the cordial acquiescence of the Vizier could scarcely be looked for, we found ourselves compelled to relinquish the expectation of prevailing on the Vizier to leave the personal property of the deceased to be disposed of according to the terms of his will; and we accordingly desired the Resident, in whose custody, with the concurrence of the Vizier, the property in question was retained, to give it up to his Excellency.

216. Although this proceeding appeared to us to be unavoidable under the circumstances of the case, we were nevertheless desirous of prevailing on the Vizier, by friendly representation and an earnest appeal to his humane and honourable feelings, to make a decent and proper provision for the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth, and for the adherents and servants of Tuhseen Alee Khan mentioned in his will.

217. It appeared to us that a compromise, on the principle above stated, might be effected without material difficulty, as it would be free from the appearance of the objection which seemed to form the principal difficulty with his Excellency, namely, that the execution of the will would publicly proclaim the violation of his rights, and encourage his other servants in similar practices. It is scarcely necessary to observe to your Honourable Court on the groundless nature of such an objection, since the case of Tuhseen is singular, and it was morally impossible that a parallel one should arise in future. As it was urged, however, by the Vizier, we desired the Resident to renew the negotiation in favour of Tuhseen's family on the basis above stated; and with a view to assist his representations, and to manifest the earnest desire of the Government to obtain from the Vizier's justice and liberality a suitable provision for their support, the Governor-General addressed a letter to the Vizier calculated to produce that effect. In the letter above-mentioned, the resolution announced to the Vizier of withdrawing the proposition relative to Tuhseen Alee Khan's will, was stated by the Governor-General to have originated in a suggestion submitted by Major Baillie. This declaration, while it was consistent with the fact, the measure having been suggested in the first instance by the tenor of the ninth and following paragraphs of the Resident's despatch of the 23d of November 1813,* was calculated to impress upon the Vizier's mind the desirable conviction, that he owed this act of concession to the concurrence of Major Baillie's advice and recommendation with the sentiments and disposition of the Government. The Governor-

Governor-General also refrained from stating, in his address to the Vizier, the precise extent of the provision to be made by his Excellency, deeming it to be more consistent with the spirit of the present proceeding, and with respect for the Vizier, to leave the decision of this point to the uncontrolled dictates of his Excellency's just and humane consideration of the case. We instructed the Resident, however, to be prepared to meet any reference to him from the Vizier, with a recommendation that the provision to be made for the persons named in the will should be regulated, as nearly as possible, by the declared wishes of the deceased, and that the allowance to be assigned to the residuary legatees should be sufficient to maintain them in ease and comfort.

218. A powerful motive with us in relaxing on the point of Tuhseen Alee Khan's will, was the desire which we felt to avoid multiplying the causes of irritation and dissatisfaction in the mind of the Vizier, which if excited by urging his Excellency too strongly on points of minor importance, must tend greatly to defeat our purposes in affairs of greater moment. We saw no reason to apprehend that our influence over the Vizier's mind would be weakened by yielding to his prejudices on this point, accompanied as the measure would be by a decisive declaration of our sentiments to his Excellency on the important question of reform, and the other depending points which had so long been a subject of negotiation. On the contrary, we were of opinion that, by a judicious use of this concession in the affair of Tuhseen Alee Khan's will, some advantage might be gained in the negotiation of the others. For a further detail of our sentiments on this subject, and of our instructions to Major Baillie, we beg leave to refer your Honourable Court to the letter which was addressed to him by the Secretary, under date the 31st of December 1813.* The letter from the Governor-General to the Vizier, above adverted to, is also recorded on the proceedings of the same date.

219. In acknowledging the receipt of our instructions last referred to,† the Resident stated, that the general principles which had been laid down for his guidance in his future negotiations with the Vizier, should be adhered to with the strictest attention on his part. Major Baillie also stated, that the concession of the original purposes of the Government regarding the property and will of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and the unconditional surrender of that property to his Excellency the Vizier, could not fail to afford the highest gratification to his Excellency's mind, and would, he trusted, have the salutary effect of producing his cheerful acquiescence in the object of the appeal to his generosity in behalf of the relations of the deceased, as well as of inducing his Excellency to listen to our representations on points of more importance. The subsequent despatch, recorded as per margin,‡ contains a report of Major Baillie's conference with the Vizier, in which he pointed out to his Excellency, in a very able and convincing manner, the services and merits of Tuhseen Alee Khan, and the claims which he had established in favour of his family and dependants on the justice and liberality of his Excellency. At this conference the Vizier having requested the Resident to state the extent of the provision to the grand-children of Chutra Mull, Major Baillie, in the first instance, proposed that the aggregate amount of the provisions assigned in the will, namely, five hundred and seventy-five rupees per mensem, should be extended to one thousand, thus giving four hundred and twenty five rupees to the family of Chutra Mull. On the Vizier's objecting to this amount, the Resident restricted his proposal in behalf of the family to an allowance of three hundred rupees; which though his Excellency did not promise to grant, yet he seemed to the Resident to be disposed to consent to. Two days subsequently to the conference, however, the Resident received a communication from the Vizier, apprizing him of his final resolution in favour of the servants and dependants of Tuhseen, namely, the confirmation of all the bequests of the deceased in favour of the former, on the condition of their attendance on his Excellency, and a grant of two hundred rupees per mensem to the latter, in compliance, as the Vizier signified on this occasion, with the desire desire of his Excellency the Governor-General, and with Major Baillie's concurrence and advice. His Excellency had accordingly prepared a letter to the Governor-General, in reply to his Lordship's of the 31st December, to the effect of the communication above stated. A translation of his Excellency the Vizier's letter is recorded as per margin.*

220. In a subsequent despatch, recorded on the proceedings last adverted to,† the Resident reported, that from the tenor of a written communication which he had received from the Vizier, it was obvious that his Excellency had resolved to limit the extent of his bounty to the grand-children of Chutra Mull Seth to the sum of two hundred rupees per mensem. The Resident further reported, that the Vizier adhered to a promise which he had made, of constructing a monument over the grave of Tuhseen, on which subject we had furnished Major Baillie with instructions. His Excellency had also agreed to repay the charges of subsisting the cattle, &c. belonging to the estate of Tuhseen from the day of his demise, on which subject some discussion passed between his Excellency and the Resident; and under those and other considerations, stated in his despatch, the Resident surrendered the property of Tuhseen into his Excellency's hands.

221. We have signified to Major Baillie our approbation of the tenor of the observations which he made to his Excellency, and generally of the manner in which he executed our instructions on the subject above described‡. With respect to the grant of two hundred rupees for the support of the relations of the deceased, we have observed to the Resident that it would have been more satisfactory if his Excellency had assigned the larger sum proposed by him, yet that we did not consider this to be a point on which his Excellency should be urged further.

222. On the proceedings now transmitted with this address, your Honourable Court will observe many despatches from the Resident at Lucknow and our instructions in reply, on the important subject of the reform of his Excellency's dominions, into which we refrain from entering at present, it being our intention to submit a separate report to your Honourable Court. For the same reasons, we also refrain from adverting to the question respecting the provision to Hoosein Alee Khan, the son of the late Hyder Beg Khan, which will form a part of our proposed report above alluded to.

223. It will be satisfactory, however, to your Honourable Court, to be informed that his Excellency the Vizier has finally acquiesced in our wishes regarding the grant of a pension to Hoosein Alee Khan, and that his Excellency has settled upon him and the other indigent branches of the family a monthly allowance of two thousand rupees.

Political Letter

18 May 1814.

Par. 1. We propose in this letter to submit to your Honourable Court a report of our proceedings relative to the reform of the administration of his Excellency the Vizier, and the other points of negotiation lately depending with his Excellency, which as stated in the three hundred and forty-third and two hundred and twenty-second paragraphs of the letters of the 15th June 1813 and 31st of March last, respectively, to your Honourable Court in this department, have been reserved for the subject of a separate communication.

2. In a despatch of the 15th of October 1811, the late Governor-General in Council submitted to your Honourable Court the detail of his proceedings with relation to the reform, up to the period when, for the reasons there stated, it was

was determined to suspend the negotiation : and in the two hundred and ninth and following paragraphs of our letter in this department of the 11th June 1812, his Lordship in Council reported the renewal of the negotiation, in the letter addressed by the Governor-General to his Excellency the Vizier on the 8th of May.

3. Besides the great question of reform, that letter embraced all the other topics which had lately been agitated between the Vizier and the British Government, relating to the two Begums, to the case of Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, of Hoosein Alee Khan (the son of the late Hyder Beg Khan), and to the employment of the British troops stationed in Oude in the pursuit and apprehension of public offenders.

4. A considerable time elapsed before the Vizier replied to the late Governor-General's letter of the 8th of May, during which interval the Resident was employed in endeavouring to impress on his Excellency's mind the importance of the subjects of which it treated, and the necessity of conforming to the advice and just expectations of the British Government.

5. The Resident has reported, in considerable detail, the substance of his conferences with the Vizier during this interval of time, in a despatch recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin ;* and your Honourable Court will not fail to observe the ability with which Major Baillie's share of those conferences was conducted, and the complete and decisive manner in which he established the justice of our demands, and the weakness of the arguments by which the Vizier attempted to resist them.

6. On receiving from the Vizier his Excellency's reply to the Governor-General's letter, the Resident deemed it proper to address a memorial to his Excellency, in which he again combated with great ability and success the arguments by which the Vizier endeavoured to support his refusal to comply with the requisitions contained in the Governor-General's letter. The line of argument pursued by the Resident on this occasion, indeed, consisted of little more than the repetition and enforcement, in a more precise and concentrated manner, of the reasoning which the Resident had previously employed in conference, joined to such additional observations as were suggested by the tenor of the Vizier's letter.

7. His Excellency, in his answer to the Governor-General, commenced his observations on the subject of reform, by asserting that he had originally proposed to the Resident to depute one of his sons with a detachment of British troops for the purpose of settling the country, and alleged that this scheme having been rejected by the Resident, no blame was imputable to his Excellency for the failure of the measure. His Excellency stated, as a fundamental objection to the plan of the British Government, that a general settlement of the revenue could not be affected until the whole of the lands should be measured, and their extent and value correctly ascertained. His Excellency also stated, that he felt an apprehension, that the appointment of Ameens to investigate the assets of the districts would create discontents among the people ; and he declared, that the introduction of a new system of police and of the administration of justice, before the expulsion and extirpation from his Excellency's dominions of rebels and disaffected persons, would be nugatory.

8. To the foregoing remarks the Resident replied, in the spirit of his discourse at the conferences which he had previously held with the Vizier, that the objection to the deputation of one of his Excellency's sons was founded on the inadequacy of that measure to the object proposed ; that the proposition was unaccompanied by any plan or scheme of assessment which the British Government might be called on to approve or disapprove ; that, on the contrary, the first regular and defined plan of reform was submitted to the Vizier by the British Government, in the Governor-General's letter of the 28th of December 1810, and after having been accepted by the Vizier, was suddenly, and without any just just cause, rejected by his Excellency. Major Baillie added, that no assistance from the British troops could be required in carrying into effect a plan for the settlement of the country, founded on principles of justice and moderation.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
18 May 1814.

9. On the next point, the Resident observed, in substance, that the example of the Ceded Provinces, where an equitable assessment of the whole country had been effected without any previous measurement of lands, ought to satisfy his Excellency of the practicability of the plan proposed by the Governor-General, without having recourse to so tedious, expensive, and arduous an operation. In cases where the value of the lands could not otherwise be ascertained, or where disputes arose between the revenue officers and the landholders, that mode, the Resident observed, might be resorted to with advantage; but that a general measurement would have no other effect than to produce delay in the completion of the settlement, and alarm and distrust in the minds of the people.

10. Referring to the apprehensions entertained by the Vizier, of discontent among the people being the consequence of the preliminary appointment of Ameens, the Resident observed, that the object of that measure was to conciliate the people and to remove any ground of alarm, and could not be expected to create disaffection or commotion; adding, that if such should unfortunately be the result, the British troops would be prepared to quell it, and to support the authority of the Ameens. The Resident remarked, in this part of his argument, that two things only were wanting to secure the successful progress of the reform and of every just measure which could form an object of common interest to the two States, namely, on the part of the Vizier, a sincere desire to promote their success, and on the part of the British Government, the exertion of its influence and power in support of his Excellency's authority.

11. In reply to the Vizier's fourth objection, namely, that the introduction of a new system of police and of the administration of justice before the expulsion and extirpation of rebels and disaffected persons from his Excellency's dominions should be effected, would be nugatory, the Resident remarked, that as the British troops had been for some years past constantly employed in reducing persons described by his Excellency and his officers as rebels, it was difficult to suppose the existence of the inclination, or means of resistance to the authority of courts of justice and police, to be constituted in the manner proposed with the advice of the British Government, and that the British troops would at all times be ready for the suppression of such instance, and for the support of the just authority of the police and the decrees of such courts of justice as those described.

12. The Resident then adverted to a passage in the Vizier's letter, expressing a desire to be furnished with fuller information relative to the means by which an investigation and adjustment might be made of the claims and demands of his Excellency's Government, which the British Government might be required to enforce. On this subject, which your Honourable Court will recollect is included in the late Governor-General's letter to the Vizier of the 8th of May 1812, the Resident repeated to his Excellency the proposition which he had made to his Excellency on a former occasion, for the deputation of Ameens on the part of both Governments, or by the Resident himself, as affording the most satisfactory means of effecting that object, without in any respect involving a compromise of his Excellency's authority or consequence.

13. The rest of the Resident's memorial, which is recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date,* relates to the other subjects of negotiation with the Vizier, to which we shall advert in the sequel of this despatch. The Resident concluded, by urging his Excellency to reconsider and revise his letter to the Governor-General, with a view to the suppression of such parts of its contents as would, on further deliberation, appear to his Excellency to be hostile to the spirit of friendship and cordiality, that should ever regulate the discussions between the British Government and his own.

14. A trans-

14. A translation of the letter in its original form, of which the Resident transmitted a copy, is recorded as per margin,* and will, we doubt not, appear to your Honourable Court, on perusal, to manifest the same unhappy spirit of evasion, which we have too often been obliged to ascribe to his Excellency's proceedings in the course of this negotiation.

15. The proceedings of the Resident, in endeavouring to induce his Excellency to withdraw and revise it, were approved, and appeared for a time to have been attended with success; for his Excellency, after the receipt of Major Baillie's memorial, requested that the transmission of the letter might be suspended.†

16. A few days afterwards, the Vizier transmitted to the Resident, for the purpose of being forwarded to the late Governor-General, a letter to his Lordship's address, the subject of which was limited to the question of the superintendence of the khoord muhl and the departure of the younger Begum from Lucknow; two of the points discussed in the Governor-General's letter of the 8th of May 1812. This letter corresponded entirely with the passages in his Excellency's former letter (afterwards recalled, as above-stated) relating to these questions, and we shall have the honour of addressing your Honourable Court on the subject of it in a subsequent part of this despatch, deeming it advisable to preserve the narrative of our proceedings relative to the reform unbroken.

17. It was not till the 5th of December 1812, three months after the recall of the former letter, that the Vizier delivered to the Resident his reply to those parts of the Governor-General's letter of the 8th of May, which related to the reform and the other questions not comprehended in the letter referred to in the preceding paragraph; and the letter, as now transmitted, differed from the recalled one only in the omission of the passages relating to the two Begums.

18. In this interval Major Baillie had repeatedly, but without success, endeavoured to convince the Vizier of the justice and necessity of his acquiescence in the views of the British Government. Major Baillie states‡ the failure of his endeavour to be, in his own judgment, ascribable to the Vizier's untoward disposition, to the habitual and even constitutional jealousy and suspicion with which he has ever received propositions of the simplest nature and most beneficial tendency on the part of the British Government, and to the hope of protracting at least, if not of evading, a compliance with its just views and requisitions, founded on the known reluctance of Government to urge matters to extremity with him, or to adopt even the language of demand under any circumstances whatever.

19. We have already, in a summary manner, stated the nature of the objections offered by the Vizier to the introduction of the proposed reform into his administration; and on this account, and as they do not differ in substance from those of which the detail is submitted in the despatch of the Governor-General in Council of the 15th October 1811, we deem it unnecessary to state them more particularly on the present occasion. For the same reason, we forbear to make any observations on the Vizier's reply to Major Baillie's memorial, or on Major Baillie's remarks on that document. Both are recorded on the annexed date§; and we take the liberty of referring your Honourable Court to the documents themselves, for more particular information regarding their contents. The Vizier's letter to Lord Minto is recorded on the same date.||

20. On the proceedings of the annexed date¶ are recorded two despatches from the Resident, reporting the conferences which he held with the Vizier, at his Excellency's special request, for the purpose of discussing the arrangements connected with his Excellency's proceeding on a pilgrimage, and the measures which which it would be previously necessary to adopt, as the indispensable conditions of the assent of the British Government to his departure.

Political Letter
from Bengal.
18 May 1814.

21. Your Honourable Court will have observed from former transactions, that the declaration of an intention to proceed on a pilgrimage is a proceeding always adopted by his Excellency, when he is desirous of evading or terminating any unpalatable subject of public discussion. The manner and occasion of the revival of the question in the present instance, were reported to your Honourable Court in the 314th and following paragraphs of a despatch from the Governor-General in Council in this department, under date the 15th June 1813.

22. After a detailed and formal discussion of the whole subject, his Excellency declared to the Resident the necessity which he felt himself under of deferring his departure, on account of the difficulty of concluding a satisfactory arrangement for the administration of the Government in his absence, and the superior advantage of establishing a reform in his administration previously to his departure; a declaration which Major Baillie regards, and apparently with justice, as a puerile attempt to ascribe the relinquishment of a design which he had never really entertained, to the imaginary obstacles opposed to its execution by this Government, and to gain time and distract the attention of the Resident, by engaging him in a complicated discussion of several questions at once, totally unconnected with each other.

23. In pursuance of this design, his Excellency conveyed a paper to the Resident, purporting to contain the result of their conference on the subject of his departure, but artfully calculated to forward his views of procrastination and evasion. His object was, however, detected and defeated by the Resident, a transcript of whose reply to the Vizier, as well as of his Excellency's paper, is contained in his despatch recorded as per margin.*

24. The result was, that his Excellency withdrew his paper, and shortly after transmitted to the Resident a document, which he described as containing a communication of his fixed and unalterable sentiments, on the important question of reform.†

25. That document is recorded as per margin;‡ and while it conveys a reluctant assent to a reform generally, without accepting the plan submitted in the Governor-General's letter of 28th December 1810, is evidently designed to demonstrate the impracticability of producing any beneficial change in the present form of his Government, through the agency of ours, without encroaching on his independent authority, as guaranteed by the Honourable Company, and to lay the ground for charging the eventual defalcation of any part of his revenues, or the failure of some of the measures of reform which might be attempted, to the inefficacy of the system proposed, securing to himself the credit of having acquiesced in it, and thus secretly thwarting the whole plan, without exposing himself to the consequences of such a procedure.

26. A translation of his Excellency's paper, and of the letter addressed to him by Major Baillie, with a view to counteract the design of it, are recorded on the proceedings above referred to.†

27. This was the state of the negotiation when the late Governor-General in Council again took up the question, which he was prevented from doing by the constant pressure of business of a more urgent, though not more important nature, until the month of July 1813.

28. On the 2d of that month, after a deliberate and careful review of the whole correspondence, the Governor-General addressed a letter to the Vizier, in the terms of the draft recorded on that date.

29. The same considerations which have induced us to refrain from the repetition, in detail, of the objections urged by the vizier to the measures recom-recommended in the Governor-General's letter of the 8th May 1812, render it nearly equally unnecessary to state at large the observations and arguments contained in the letter addressed by Lord Minto to the Vizier in reply.

30. Your Honourable Court will be pleased to observe, that his Lordship considering all argument on the subject to have been completely exhausted in the long and elaborate discussions which had already taken place, and being decidedly of opinion that the British Government would not be justified in relaxing its efforts to carry the reform into effect, while a possibility of accomplishing it remained, he did not, in the letter now addressed to the Vizier, aim so much at exposing the weak and untenable sophistries and the feigned doubts and alarms of the Vizier, as at endeavouring to impress on his mind, both the right and the determination of the British Government, to enforce the observance of the stipulations of the Treaty in that particular, to make him sensible of the condition to which his perverseness in opposing our just views might eventually place him with relation to this Government, and the hopelessness of ultimately succeeding in that opposition, and generally, to obtain his prompt and implicit compliance with demands urged under the express sanction of a public treaty, by awaking his mind to the possible consequences of an opposite course of conduct.

31. All these considerations were accordingly pressed on the Vizier in every different point of view, and his Excellency was solemnly called on to unite with the Resident in the immediate adoption and execution of the arrangement to which he had already given his consent.

32. The Governor-General's letter also adverted to the other subjects of negotiation pending with the Vizier, or lately brought to a conclusion between his Excellency and the Resident. These will form the subject of a subsequent part of this despatch.

33. At the conclusion of the letter, the Governor-General took occasion to impress on the mind of the Vizier, the solemn nature of the obligation by which his Excellency is bound to resort to the friendly advice and assistance of the British Government, not only in such extraordinary and important affairs as those which formed the principal topics of the letter now under review, but in the ordinary administration of his Government. By a careful observance of this rule, his Lordship remarked, the Vizier would secure to the utmost practicable extent, the easy, tranquil, and regular transaction of his affairs, and avoid those vexatious controversies and discussions which must be the inevitable result of a deviation from this salutary course. His Lordship then proceeded to state, that it must always be a subject of regret to him, to address his Excellency in the language of complaint, remonstrance, and expostulation; that it was his earnest wish that their direct correspondence, as well as the discussions between his Excellency and the Resident, should relate exclusively to questions in the progress and result of which nothing unsatisfactory to either party should find a place; that the failure of this desirable object could only be ascribed to the reluctance so frequently manifested by his Excellency, to receive and conform to the counsel of the British Government, whether conveyed in letters directly from the Governor-General, or by the Resident in the name and authority of the Government; that it was at all times in his Excellency's power to avoid such an unpleasant discussion, by a prompt and sincere compliance with the just demands and salutary advice of the British Government; but that while his Excellency should persist in disregarding that advice, and resisting those demands in matters deemed essential to the interests of his Government and the welfare of his subjects, and on his compliance with which the British Government was entitled and required to insist, his Excellency must not expect that the British Government, by whatever hands it might be administered, would shrink from the performance of its duty, however painful it might be to discharge it. His Lordship concluded, by requesting the Vizier to receive the communications of the Resident as proceeding directly from himself.

34. In the instructions to the Resident transmitted with the English draft of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier, the Governor-General in Council observed that he could not anticipate the new efforts of evasion or delay which his

from Bengal,

his Excellency might employ, with a view to prolong the negotiation, after the receipt of his Lordship's letter. His Lordship in Council observed, that it was probable that the Vizier might declare his assent to the plan, and agree to enter immediately, in concert with the Resident, on the necessary arrangements, and perhaps actually do so, trusting to time and circumstances for an opportunity of breaking them off, or perhaps to the means which he would possess, by clandestine intrigue, of frustrating them in their progress. His success in either, it was observed, would be deeply to be regretted, as defeating, or at least retarding, the accomplishment of the reform, and would afford matter of unworthy triumph and gratification to the Vizier. His Lordship in Council expressed, however, his entire reliance on the vigilance, discernment, and energy of the Resident, for frustrating any designs of that nature which his Excellency might entertain.

35. The same occasion was taken of conveying to the Resident the cordial expression of the Governor-General in Council's approbation of the ability, judgment, firmness, and perseverance, which distinguished his conduct in the arduous and important negotiation in which he had been engaged. The special approbation of the Government was conferred on the able tenor of the Resident's remarks on the Vizier's first proposed answer to the Governor-General's letter of the 8th of May 1812, as containing arguments the most irrefragable, in opposition to the weak and evasive reasoning adopted by his Excellency, with a view to obstruct the salutary and indispensable object of reform.

36. The Resident was directed, on the receipt of the Governor-General's letter, to renew the negotiation, in the name and by the direct authority of the Governor-General in Council, and in the spirit of the contents of the letter which he was directed to enforce by such further arguments and representations as might, in his judgment, be calculated to improve and confirm its impression on his Excellency's mind.

37. The above instructions to the Resident are recorded as per margin.*

38. On the receipt of the Governor-General's letter of the 2d of July, the Resident waited on the Vizier for the purpose of delivering it to his Excellency, and offering such remarks and explanations as might be necessary to confirm and enforce the reasoning which it contained. Before we state the result of the Resident's proceedings on this occasion, it will be proper to notice his communications with the Vizier during the interval between the latest proceedings of the Resident reported to us antecedently to the preparation of the Governor-General's letter and the receipt of that document by the Resident.

39. Your Honourable Court will be pleased to remember, that the Resident was absent from Lucknow during the greater part of the month of July and part of August, in the execution of our instructions on the subject of the affairs of the Bhow Begum, the particulars of which have been reported to the Honourable the Secret Committee.

40. Previously to his departure for Fyzabad, the Resident held several conferences with the Vizier, in which he fruitlessly endeavoured to prevail on the Vizier to comply with the demands of the British Government on the several depending questions. After his return to Lucknow he renewed his instances, with the aid and under the influence of the instructions of Government of the 2d July, above referred to, and in the spirit of the Governor General's letter to the Vizier, of which an English copy accompanied the instructions, the Persian letter not having yet reached his hands, owing to the time required for rendering into that language a paper of such length.

41. In the despatch reporting his proceedings,† the Resident has stated what he conceived to be the real tenor and intent of the language employed by the Vizier on those occasions, when he departed from the reserve and silence which he usually maintained. His Excellency's real intention the Resident declared in his judgment to be, to acquiesce in the proposed measure of reform so far only as might be compatible with the unrestrained exercise of his own absolute power and the unlimited indulgence of his spirit of extortion and rapacity.

42. In the same despatch, the Resident has enclosed the translation of a letter to his address from the Vizier, under date the 21st June 1813, in which his Excellency disavows the obligation of his written acquiescence in any measures of reform, and describes the instrument which conveyed it as no more than a statement of answers to certain propositions on the part of the Resident, which his Excellency was at liberty to abide by or depart from as circumstances might afterwards suggest. Your Honourable Court will determine by a reference to the instrument itself, recorded on the date noted in the margin,* whether this be a just construction of it. The Resident urged from this part of the Vizier's letter, and from the other observations in it with respect to the reform, the justness of the construction which he put on his Excellency's language, as above stated.

43. The Resident in his answer, a translation of which also formed an enclosure in his despatch and is recorded on the same date, replied seriatim to the several arguments adduced by the Vizier, and endeavoured to satisfy his Excellency of their weakness and inapplicability. The Resident especially dwelt on the construction put by the Vizier on the stipulation in the Treaty, and his subsequent engagement with the Marquess Wellesley, that he would in all cases advise with the British Government. We do not think it necessary, however, to advert more particularly to this correspondence, which from the turn which the transaction subsequently took has become of inferior importance to what might otherwise have been. To this letter the Resident did not receive a reply; but in the different conferences which he held with the Vizier about this time, his Excellency continued to repeat the remarks to which it was intended as an answer. Major Baillie states, however, that he ultimately brought his Excellency to the alternative of the immediate execution of the measures of reform originally recommended to him, or of producing a written demonstration of their inconsistency with the terms of the Treaty.

44. In this state of the negotiation the Resident received the late Governor-General's letter to the Vizier; and we deem it to be proper, for the more complete and satisfactory information of your Honourable Court, to transcribe in this place the following passage in the Resident's despatch of the 29th of September 1813, describing the manner in which he carried into effect the resolutions of the Governor-General in Council relative to the reform, as reported in the thirty-third paragraph of this letter :

" Your Lordship's letter to the address of his Excellency the Vizier, under date the 2d of July last, was received from the Persian Department on the 1st instant, and presented to his Excellency on the morning of Saturday the 4th instant, at his country seat of Dilkoosha, when I had the honour of breakfasting with his Excellency.

" The nature and tendency of the only remarks and exhortations which could with propriety have accompanied the delivery of such a letter as this to the Vizier must be so apparent to your Lordship in Council as to supersede the necessity of my repeating them. I continued in conference with his Excellency, after reading some portions of the letter to him, for a space of several hours, during which I laboured assiduously to direct his most serious attention to the important and momentous crisis to which the discussions between him and the British Government had been brought, by his procrastination and evasion on questions that admitted not of a dispute.

" Your Lordship's letter to his Excellency I described to him as containing a final declaration of the just expectations of the Honourable Company's Government on a number of questions that had been agitated between his Excellency and me for a period of three years, and on each of which his Excellency had taken advantage of the great lenity and forbearance of the British Government, for the purpose of evading demands, the manifest justice of which had been repeatedly demonstrated by arguments that his Excellency was originally unable to combat and had long ceased to oppose. For a recapitulation

" pitulation of those arguments I referred him to some passages of your Lordship's former letters, and to several letters and memorials transmitted by me to his Excellency, particularly those of the 27th of June 1811, the 15th of January and 29th of August 1812, and the 29th of April, 1st of May, and 2d of July last, scarcely any of which had been honoured with a reply.

" In reality, I observed to his Excellency, the questions to which those arguments referred did not at any time admit of a dispute, and should never have given rise to the discussion which his unhappy disposition had occasioned. The reform of his Excellency's Government was prescribed by the letter of a treaty, and should have commenced on the conclusion of that treaty. The delay on the part of our Government to propose a specific plan of reform had been accounted for in a satisfactory manner. It had arisen exclusively from a desire to render the system as perfect as possible, by experience of its effects in our dominions; and this delay could never obviously have affected, in the smallest degree, the obligation, on the part of his Excellency, to execute a plan of our suggestion whenever it should be proposed for his adoption. A specific and unobjectionable plan had been recommended by your Lordship to his Excellency in the beginning of the year 1811, and the details of it had been generally approved by him. Had they been disapproved by his Excellency, it might still have been argued with force, that as the suggestions of the British Government, with whose advice he had pledged himself to conform, he was bound by the treaty to adopt them, and his refusal even in that case to do so, might have been considered as a violation of the treaty; but after solemnly declaring his acquiescence in the principal measures that were proposed to him, his refusal to carry them into effect might have justly involved him in consequences which I felt the greatest reluctance to describe to him, and which I prayed to God to avert. Those consequences were feelingly referred to in your Lordship's letter to his Excellency as actually now hanging over him, and suspended alone by the moderation, the extraordinary patience and forbearance of the Honourable Company's Government, which his Excellency had tried to the utmost, and which could scarcely be expected to bear with his procrastination or evasion any longer.

" But if the Government were even still disposed to forbear, I entreated his Excellency to consider that the actual state of his country, as recently described by himself, called loudly for immediate reform, and must shortly, in my opinion, be such as to require a more general and comprehensive interference on our part, than his Excellency, perhaps, was aware of, for the purpose of supporting his authority and preserving the tranquillity of his dominions.

" His Excellency had repeatedly told me, that a fourth part of his revenue for the present year was outstanding, and that few of the principal landholders paid any respect to his Aumils, so that a general insurrection of the landholders might at no distant period be feared, and the aid of the British troops to be necessarily accompanied by Ameens, in the terms of my declaration to his Excellency by your Lordship's especial command, was the only alternative that could remain for the support of his Excellency's authority, save his cordial concurrence with me in the execution of the measures of reform. To the effects of an interference like that described between his Excellency's officers and his subjects, indispensable on the part of our Government for the purposes of essential justice, and perfectly warranted by the spirit of the Honourable Company's guarantee, I entreated his Excellency to attend, while forming his ultimate decision on the first and most important of the questions that were argued in your Lordship's letter, and with this exhortation I concluded my remarks on the subject of reform."

45. When the Resident had finished his discourse on this and the other points adverted to in the Earl of Minto's letter, the Vizier, who had listened to the whole in silence, observed that he had long been in expectation of receiving his Lordship's letter, and was glad that it had arrived, because it would necessarily lead to an adjustment, in some way or other, of questions that had been too long unsettled, more particularly the question of reform; that his affairs were in great disorder owing to the protracted discussion of this question, and that he could not be at rest till it was settled. He concluded by stating his resolution to peruse the letter with care and attention, and to lose no time in preparing an answer, expressive of his final determination on every point which it embraced.

46. It is not necessary to recite the reply of the Resident, which was conceived in the spirit of his former discourse and of the instructions which he had received.

47. While the Vizier was occupied in deliberating on the letter in question and in preparing his reply, the Resident, with a view to separate the subordinate topics to which it referred from the great question of reform, addressed his Excellency on the subject of the former with a view to obtain his decision. The Vizier's replies being considered by the Resident to be unsatisfactory, and to indicate a design to evade the question of reform also, the Resident addressed his Excellency again in more pointed language, and received an answer to the following effect :—That his Excellency was sorry to observe the Resident's suspicions of his wish to evade or resist the demands of the British Government, as conveyed in Lord Minto's letter to him ; that any longer evasion or delay was obviously out of the question ; that the discussion of all points in dispute had already lasted for years, and an end must be put to it immediately ; that resistance to the demands of the British Government was obviously out of his power, and no resource but acquiescence remained ; that he was occupied from morning till night in preparing his reply to the letter, and that the Resident should receive it in a very few days : what then was the occasion for hurry on any particular subject, when the whole must be settled so speedily ? The Resident's importunities might perplex and disturb his Excellency, but could answer no beneficial end.

48. The purport of this answer persuaded the Resident, that the Vizier was convinced of the necessity of acquiescing in the demands of the British Government with a reference to the question of reform and to the other questions agitated in Lord Minto's letter, and he therefore abstained from further importunity with his Excellency on these topics until the result of his deliberations should be known.

49. The Vizier having transmitted to the Resident his reply to Lord Minto's letter, Major Baillic was concerned to find that it was written in the same perverse and unhappy disposition of mind evinced by his Excellency on former occasions, and such as to preclude any reasonable expectation of his cordial concurrence in the reform, or his willing concession of any other of the remaining points in dispute. Immediately on the perusal of the letter, the Resident sent a message to his Excellency, remonstrating against the tenor of the letter and his intention of offering some remarks on it. Accordingly he visited the Vizier in a few days, and held a long conference with him on the subject, the result of which was the expression of a desire, on the part of his Excellency to recall the letter, with a seemingly sincere resolution to alter its general spirit, and to express at least in a more cordial manner his acquiescence in the system of reform, as well as to do immediate justice to the claims of Alce Nuckee Khan. The case of the latter is one of those to which we shall hereafter solicit the attention of your Honourable Court.

50. The despatch in which the foregoing proceedings of the Resident are reported is recorded on the date noted in the margin,* and is the last which was received from the Resident during the administration of Lord Minto. Some of the Resident's despatches of a subsequent date, to which we shall now advert, were addressed to that nobleman, but were not received at the Presidency until his Lordship had resigned the Government into the hands of the Earl of Moira. In like manner, the answer ultimately returned by the Vizier to Lord Minto's Letter of the 2d July was not received until after his Lordship's resignation of the Government.

51. In

51. In a letter addressed to Lord Minto, under date the 2d of October, and recorded as per margin,* the Resident reported the entire and cordial acquiescence of the Vizier, not only in the plan of reform, but in all the other demands of the British Government which had lately been agitated with his Excellency.

*Political Letter
from Bengal,
18 May 1814.*

52. The Resident states in that despatch, that the Vizier having sent for the Resident's Moonshee, took occasion to remark, that in consequence of the Resident's dissatisfaction with his Excellency's letter, he wished to alter it in the manner proposed by Major Baillie, and then recapitulated the several points discussed in the Governor-General's letter and his own sentiments on each. From the Moonshee's report of his further conversation with the Vizier, Major Baillie gathered that his Excellency's chief objection to the reform was not to its principle, nor even to the general outline of the plan as described in Lord Minto's letter of the 28th December 1810, but was founded on an article of the agreement between his Excellency and the Resident, dated 4th April 1811,† by which he considered himself bound to submit to the Resident's inspection the whole of the revenue accounts of his dominions, and to obtain that officer's approbation of every scheme of assessment of a district before the settlement should be carried into effect, or in other words, according to his Excellency's construction, to place the power of the assessment of his revenue in the hands of the British Government or its representative, and that if this objection could be removed, there was reasonable ground to expect the Vizier's cordial concurrence in all the measures of reform, and his concession, partial or total, of every other matter in dispute.

53. Knowing that the ground of his Excellency's alarm was entirely foreign to the intention of the Government, Major Baillie exerted himself to banish this apprehension from the Vizier's mind, and to convince him that a just and moderate assessment of his dominions for a fixed period of time, with security to the landholders and cultivators for a strict adherence to the terms of their engagements with the Government and with each other, was all that the British Government had in view, and that no unwarranted, unnecessary, or indelicate interference in the minute details of his Excellency's administration of his revenue was ever contemplated; that if no coercion were used at the time of the settlement with the landholders, the terms of it would necessarily be just and moderate; and that unless the British troops were required to coerce the Zemindars, the Resident would never consider it to be his duty to inquire at what rate the estate of any landholder was assessed, nor even to seek information from his Excellency regarding the revenue of any part of his dominions: that in cases where the aid of our troops might be required, his Excellency would, of course, in the first instance endeavour to satisfy himself, and would deem it advisable to satisfy the Resident by the production of authenticated documents that the demand to be enforced was a just one, and that beyond this fair and legitimate object, the British Government had no desire whatever to interfere between his Excellency or his Amils and the landholders.

54. A number of messages are stated by the Resident to have passed between him and the Vizier, having reference to this particular question, during two or three days; and on the day on which the despatch to which we are now referring was written, the Resident waited on his Excellency by appointment, and held a conference with him of several hours, which terminated in the Vizier's solemn declaration of his cordial concurrence in the general outline of the reform recommended in the Governor-General's letter of the 28th December 1810, and in all the essential details of it, and a promise, on the part of his Excellency, with every degree of apparent sincerity, to record that concurrence under his seal in a letter to the Governor-General's address, in the terms suggested by the Resident, as soon as a letter could be prepared. The Resident added his Excellency's acquiescence in the other points in discussion, to which we shall hereafter refer.

55. The Resident concludes his despatch in the following words: "On taking leave this morning he (the Vizier) embraced me in the most cordial manner at the door of his palace, where all his native courtiers and a number " of English gentlemen were assembled, for the purpose, as he stated to me in private, of demonstrating to his subjects at large the happy result of our conference, and manifesting to all around him that the uneasiness and anxiety of his mind, which had long been apparent to his courtiers, were now entirely removed."

56. In reply to Major Baillie's despatches, the substance of which is above stated, recorded on the annexed date,* after expressing our satisfaction at the intelligence which they contained of the Vizier's assent to the reform and the other points which had been lately agitated, we expressed our anxiety for the receipt of his Excellency's promised reply to Lord Minto's Letter, and our hope that the delay which had occurred in its transmission was not occasioned by any hesitation on the part of his Excellency to confirm, in a direct address to the Governor-General, those assurances which he had so solemnly conveyed to the Resident. We added, that until the receipt of that letter and the Resident's further communications, it would be premature to enter into any detailed remarks on the subject of his late despatches; and we concluded by signifying to Major Baillie our high approbation of the manner in which he had conducted to its apparently favourable stage, a negotiation in which he had received the repeated acknowledgments, approbation, and applause of this Government.

57. On the receipt of the Vizier's letter, accompanied by a further despatch from the Resident,† not however containing any thing relative to the further progress of the negotiation, we perceived with concern, that although acquiescing, in substance, in the several demands contained in Lord Minto's letter of 2d July 1813, that acquiescence was expressed in a tone of sullen reluctance and discontent, calculated to make it appear that it was given solely on the urgent and repeated remonstrances and demands of the British Government, and from an inability on his Excellency's part to resist our urgency. It also referred, in a tone of complaint and discontent, to the delay which had occurred in satisfying his Excellency on the subject of several of his former applications to this Government; a complaint obviously, from the nature of the questions to which they related, made in a spirit of cavil and dissatisfaction, rather than from the importance which he could attach to them at this particular moment.

58. The doubts which the contents of this letter led us to entertain of the sincerity of the Vizier's promises were unfortunately too soon realized by the contents of the despatches from the Resident, to which we have the honour to refer your Honourable Court, as recorded on the proceedings of the annexed dates.‡

59. It cannot be necessary to state in any detail the contents of those despatches which disclose the unfortunate and perverse disposition of his Excellency the Vizier, and afford too much reason to think that the proceedings and declarations reported in the Resident's despatches of the 29th September and 2d of October, were adopted in a spirit of insincerity and deception. However that may be, it was obvious from the despatches of the Resident subsequently received that no hopes could now be entertained of his Excellency's cordial adoption of the measures of reform to which he had given his consent, or of the accomplishment of our views with respect to the other points on which he had recently been urged, without a renewed application of the direct interposition of the Governor-General, with a view to recall his Excellency to a course of proceeding conformable to his pledged faith to the British Government and to his own real interests.

60. On reviewing the former proceedings, however, it appeared to us to be highly probable, that a main cause of the failure of our attempts to carry into effect the reform, was the dissatisfaction which existed in the mind of the Vizier, by the tone of demand and even menace which had been employed in the negotiation, and to the irritation created by urging his Excellency on a variety of points of minor importance, and concerning our right to interfere, in which his Excellency might might naturally entertain great doubts. It appeared to us, that by avoiding minor interventions of this description and confining our representations exclusively to matters of real public importance, affecting the essential interests and reputation of both States, we should be the more likely to succeed in the accomplishment of the latter, while by embracing too many objects, our efforts would be constantly exposed to the hazard of failure.

Political Letter
from Bengal,

61. Some of those points which have recently been the subject of negotiation with the Vizier might, under the view here taken, be classed among those which we should not have agitated as questions of State between the British Government and the Vizier; but being in some degree committed to them, it would not be practicable or proper, with reference either to our interest as concerned in the maintenance of our influence at the Court of Lucknow, or to the interests of the parties whose cause we had espoused and whose hopes we had excited, to withdraw from them now, while we determined to avoid to the utmost practicable extent, the agitation of similar questions in future.

62. These were the grounds of the resolution which we adopted when Major Baillie's despatches last referred to came under our consideration; and the result of our deliberations was, that a letter should be addressed by the Governor-General to the Vizier in the spirit of the above remarks.

63. Your Honourable Court will be pleased to observe, that in that letter is included a representation to the Vizier on the subject of the pension which his Excellency promised to pay to Hoosein Alee Khan, the son of Hyder Beg Khan; but which, for the sake of clearness, we reserve for a subsequent part of this despatch. After stating his sentiments and expectations on that subject, the Governor-General proceeded to advert to the question of reform.

64. His Lordship began by remarking, that it was a subject of no common importance in itself, and one on which it was peculiarly expedient that he should address the Vizier in this early stage of his administration. His Lordship then observed, that the Vizier's answer to the late Governor-General's letter of the 2d of July 1813 had expressed a distinct acquiescence, on the part of his Excellency, in the plan of reform recommended in the system of his Government, and conveyed the assurance that it should be immediately undertaken; that Major Baillie had since reported that his Excellency had abandoned this salutary intention, and had shewn a marked disinclination to listen to any of his suggestions referring to that momentous concern. His Lordship stated, that it was his anxious desire and that of his colleagues, that every testimony of attention, and every procedure which could uphold his Excellency's dignity, should be manifested by the British Government; that his Excellency's interests, however, and ours were so inseparably interwoven, that it would be criminal in us did not we offer to him our best advice, in any conjuncture which we might think pregnant with evil for him; that it was on this ground that we had urged his Excellency to adopt arrangements of reform in his dominions (a right of interference secured to us by treaty), as the only mode of avoiding a convulsion not to be quelled but by applications of our force, that would be discreditable for us, and which we consequently could not make for his Excellency's support; that the manner in which our troops had often been called upon to act, in order to dissipate commotions occasioned by the misrule and oppressive conduct of those entrusted with the details of his Excellency's affairs, had extorted frequent remonstrance from this Government; that we felt it dishonourable for the British arms to be employed in supporting injustice, and we must guard against such disgrace.

65 and 66. A sense of mutual interest, his Lordship next observed, had forced the British Government to press this point strongly. There would not, he said, be wanting men around his Excellency, whose advantages would suffer from such a reform. It was natural that they should attempt to disincline his Excellency to the measure, and to the British Government for urging it. They would have no chance of succeeding, his Lordship remarked, were it not that his Excellency's mind might imagine the effect of disregard of our councils would be merely temporary coldness. Such a coldness could not exist, without soon degenerating first into estrangement, and then into jealousies and mis-constructions of the most dangerous description. That the ultimate result would be matter of deepest grief to us; to his Excellency it would be ruin. That a contingency so dreadful might be precluded, the Governor-General entreated his Excellency to co-operate with him in manly confidence, to maintain the united interests of the two Governments firm and unshaken. He assured his Excellency, that it should be his study to forbear, as far as his duty would permit, any minor interventions which might be unpleasant to his Excellency, provided he found, on the other hand, that his Excellency entered in earnest on those arrangements, and cordially maintained that conduct, whence we might have the gratification to estimate him as an efficient and zealous ally of the Honourable Company.

67. The object, continued his Lordship, was so serious, that he assured himself his Excellency could not misinterpret the frankness with which his Lordship exposed our relative situations for his Excellency's reflection. On the contrary, the unreserved manner in which his Lordship spoke, ought to satisfy his Excellency that no doubtful sentiments remained concealed, and his Excellency should thence feel his security in a perfect reliance on this Government.

68. His Lordship concluded by stating, that Major Baillie, who possessed his full confidence, was instructed to make this principle the guide of the communications which he would have the honour of holding with his Excellency the Vizier; and by expressing his ardent hope, that his Excellency would prove his correspondence to these dispositions, by the liberal and sincere trust which he would repose in that gentleman. The foregoing letter from the Governor-General to the Vizier, and instructions issued to the Resident under the same date, are recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin.*

69. On the proceedings of the dates noted in the margin† are recorded two despatches from the Resident received shortly after the despatch of the foregoing letter, and the instructions to the Resident which accompanied it, containing translations of the continuation of his correspondence with the Vizier, of which the preceding part is enclosed in the Resident's despatches already referred to in the fifty-eighth paragraph.

70. In a despatch of the 19th February, recorded on the annexed date,‡ the Resident reported his receipt of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier above referred to, together with another, under date the 31st December, relative to the will of Tuhseen Alee Khan, to which we have adverted in the two hundred and twelfth and following paragraphs of our general letter in this department, under date the 31st March last, and his proceedings on the occasion of delivering those letters to the Vizier.

71. Major Baillie prefaced the delivery and perusal of the letters with observations of a conciliatory and friendly nature, calculated to dispose his Excellency's mind to a favourable reception of the representations and demands of the British Government, as expressed in those documents. After referring to the apparently satisfactory termination of all the late discussions, and the unfortunate recurrence of a difference of opinion, and consequent interruption of the harmony which had for a while prevailed between his Excellency and the Resident, Major Baillie observed, that it must be highly satisfactory and gratifying to the Vizier, to perceive in the letters which he was about to present to him a sentiment of cordial friendship, a feeling of personal regard, a disposition to soothe and conciliate, to concede when concession might be practicable, and to abstain from unnecessary interference in the concerns of his Excellency's Government, as well as from controversial discussions to the utmost possible extent, combined with a resolution to give advice on occasions which might require interference, with a view to the mutual benefit of both States or to his Excellency's honour and advantage, and to urge that advice on such occasions (since (since to refrain were a dereliction of duty) in terms of dignified firmness, but in the spirit of cordial friendship and with expressions of the sincerest regard.

72. The Resident then proceeded to discuss the question of Tuhseen Alee Khan's property, which, as above stated, has already been reported to your Honourable Court, and then read and delivered the letter relating to the question of reform and the pension to Hoosein Alee Khan.

73. Very little conversation took place on this subject, the Vizier stating his intention to peruse and consider the letter and to appoint an early day for conversing with the Resident.

74. The Resident, in the same letter, reported that although he had not at the date of it received from the Vizier any communication relative either to the reform or to the pension of Hoosein Alee Khan, he was disposed to augur the most salutary effects and impressions on his Excellency's mind from the tenor of the Governor-General's letter on those subjects, and from the friendly and conciliatory observations on his own part with which the delivery of the letter was accompanied, in conformity to our instructions.

75. We signified to the Resident our approbation of the tenor of his observations to the Vizier on the above occasion, and generally of the manner in which he had executed our instructions; but we suspended any further remarks or directions, until we should be apprized of the effect produced on the Vizier's mind by the Governor-General's letter and the proceedings of the Resident.*

76. On the proceedings of the date noted in the margin† is recorded the reply of the Vizier to the Governor-General's letter of the 7th January, together with a letter from his Excellency to the Resident, on the occasion of transmitting it, and the Resident's despatch enclosing the above-mentioned documents, and stating his sentiments and reflections on their contents.

77. In the letter to the Resident, the Vizier stated his intention of adopting a suggestion of the Resident for dividing his territory into districts yielding from two lacs to two lacs and a half of rupees per annum, and placing in charge of these districts Ameens of respectable character with adequate salaries, and over every ten or twelve of such Ameens placing an officer of high rank, respectability, and integrity, with a suitable salary, in the character of Zillahdar; and his Excellency stated, that he would search for proper persons to fill those offices, and having done so would furnish them with instructions to publish proclamations and prepare revenue papers, in the manner desired by the Resident.

78. In reply to the Governor-General, his Excellency commenced by signifying his acquiescence in his Lordship's recommendation relative to Hoosein Alee Khan's pension, as will be noticed hereafter. He then proceeded to reply to that part of the letter which related to the question of reform.

79. It would be difficult, if not impracticable, to give your Honourable Court a correct notion of the spirit and tenor of the Vizier's letter by an abstract of its contents; we must, therefore, request your attention to the document itself recorded as per margin.‡

80. Your Honourable Court will observe, that his Excellency is profuse in expressions of gratitude and attachment to the British Government; that he disclaims the smallest intention to disregard its advice; that he professes to entertain no objection to, or desire to resist the introduction of the plan of reform recommended by Lord Minto; that he rejects the possibility of his being misled by designing men to oppose the wishes of the British Government, and relies with implicit confidence on its zealous and disinterested friendship and regard for his interests and honour; but that he carefully avoids any assurance of undertaking and carrying into effect the arrangements which have so often often been recommended, and which it was a particular object of the Governor-General's last letter to urge him to accede to.

81. The Resident, in his despatch which accompanied the Vizier's letter, observed, that there appeared to him to arise out of his Excellency's letter two questions, on which it would be necessary for him (the Resident) to be furnished with instructions for his guidance; first, the expediency of acquiescing in the mode of conducting the reform, stated in the Vizier's letter to the Resident, above quoted, and referred to in the letter to the Governor-General, and which, in the opinion of Major Baillie, was intended to preclude any useful interference on his part; and secondly, whether the British troops should be employed in support of the measures of the Vizier, having for their professed object a reform in the administration of his revenue, without reference to the justice and expediency or to the real object of those measures.

82. On each of these questions the Resident offered some observations, for which we beg leave to refer to his despatch.* He concluded by stating, that he had abstained from offering any remonstrance to the Vizier on the tenor of his letter to the Governor-General, partly, as he expressed himself, from an idea, combined with a feeble expectation, that the view which he had taken of it might hereafter appear to be erroneous, and partly from a fear of interrupting the harmony which subsisted between his Excellency and himself, and which had been manifested, on the part of his Excellency, by his voluntary and unexpected concession of a few subordinate points on which the Resident had ceased to urge him.

83. On an attentive consideration of the documents above referred to, it appeared to us that although the general tenor of the Vizier's letter to the Governor-General was sufficiently friendly, and professed a disposition on the part of the Vizier to listen to the advice of the British Government, it was impossible not to perceive that his Excellency entertained a decided repugnance to the particular plan of reform, which, in consequence of his own request, was submitted to him by the Earl of Minto, in his Lordship's letter of the 28th of December 1810, and to any modification of it commensurate with the sentiments and wishes of the British Government on that important point. Every mode of argument, exhortation, and warning, every appeal to his Excellency's pride, judgment, humanity, and love of justice, had been resorted to in vain to obtain his acquiescence in that particular plan of reform which the British Government had considered and declared to be, according to its belief, the only effectual remedy for the disorders of his Excellency's administration. We could no longer, then, entertain hopes of success from any further endeavours short of compulsion, to carry that measure in the precise form in which it had hitherto been urged.

84. While we lamented the perverse and unenlightened policy which induced the Vizier to reject that system of administration recommended to his adoption by the British Government, and which his own experience of its success in the Ceded Provinces might enable him correctly to appreciate, it did not appear to us that, under a just and fair construction of the obligations of the alliance, we were entitled to proceed to the only measure of a compulsory nature which was ever suggested, namely, a renewal and direct demand, founded on the stipulations of the treaty, accompanied by a menace of withholding the aid of the British troops in support of his Excellency's authority, in case of his refusal.

85. The arguments employed in the instructions issued by the late Governor-General in Council on a like occasion, of which the substance is stated in the one hundred and fifty-third and following paragraphs of the despatch to your Honourable Court under date the 15th October 1811, appeared to us to be precisely applicable to the state at which the negotiation had now arrived, and they were strengthened and confirmed by the renewed failure of every attempt to influence the judgment and feelings of the Vizier. Even admitting that his Excellency was induced by a repetition of our demands, whether accom-accompanied or not by such a menace, to give a reluctant assent to the measure generally, it was obvious to us that no vigilance or care would suffice to prevent him, if so disposed, from frustrating it in detail, without a complete infraction of that part of the stipulation which provides that the reform shall be carried into effect by his Excellency and through his own officers.

*Political Letter
from Bengal,

86. The conclusion was inevitable, namely, that the specific plan of reform proposed to the Vizier by Lord Minto must be relinquished, or insisted on as the alternative of a resolution on our part, which would amount to a dissolution of the existing relations between the two States. The principles of justice and good faith, as well as of political expediency, forbade the adoption of the latter course, and thus imposed on our minds the necessity of desisting from the further prosecution of the object.

87. While, however, the relinquishment of the specific plan of reform above referred to was unavoidable, it by no means followed that the hope of introducing a reform into his Excellency's administration from which considerable practical benefit might arise need be abandoned. There could, indeed, be no doubt that a plan abstractedly of inferior ability and efficacy, in which the Vizier should cordially concur, would in practice produce the beneficial results contemplated by the British Government, better than the most judicious system of regulations which his Excellency might ostensibly adopt and secretly counteract.

88. We were happy to observe, that the tenor of the Vizier's letter to the Governor-General afforded an opening for renewing the negotiation on this footing; and the Governor-General accordingly addressed a reply to his Excellency, conceived in terms which were calculated to encourage his Excellency to open his mind to the Resident, and to state his own views in such a manner as to lay a foundation for the discussion, and eventual adoption of a plan, which though not embracing the full scope of the wise and beneficial system which had been recommended to him, might yet combine the advantages of a considerable practicable improvement in the conduct of his administration and the condition of his subjects, with a cordial disposition, on his own part, to give it full effect.

89. The letter addressed to his Excellency by the Governor-General on this occasion is recorded on the annexed date,* and we request the particular attention of your Honourable Court to its contents. We accompanied the transmission to the Resident of an English copy of that letter with instructions, in which we stated our view of the question, and our consequent resolution, as conveyed in the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier.

90. We directed the Resident to accompany the delivery of the letter with a discourse on his own part adapted to the spirit of its contents, and to endeavour, by every method of courtesy and conciliation, to engage his Excellency to throw off that reserve which must ever be an obstacle to the success of any plan, and appears to have been fostered by the controversial turn which the former discussions concerning the reform unfortunately but unavoidably assumed.

91. The footing on which it was our desire that the negotiation should be recommended, would not, we observed, tend, as the former naturally did, to generate asperity, both of sentiment and expression, which unknown to the parties engaged in the discussion must imperceptibly and unavoidably mix in a long protracted controversy, animated on one side by a sense of wounded pride, jealousy, and apprehension of the loss of independent authority, and of the means of gratifying the passion of cupidity; and on the other, by the more honorable feelings of ardent and honest zeal for the reputation of the allied Governments and the interests of humanity.

92. We stated that the object of the Resident's endeavours should be, and we were satisfied would be, to acquire the Vizier's confidence, by shewing his Excellency that he was not seeking to force any particular measures on him, but was desirous of knowing what the Vizier himself proposed, that the Resident might co-operate with his Excellency in the details if the general system were calculated to meet the object in view, or state to him frankly the inefficacy of his plan if it should be really delusive.

93. We particularly dwelt on the advantage of abstaining from the expression of any suspicions of the Vizier's sincerity. The indication of such a feeling must, we observed, necessarily destroy all confidence, while by awakening his pride and interest to the importance of acting up to the professions which he had made in his letter to the Governor General, the ends of Government might be attained, if not to the utmost desirable extent, at least to such a degree as to ensure considerable practical benefit.

94. We added, that while we were prepared to give up the attempt to prevail on the Vizier to adopt the particular system of administration which we were desirous that he should adopt, and to be satisfied with one of a more imperfect character, it would still be essential to maintain in its full force the right of the British Government to satisfy itself of the propriety of affording the aid of its troops in support of the authority of his Excellency or the officers of his Government. The objections to the abandonment or compromise of this right, under any circumstances short of the actual introduction into the Vizier's dominions of a plan of administration which would preclude the hazard of the British troops being called on to act in support of oppression and injustice, are too obvious to require to be stated.

95. We concluded by expressing our reliance on the exertion by the Resident of his utmost skill, address, and discretion, for the accomplishment of our views, described in the foregoing paragraphs and in the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier. Our instructions to the Resident are recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin.*

96. On the Proceedings of the date noted in the margin† is recorded a despatch from the Resident, in which he acknowledges the receipt of our instructions of the 25th March, with an English copy of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier of the same date.

97. Major Baillie, after observing that he had repeatedly, in the course of his discussions with the Vizier, invited his Excellency to propose a plan of his own, and had earnestly entreated him to communicate his sentiments with freedom on any part of Lord Minto's plan which he might deem objectionable, states it to be his opinion, that the repugnance manifested by the Vizier to the reform was to the principle of the measure, and not to any specific plan, nor to the details of the system proposed to him. Major Baillie adds, that the alternative of suggesting a plan of his own to be substituted for that proposed by Lord Minto, although frequently offered by him (the Resident), had never yet formed the subject of a direct address to the Vizier from the Governor-General, and that he predicted a good effect from the impression on his Excellency's mind of an offer so liberal and friendly, conveyed directly to his Excellency by the Governor-General, and accompanied by a resolution to adhere to the spirit of the declaration which was formerly conveyed to his Excellency, relative to the employment of British troops in supporting the demands of his Aumils.

98. We have since learned by a private communication from the Resident, that he had delivered to the Vizier the Governor-General's letter of the 25th, but that his Excellency had declined, on account of indisposition, to enter into a discussion on the subject of the interview at which it was presented.

99. Here, we presume, the negotiation must be suspended, until his Excellency shall come forward with his plan of reform; and we shall, therefore, for the present close the narrative of our proceedings, intending to resume it at a future period.

100. We now proceed to advert to the other questions which have lately been agitated at the Court of the Vizier.

101. Of

101. Of those subjects of negotiation pending with the Vizier, reported in the despatches of the Governor-General in Council of the 15th October 1811 and of subsequent dates, some have been satisfactorily adjusted.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
18 May 1814.

102. In the two hundred and eighty-eighth and following paragraphs of the despatch of the 15th June 1813 in this department, the final consent of the Vizier to the employment of our troops stationed in Oude in the pursuit and apprehension of banditti and other offenders flying from the adjacent districts in the Honourable Company's dominions for refuge within the territory of the Vizier, an arrangement to which a high degree of importance has always been attached, was duly reported to your Honourable Court, together with the substance of the antecedent correspondence and negotiation which terminated in that satisfactory result. The Governor-General expressed to the Vizier, in his letters of the 5th of March and 2d July, the gratification experienced by the British Government at his Excellency's ultimate compliance with our urgent representations on this subject. No complaints having reached us, on either side, relative to the operation of this arrangement, we have every reason to hope that it has been found to answer the purpose for which it was adopted. The improvement which it is calculated to effect in the police of the neighbouring districts is too manifest to require observation.

103. Your Honourable Court will have observed in many parts of the correspondence with the Resident at Lucknow, and especially in his despatch of the 31st August 1812, recorded as per margin,* reference made to complaints on the part of native officers and sepoys in the Honourable Company's service, of acts of injustice and violence committed against them by the Vizier's officers. The difficulty which these unfortunate and aggrieved persons experienced in finding redress, formed the subject of repeated remonstrances to the Vizier by the Resident. We do not think it necessary to recur to the specific cases; but your Honourable Court will have the satisfaction to observe, that the Vizier ultimately suggested a mode of settling questions of this nature, which met with our entire concurrence, and may, we hope, be the means of preventing or affording speedy and substantial redress for such grievances in future. His Excellency's proposition was, that the case should be decided on the oath of the party aggrieved; and he engaged, in all cases of urgency so substantiated, to compel his officers to make compensation, or otherwise render justice.†

104. The disputes which existed between his Excellency the Vizier and their Highnesses the Bhow Begum and Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, have also been either terminated or put in a train of adjustment. We propose to submit to your Honourable Court a summary of our proceedings in the case of each of these ladies, in fulfilment of the assurance expressed in the despatch from this department of the 15th June 1813 and 31st of March last.

105. The differences between the Vizier and the Bhow Begum related, first, to the superintendents of the khass and khoord muhl of the late Nawaub Shooja-ood-Dowlah and the management of the jaidad assigned for their support; secondly, to the vexatious and unwarrantable encroachments and aggressions of the Vizier's Aumils on the lands composing the jaidad and her Highness's personal jagiers.

106. In the two hundred and fifty-sixth paragraph of a despatch of the 15th October 1812, the Governor-General in Council had the honour to apprise your Honourable Court of the restoration of Tuhseen Alee Khan to the office of Nazir of the khoord muhl, from which he had unjustly, and in direct violation of the rights of the Begum, as guaranteed by the Honourable Company, been displaced by the Vizier.

107. The re-appointment of Tuhseen was not made without manifest signs of reluctance on the part of the Vizier, who is stated by the Resident, in the despatch recorded as per margin,‡ to have carried the arrangement into effect in a manner the most ungracious, and to have either encouraged or connived at the intrigues intrigues of interested persons, to excite some of the women of the khoord muhl to resist the authority of Tuhseen and the deputy whom he appointed to act on his behalf.

108. These women, on pretence of grievances sustained at the hands of Tuhseen and his deputy, and of serious curtailment of their allowance (for which there was some foundation, originating, however, in the measures of the Vizier himself), excited the utmost degree of clamour and disturbance at Fyzabad; and a number of them actually departed from that city, in defiance of decency and decorum, and proceeded to Lucknow, from whence they declared they would not depart until these alleged grievances should be redressed.

109. Her Highness the Begum addressed a letter to the Governor-General, which is recorded on the proceedings of the date noted in the margin,* representing the dissensions and intrigues in the khoord muhl, and claiming the good offices of the British Government in suppressing them and maintaining Tuhseen Alee Khan in his office, and herself in the rights which she derived from public engagements between the British Government and the Vizier.

110. Before the pressure of business enabled the Governor-General to reply to her Highness, the efforts of the Resident, and a returning sense of justice and propriety on the part of the Vizier, effected a suppression of the disturbances. Tuhseen Alee Khan was firmly established in the office of Nazir, under the authority of the Begum, and the women who had proceeded to Lucknow made their submission to Tuhseen and returned to Fyzabad.

111. The despatches from the Resident in which the progress and termination of this affair are reported are recorded on the proceedings of the annexed dates.†

112. In a former part of this despatch we have referred to the Vizier's letter to the Governor-General on the subject of the Bhow Begum's complaints, and his own charges against her Highness, the latter of which are frivolous in the extreme. His Excellency's letter is recorded on the annexed date;‡ but as the disputes to which it refers were in the end satisfactorily adjusted, we do not deem it necessary to make any more detailed observations on the subject.

113. It is proper, however, to refer your Honourable Court to a letter from the Begum to the Governor-General recorded as per margin,§ and another from her Highness to the Resident, stating at length the oppressions and encroachments of the Vizier's Aumils on the lands of her jagier, and to a despatch from the Resident reporting the restitution to her Highness's officers of nineteen villages which had been usurped by the Vizier's Aumil of Baraitch, and his Excellency's agreement to submit the remaining points at issue between himself and the Begum to the arbitration of the Resident, and to abide by his award.

114. We experienced great satisfaction from this result, which derives a degree of importance, disproportioned perhaps to the immediate objects in debate, from the manner in which the public faith of the British Government is, as is known to your Honourable Court, involved in the maintenance of the just rights of the Begum. The satisfaction of Government on this occasion was expressed to the Vizier in Lord Minto's letter to his Excellency of the 2d of July 1813. The Governor-General also addressed a letter to the Begum, to the same effect, on that date.||

115. No differences have since arisen between his Excellency and the Begum, as far as we are informed.

116. In the two hundred and eighty-fifth and following paragraphs of the despatch of the 15th October 1812, the Governor-General in Council reported to your Honourable Court the proceedings of this Government with relation to her her Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum (the widow of the Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah) up to that date, including the instructions issued to the Resident to endeavour to effect a commutation of her Highness's jagier for a fixed payment in money.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
18 May 1814.

117. In pursuance of her Highness's declared intention, she quitted the dominions of his Excellency the Vizier and retired to Elahabad, where every arrangement for her honourable reception and comfortable accommodation had been previously concerted between the Resident and the Magistrate, and where her Highness continues to reside.

118. Before her Highness's departure, every effort was made by the Resident to effect a reconciliation between the Vizier and the Begum; but owing to the unkindness and illiberality of the Vizier, on the one hand, and the strong sense of resentment felt by the Begum at his Excellency's conduct on the other, it was impracticable to restore even the appearance of harmony between them, or to prevent the Begum from departing from his Excellency's dominions.

119. It is unnecessary to occupy the time of your Honourable Court by a recital of the particulars of the quarrel between her Highness and the Vizier, or of the negotiation of the Resident with both those personages, for the purpose of composing these differences and inducing the Vizier to adopt a more generous and friendly conduct towards his sister-in-law, a lady of the highest rank and most respectable character and conduct.

120. The Resident's despatches, together with the letters addressed by the Nawaub and the Begum to the late Governor-General, and his Lordship's reply are recorded as per margin.*

121. The Vizier assented without much difficulty to the proposed commutation of the jagier for a fixed stipend; an arrangement which was also extended to the khassa or allowance of provisions furnished to the Begum and her household from his Excellency's kitchen. Considerable difficulty was, however, experienced in adjusting the details of this arrangement, from the difficulty of reconciling the statements of his Excellency the Vizier and the Begum of the value of the two objects of commutation. They have at length been adjusted by the zealous exertions of the Resident, in a manner which, though not equal to the just expectations of the Begum, will yet afford her liberal means of support, while a more favourable arrangement could not be effected without considerable difficulty. It is proposed, that the amount at which her Highness's stipend has been fixed, viz. Sicca Rupees 7,263 per mensem, shall be paid to her Highness from the treasury of the Collector of Elahabad, an equal sum being received by the Resident at Lucknow from the Vizier.

122. One claim of the Begum on the Vizier still remains unadjusted, viz. the restitution of certain lands, houses, and gardens at Delhi, which belonged to her Highness's ancestors and have been assumed by the Vizier. The satisfaction of this claim constituted one of the demands contained in the late Governor-General's letter to the Vizier of the 2d of July 1813, and his Excellency's assent to it, with a reservation of certain rights of her brother stated to be founded on the Mohummudan law, was communicated to this Government in the Resident's despatch recorded on the annexed date.† We request, however, to add, that the promise remains unfulfilled.

123. The recovery of these possessions will, of course, continue to be an object of the Resident's attention under his instructions.

124. The only remaining points of negotiation with his Excellency the Vizier to which it is necessary for us to solicit the attention of your Honourable Court are, first, the claim of Moonshree Alee Nuckee Khan to the restitution of certain hereditary possessions seized by the Vizier's Aumil of the district of Sandee, and payment of the rents and profits arising from those possessions, while he was deprived of them; and, secondly, the case of Hoosein Alee Khan.

125. The claims of Alee Nuckee Khan, and the representation which the British Government judged it proper to address to the Vizier with a view to obtain justice for him, were first brought to the notice of your Honourable Court in the one hundred and forty-second and one hundred and forty-third paragraphs of a despatch from the Vice-President in Council in this department, under date the 27th of July 1811; and in the two hundred and twelfth paragraph of the letter of the 11th of June 1812, the Governor-General in Council reported the renewal of his Lordship in Council's instances in behalf of the Moonshee in the letter addressed by his Lordship to the Vizier on the 8th of May of that year.

126. The unremitting efforts of the Resident to obtain from the Vizier an order to his Aumil of Sandee to restore to Alee Nuckee the lands and other possessions, his right to which could not be disputed, being unavailing, the late Governor-General deemed it proper to bring the subject again under the notice of the Vizier, and to call on his Excellency to do justice to this much-injured individual, in his letter to the Vizier of the 2d of July 1813, where the principal facts of the case are recapitulated, and his Excellency is solemnly called on to see justice done to the Moonshee, who as being a servant of the British Government was considered to possess a claim to the support of that Government in a case of gross and manifest injustice.

127. The result of that appeal to his Excellency was the restitution of the greater part of the Moonshee's property, although complete restitution is still withheld. The orders of the Vizier were reported to us in the despatch from the Resident recorded on the date noted in the margin.*

128. The proceedings of the Resident in this case are reported in the several despatches from the Resident and the correspondence with the Vizier recorded in the dates noted in the margin,† which have been already referred to in drawing the notice of your Honourable Court to the other points depending with his Excellency the Vizier.

129. The origin of the interference of the British Government in the case of Hoosein Alee Khan, and the ill success of his endeavours to obtain justice for that unfortunate person and the other members of the family of the late Hyder Beg Khan, from whom their patrimony was withheld by the elder brother, Akbur Alee Khan, are already before your Honourable Court, in the letters from this department under dates the 8th February 1808, 30th October 1810, and 27th July 1811; and in the fourteenth paragraph of the latter despatch is reported the substance of a letter addressed by the Vice-President (General Hewett) to the Vizier, calling on his Excellency to restore to Hoosein Alee Khan and the indigent members of the family the pension of one lac of rupees per annum enjoyed by the family of Hyder Beg Khan until the accession of the Vizier, as the only means of relieving their distress.

130. In the Governor-General's letter of the 8th of May, the case of Hoosein Alee Khan is again pressed on the Vizier, as one in which every consideration of justice, honour, and humanity, demanded a favourable decision. The Governor-General also stated to his Excellency, that as the British Government had, at his Excellency's express desire, taken an active part in this affair, his Lordship was thereby so pointedly engaged, that he could not cease from troubling his Excellency on the subject, until either a due proportion of the family property should be made over to Hoosein Alee Khan, or the provision originally granted to the family should have been restored and assigned for the support of that much-injured person. His Lordship added, that as the facts derived from his Excellency's own representations precluded all expectation of the former, the adoption of the latter arrangement became indispensably just and necessary.

131. The Vizier's reply to this part of the Governor-General's letter, and the reports of the Resident of his endeavours to obtain a favourable answer, are recorded on the proceedings to which such frequent reference has already been made.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
18 May 1814.

132. It was obvious that the Vizier was entirely indisposed to pay the slightest attention to the urgent and reiterated representations of the British Government in favour of Hoosein Alee Khan, and the Governor-General in Council considering himself called on, both by the circumstances of the case and the share already taken in it by the British Government, at the express invitation of the Vizier, to pursue the subject with unabated perseverance, his Lordship recurred in his letter to his Excellency of the 2d July 1813, to the situation of Hoosein Alee Khan, and his claims on the justice and humanity of the Vizier.

133. In that letter Lord Minto declared his unalterable conviction of the right of Hoosein Alee Khan to the restoration of the pension granted to the family of Hyder Beg Khan by the late Vizier Asuf-ood-Dowlah, through the mediation of Lord Cornwallis, and enjoyed until the accession of the present Vizier. His Lordship remarked, that his deliberate judgment on this point had been recently stated to the Vizier by the Resident in a letter to his Excellency, to which he had made no reply. His Lordship stated,* that the actual grant of the stipend, and the receipt of it by the family till his Excellency's accession, were capable of the most undoubted proof, and that the Resident had repeatedly declared his readiness to prove the facts, either by a reference to the records of the Residency, or by the evidence on oath of respectable inhabitants of Lucknow; that his Excellency's ignorance, therefore, of the circumstance of the original grant, the only ground on which he had refused the restoration of the stipend, might be removed at his pleasure.

134. His Lordship added, that he considered himself entitled, under the specific authority which the British Government derived from the Vizier's letter to Mr. Wellesley of the 26th of October 1801, which will be in the recollection of your Honourable Court to call on his Excellency to restore to this unfortunate family the means of subsistence of which they had so long been deprived, without any ground of alleged misconduct, excepting in the case of the elder brother, Akbur Alee Khan, whose disgraceful and inhuman conduct towards his brother only constituted an additional and most powerful argument for the restoration of the stipend in favour of the latter, and of those branches of the family who were left in a condition of distress by Akbur Alee's unjust appropriation of the property of his deceased father.

135. The Governor-General concluded by again referring the Vizier to the Vice-President's letter of 15th March 1811, and informing his Excellency that the Resident was instructed to renew his instances to the Vizier on the subject, and that it was the hope and expectation of his Lordship that his Excellency would attend to the Resident's representations.

136. In deliberating on this subject, it occurred to the Governor-General in Council that if the repugnance of the Vizier to restore the stipend to the family of the late Hyder Beg Khan continued to be insurmountable, it would be for the interest of Hoosein Alee Khan to accept a compromise, by receiving from his Excellency, for his own use and that of his immediate family, a proportion (one-fourth for example) of the original stipend; and the Resident was therefore authorized to accede to an arrangement framed on this principle, if he should judge it to be advisable.

137. The agreement of the Vizier to grant to Hoosein Alee Khan and the other indigent members of the family of Hyder Beg Khan a stipend of two thousand rupees per mensem, is reported in the letter from the Resident to which we have already so often referred,† as containing the apparently happy termination of the negotiation renewed by the Resident on the basis of the Governor-General's letter of the 2d of July 1813.

138. We

Political Letter
from Bengal,
18 May 1814.

138. We have already solicited the attention of your Honourable Court to the Vizier's reply to Lord Minto's letter, as referring to the question of reform.

139. On reverting to that part of his Excellency's letter* which contains his reply to the application in favour of Hoosein Alee Khan, your Honourable Court will observe that his Excellency, after again disclaiming the rights of Hoosein Alee Khan to the pension, and repeating his ignorance of the original grant, the enjoyment of it by the family of Hyder Beg Khan or the subsequent resumption, states that being sincerely disposed to promote the Governor-General's satisfaction to the utmost of his power, he had, at the suggestion of Major Baillie, assigned the sum of two thousand rupees per mensem "for the maintenance and support of all the surviving members of the family of the late Hyder Beg Khan"

140. It is superfluous to observe to your Honourable Court, that the object of the original interposition of the British Government in the affairs of the family of Hyder Beg Khan, was the restitution by Akbur Alee Khan to his brother of a share of the property of their father, which the former had unjustly appropriated; and that on the failure of this primary object through the contumacy of Akbur Alee Khan and the unjust partiality of the Vizier, the efforts of the Government were directed to obtain from his Excellency, as the only other mode of redressing the wrongs of Hoosein Alee Khan, the restoration, in favour of that person and the other indigent members of the family, of the whole or a part of the pension originally assigned for the whole of the family and resumed by the Vizier.

141. The compliance of his Excellency could, therefore, only be received by us as referring to a provision for Hoosein Alee Khan, and the other indigent branches of the family, to the exclusion of Akbur Alee Khan, whose unjust and cruel conduct to his brother and the rest of the family alone gave rise to the discussion. His Excellency alleged that he complied with the letter of Lord Minto's application, which he stated was for the restoration of the allowance to the family of Hyder Beg Khan, including, as his Excellency argued, the wife and family of Akbur Alee; but this interpretation of Lord Minto's words is rejected by the whole tenor of the correspondence and proceedings on the subject.

142. Your Honourable Court will therefore learn, with no less surprise than we did, that when the Resident came to discuss the details of the arrangement with the Vizier, his Excellency not only refused to confirm the distribution of the pension of two thousand rupees per mensem, proposed by the Resident on the above principles, but actually withheld the pension for a period of two months after his assent was given, on the plea that a portion of it should be appropriated to the family of Akbur Alee Khan, which notoriously stood in no need of the assistance. A correspondence took place between the Vizier and the Resident on this subject, recorded on the annexed date,† in which it appears to us the Resident successfully combated the arguments of his Excellency, and demonstrated that the distribution which his Excellency proposed to make of the pension was manifestly at variance with the whole spirit and intent of our representations to him. The result was, that his Excellency paid into the hands of the Resident the arrears of the pension from the date of the grant; but Major Baillie did not think it proper to disburse the amount, after what had passed, without our sanction, and accordingly referred the question for instructions.

143. In a despatch afterwards received from the Resident, that officer reported that the Vizier had produced a demand against Hoosein Alee Khan, for the amount of sums advanced to him at various times pending the discussion of his case, to relieve his own immediate necessities, and also for the amount of a bond given by Hoosein Alee Khan to the late Almass Alee, which was afterwards declared to be a gift, and that his Excellency demanded payment of these sums from Hoosein Alee Khan; a measure which would virtually amount to a recall of the late grant, since the sum demanded was equal to the amount of the pension for several years to come.

* Consultations, 7th January 1814, vide page 572.

144. Before we received the despatch from the Resident last referred to, we had deliberated on his former despatch relative to the distribution of the pension, and had issued instructions on the subject to Major Baillie.

Political Letter
from Bengal,
18 May 1814.

145. We signified to Major Baillie our entire approbation of the distribution of the pension proposed by him, as being in strict conformity to the views and intentions of this Government in urging the grant. We remarked, that the Vizier could not, at any period of the negotiation, have misunderstood those views and intentions, as was evident from the whole tenor of the correspondence and conferences which had passed on the subject, and that his Excellency's attempt to divert from its proper object, a portion of the allowances which he had at last yielded to the urgent representations of the British Government, and his suspension of the payment of the pension for two months, with the view of applying a portion of it to the maintenance of the family of Akbur Alee Khan, were matter of great surprise and concern to us.

146. It appeared to be proper, on this occasion, for the Governor-General to address a letter to the Vizier, pointing out the erroneous interpretation which his Excellency had given to that passage of Lord Minto's letter of 2d July 1813 which related to the case of Hoosein Alee Khan, and to confirm and enforce the arguments employed by the Resident in the letter which he had addressed to the Vizier on the subject.

147. We have already in the sixty-eighth paragraph of this despatch, adverted to the letter addressed by the Governor-General to the Vizier on this occasion, as far as it related to the question of reform. The manner and tone which the Governor-General took in addressing his Excellency on the subject of the pension to Hoosein Alee Khan, were regulated by the same spirit of conciliation and mildness by which we now hope to obtain the cordial concurrence of the Vizier in those measures which we should deem of such paramount importance to the interests of both States, as properly to form the subject of discussion between his Excellency and this Government.

148. The Governor-General observed to his Excellency, that when the strong claim which Hoosein Alee Khan had on his bounty was urged to his Excellency by the British Government, that Government could have no interest in the step, but that which it ever must take in all that involved his Excellency's renown and honour; that, in fact, the representation made to his Excellency in behalf of Hoosein Alee Khan was not spontaneous, having been invited by the reference which his Excellency had made to the British Government on the subject, a reference which indicated that his Excellency contemplated the matter correspondently to our view of it, that on this view of it the British Government could not but earnestly encourage his Excellency's disposition; that this Government felt how much the general opinion of his Excellency's and the Honourable Court's subjects would necessarily be swayed by his procedure towards the family of Hyder Beg Khan, and thence thought itself entitled to persevere strenuously in pressing the adoption of a measure so highly calculated to advance a reputation which we wish never to separate from our own.

149. His Lordship then proceeded to demonstrate, that the passage in Lord Minto's letter, to which his Excellency had referred, never could be intended to countenance any pretension on the part of the immediate family of Akbur Alee Khan to share in the pension, and disavowed, in the name of the Government, any such intention. His Lordship added, that he indulged an earnest hope, that after this explanation his Excellency would deem it consonant to his exalted character to confirm and issue the provision for the family of Hoosein Alee Khan in the manner requested by Major Baillie, without making any allotment out of it for the family of Akbur Alee Khan.

150. The remainder of the Governor-General's letter related to the reform, and has already been submitted to the notice of your Honourable Court. The Governor-General's letter, and the corresponding instructions to the Resident, are recorded on the proceedings of the annexed date.*

151. In the reply which the Vizier addressed to the Governor-General, a translation of which is recorded on the date noted in the margin,† his Excellency signified his compliance with the desire expressed by the Governor-General relative to the distribution of the pension, and stated that he had issued orders for carrying it into effect.

152. In the answer which the Governor-General addressed to the Vizier,‡ in that part of his Excellency's letter which related to the reform as already submitted to your Honourable Court, his Lordship took occasion to express to his Excellency that he sincerely felt the eagerness with which his Excellency had seized the opportunity of doing what he believed would be acceptable to his Lordship respecting the family of Hoosein Alee Khan, and stated that he had derived real satisfaction in the measure adopted by his Excellency, because he knew that it would redound to his Excellency's reputation.

153. We are concerned to state, that notwithstanding the apparently frank and cordial compliance with our representation in favour of Hoosein Alee Khan, unaccompanied by any condition but that of Hoosein Alee Khan's attendance on the Vizier, which had been punctually complied with, his Excellency has again brought forward his demand for repayment of the sums adverted to in the one hundred and forty-third paragraph of this despatch, and has signified to the Resident his determination to make no payment on account of the pension until these demands are liquidated. This circumstance is reported in the Resident's despatch already referred to in the ninety-sixth paragraph of this despatch, and recorded on the annexed date.§

154. We have not yet determined what step to take in this affair, which has mortified us extremely; but we are not altogether without hopes that his Excellency may yet adopt a more liberal and handsome procedure, in place of this apparent mockery and delusive reparation to the unfortunate object of our solicitude.

EXTRACT POLITICAL LETTER to BENGAL,

Dated the 30th September 1814.

Letter from, dated 1st March 1812. (147 to 149.) Complaints of the Begum, Shums-oon-Nissa, widow of the late Asuf-ood-Dowlah, against the oppressive conduct towards her of the Vizier. } Par. 53. We are much concerned to observe by the letters from the Resident at Lucknow, referred to in these paragraphs, and in your subsequent despatches of the 11th of June (paragraphs 205 and 206), and 15th of October 1812 (paragraphs 285 to 293), that the series of oppressive conduct, on the part of the Nawaub Vizier, towards his sister-in-law, Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, widow of the late Asuf-ood-Dowlah, has at length, in spite of your remonstrances to the Vizier, compelled that lady to quit Lucknow, and retire to her jagier. We shall be happy to hear, that through your mediation an arrangement has been concluded with the Vizier, on the terms suggested in your last mentioned despatch, whereby the future ease and comfort of her Highness may be secured from the possibility of any adverse interference on the part of his Excellency.

|| That the collections from her jagier should be guaranteed by Government and remitted to her, after the discharge of such salaries as she should appoint, and that the provisions provided for her use from the Vizier's kitchen should be commuted for a money payment.

Letter from, 11th June 1812. (182 to 183.) Relating to robberies committed in the districts of Elahabad and Goruckpore, by persons taking refuge in the Vizier's dominions.

164. The proceedings to which you have drawn our attention in these paragraphs, and in your subsequent despatch of the 15th of October 1812, (paragraphs 252 to 281), on the subject of the robberies committed in the Company's districts by persons who took refuge in the neighbouring territories of his Excellency the Vizier, have been perused. We notice the frequent and urgent representations which have been made to the Vizier, in order to obtain his Excellency's authority for the apprehension of those marauders, who in some instances are said to be under the protection of his own Zemindars and officers, and we trust that success has ultimately attended the arrangements which were proposed to his Excellency's adoption for the more speedy apprehension of such marauders in future. In the measures which were thus suggested to the Vizier's consideration, we observe with satisfaction that you cautiously avoided any act which would afford to his Excellency even a plausible ground for complaining of a breach of treaty.

165. The Vizier, during his correspondence with the Resident upon the subject of the preceding paragraph, having disputed the right of the British Government to ascertain the justice of the cause in which the subsidiary troops might be required to act, we approve of your having directed the Resident to maintain that right, until you have determined what measures it may be advisable to pursue, with a view either to the efficient exercise of the right in question, or to the more fundamental object of a reform in the system of his Excellency's administration.

166. We have the satisfaction to find, that his Excellency the Vizier has at length signified his acquiescence in the indispensable measure of authorizing the employment of British troops on the requisition of the magistrates of contiguous districts for the seizure of public offenders, and that the principal condition annexed to his Excellency's concurrence in the arrangement is not likely to affect the efficacy of the measures to be pursued.

(184 to 197). Measures adopted for the apprehension of the notorious rebel, Budjha Sing.

167. We have great satisfaction in observing, by the documents referred to in these paragraphs, and in the two hundred and sixty-fourth and two hundred and sixty-fifth paragraphs of your letter of the 15th October 1812, that from the ready acquiescence, on the part of the Vizier, in the measures recommended by the Resident, there is at length some prospect of the apprehension of the rebel, Budjha Sing.

(198 to 204, and 216 and 217). Relative to the Vizier's removal of Tuhseen Alee Khan from his office to Nazir of the khoord mahl.

168. We observe, by the two hundred and sixty-fifth paragraph of your letter of the 15th of October 1812, that Tuhseen Alee Khan had been restored to his office.

(205, 206). Vizier's persecution of the Begum Shums-oon-Nissu, &c.

169. Already noticed in para. 53.

(207 to 215). Referring to the Governor-General's letter of remonstrance to the Vizier of the 8th May 1812, urging him to adopt a line of conduct more creditable to himself and more consistent with the obligations of existing treaties.

170. We very highly approve of the general tenor and purport of the Governor-General's letter of remonstrance to his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier of the 8th of May 1812. Nothing could afford us greater pleasure, than the information that his Excellency has, in consequence, adopted a line of conduct more creditable to himself, and more consistent with the obligations of existing Treaties; and that the Resident at his Court has been successful in his endeavours to bring to a satisfactory conclusion the numerous depending questions between the two Governments.

Political Letter

EXTRACT POLITICAL LETTER from LORD MOIRA to the COURT of DIRECTORS,Dated 15th August 1815.

Par. 1. The despatch of the Governor-General in Council, under date the 18th May 1814, in the Political Department, conveyed to your Honourable Court a statement of the transactions and proceedings of the Government with relation to the State of Oude down to that date. Nothing of consequence connected with the affairs of Oude occurred during the short interval of time that elapsed from that date to the period of my departure from the Presidency; and it was my intention to forbear from agitating any of the questions remaining unadjusted between the two States, until my arrival at Lucknow should enable me, in personal communication with the Vizier, to attain those objects which epistolary correspondence and the representative influence of the Resident had failed to accomplish.

2. On the 20th of July I received the melancholy intelligence of the sudden and unexpected death of the Vizier, Saadut Alee Khan.* His Excellency had complained of ill health for some weeks before, but his malady was not deemed to be of a nature at all serious, and he had actually recovered and resumed his accustomed occupations and amusements, when, on the night of the 11th of July, he was suddenly taken ill and expired before medical assistance could be brought. On the instant of his being taken ill, Rumzaun Alee Khan, his Excellency's brother-in-law, who was in attendance on his person, proceeded immediately to the Residency, and communicated to Major Baillie the dangerous situation in which his Excellency was, and thus enabled Major Baillie, who repaired without delay to the palace, to make every necessary precautionary arrangement for securing the tranquil succession of the legal heir before the event of the Vizier's demise was publicly known. By this fortunate circumstance, any such designs as were supposed to be entertained by the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, aided by Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, to possess himself of the musnud under the assumed nomination of his father, were frustrated without commotion, and the accession of the Nawaub Ghazee-

Ghazee-ood-Deen Hyder Khan Refaut-ood-Dowlah took place without the smallest interruption of the public tranquillity. The Resident had been furnished with secret instructions, in the contemplation of the late Vizier's decease in the year 1803, when his Excellency was dangerously ill. The tenor of those instructions was to support the succession of the eldest son : and the circumstances under which they were issued having continued unaltered, Major Baillie acted under the authority derived from them. Major Baillie's conduct on this occasion was characterized by the greatest promptitude, vigilance, and prudence, and received my entire approbation.

3. Every demonstration of public respect and honour for the memory of the late Vizier was manifested by the British Government and the successor was proclaimed with the usual formalities. His Excellency executed and delivered to the Resident an instrument, by which he bound himself to conform to the provisions of the subsisting treaties between the State of Oude and the British Government, and a corresponding instrument, under my seal and signature, was transmitted to his Excellency.

4. The early acts of his Excellency's Government afforded the fairest promise that his administration would be regulated by a due regard to the advice of the British Government, and by a solicitude to improve the happiness and comfort of his people and to promote the general prosperity of his country. I refer your Honourable Court to the reports of the Resident, above alluded to, for the details of the transactions from which this conclusion was drawn. Your Honourable Court will observe, also, in those despatches, that his Excellency had, at the instance of the Resident, acceded to the adjustment of all those questions which had so long been pending with the British Government, and which are particularly adverted to in the despatch of the 20th of May, as one of the first acts of his administration. Major Baillie also effected a reconciliation between the Vizier and his brother, the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, but it will readily occur to your Honourable Court, that however suitable and proper such a public reconciliation was, it could not be permanent nor sincere. Measures were adopted preparatory to the introduction of the reform recommended by the late Government, and to which his Excellency had given his unqualified consent. Your Honourable Court will find from my minutes and correspondence on the subject, that I had never maintained exclusively that individual plan of reform, because it always occurred to me that howsoever advantageous we deemed it in our own territories, local objections might exist to it in Oude. When the Vizier was disposed to adopt it, the trial was expedient, as some new system was necessary, and I knew not what might better suit his circumstances. The Resident also, at an early period after his Excellency's accession, communicated to him the arrangement which had been made with her Highness the Bhow Begum, as detailed in the sixtieth and following paragraphs of the despatch of the Governor-General in Council of the 2d October 1813, and in the sixty-fourth and following paragraphs of the despatch of the 8th February 1814 to the Honourable the Secret Committee. His Excellency the Vizier solicited my advice* as to the course which he should pursue with reference to the assumption of the title of Vizier, and generally towards the Court of Delhi, on the occasion of his accession. As this was a question of some urgency in point of time, I communicated my sentiments on the subject through the Resident without delay, to the following effect.† After pointing out to the Resident that in the letter addressed by me to his Excellency on the occasion of his accession I had styled him Vizier of the Empire, a measure in which I had been influenced by my conviction of the propriety of his Excellency's assumption of that title which had become hereditary in his family, and by the course recommended on the occasion of the accession of the late Vizier Saadut Alec Khan, I observed that it would be proper for the Vizier, as an act of courtesy towards the King, to address an arzee to his Majesty, announcing his accession, but avoiding any appearance of seeking or acknowledging the necessity of receiving his Majesty's confirmation. In the probable event, however, of his Majesty's proffering the grant of the title of Vizier in the usual form, I did not judge it to be expedient that his Excellency should decline it. In reply to Major Baillie's other despatches, reporting the transactions and events referred to in the preceding paragraphs,* I signified to him my approbation of his own conduct, and my satisfaction at the disposition apparently manifested by his Excellency the Vizier, and at the harmony and cordiality which appeared to prevail between his Excellency and the Resident. I concluded by expressing my hope, that his Excellency would continue to perceive his own true interest and the welfare of his people to be best consulted by a liberal, frank, and ingenuous attention to the counsels of the British Government, conveyed through its representative at his Court, delivered with firmness, but with respect and moderation, and with invariable regard to the relative situation of the parties and to the limits of independence on the one side, and control on the other, prescribed by the treaty of November 1801, and by the recorded result of the subsequent negotiation at Lucknow. By a course of conduct conformable to these principles, aided by the zealous, able, and cordial co-operation of the Resident, I observed that his Excellency the Vizier could not fail to obtain the love of his people, the respect of surrounding States, and the approbation of his own conscience.

5. In the preceding observations I marked particularly the spirit in which I wished the Resident to regulate the tender of his advice to the Vizier, from a desire that the new reign should commence in a manner to secure the establishment of our just influence in the State of Oude, on that basis on which alone it appeared to me that it ought to be placed, and from some apprehension that by pressing the Vizier too closely at the commencement, Major Baillie might lose that influence which he appeared to have over his Excellency's mind at the period now under consideration.

6. It was with real concern I afterwards found that my apprehensions were realized; although it is necessary for me to add, that the unhappy fickleness and instability of his Excellency's character, and his openness to every new impression, must be considered as a primary cause of his change of disposition. In a paper which will be brought under your notice in a subsequent part of this despatch, I have entered more at large on this unpleasant subject.

7. Nothing of any moment occurred previously to my meeting with his Excellency the Vizier at Cawnpore, to which station his Excellency had come out from his capital on my approach. During my residence at Cawnpore, and afterwards at Lucknow, my intercourse with his Excellency was constant, and it was my endeavour, by every mode of conciliation and kindness, to obtain his confidence and regard, in which I trust that I succeeded.

8. I shall now solicit the attention of your Honourable Court to the transactions which formed the principal subject of my communications on business with his Excellency during that period.

9. His Excellency the Vizier having, at a conference which I held with his Excellency on the 11th October at Cawnpore, tendered to me, as a proof of his friendship and of the cordial interest which he feels in the prosperity of the affairs of the Honourable Company, an accommodation of one crore of rupees in the way of loan, I deemed it to be my duty, in consideration of the actual state of the public finances and the probable demands arising out of the prosecution of hostilities with the Nepaulese, and the eventual necessity of supporting by military preparations our political views with relation to Saugor and Bhopaul, to accept the offer, with due acknowledgments of the cordial and friendly spirit in which it was made. At a subsequent conference, his Excellency solicited my acceptance of the sum as a free gift to the Honourable able Company ; but for reasons which will be obvious to your Honourable Court I declared, with suitable expressions of my sense of the additional proof of his Excellency's friendship, my inability to receive the accommodation except as a loan.

Political Letter
from Lord Moira,
15 Aug. 1815.

10. It was arranged that the sum in question should be placed on the footing of a subscription to the Six per Cent. Loan then open ; but his Excellency's consent was subsequently obtained to an arrangement for the permanent assignment of the interest on this loan to the payment of those pensions from his Excellency's treasury which were under the guarantee of the British Government. The correspondence with the Resident at Lucknow, recorded as noted in the margin,* will apprize your Honourable Court of the nature and details of that arrangement, and precludes the necessity of entering into the question in this place, beyond observing that the thus securing the regular payment of the above allowances was a matter of great convenience to Government. Your Honourable Court will observe, that under this arrangement the whole of the pensions coming within the description above stated are transferred to the Honourable Company ; and I feel a confident persuasion, that it will put an end to a fruitless source of debate and vexatious discussion between the Vizier and the Resident, the evil effects of which have been so frequently lamented while their occurrence was almost unavoidable.

11. At a subsequent period, the heavy pressure of the war with Nepaul and the other military preparations which I had deemed it to be my duty to adopt, as fully detailed in my separate despatches on that subject to the Honourable the Secret Committee, induced me to turn my thoughts to the expediency and practicability of obtaining a further pecuniary aid from his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, whose interest in the success of our measures is closely interwoven with that of the British Government, whose attachment to the Honourable Company is undoubted, and whose personal regard for myself, I was disposed to think, would render him desirous of contributing to the alleviation of our financial embarrassments, were he once apprized of them. A private communication was accordingly made, under my orders to the Resident at his Excellency's Court, directing him to ascertain, as far as he might be able, the practicability of obtaining a further loan to the extent of one crore of rupees, and to take advantage of any circumstance which might appear to him as affording a prospect of success to open the matter to his Excellency. His Excellency the Vizier had shortly before conveyed to me, through the Resident,† an offer to raise for the service of the ~~the~~ some battalions of Nujeebs to act with the British troops, and to be paid out of his Excellency's treasury, while the war should continue ; and I took an early occasion of expressing to his Excellency, in a letter from myself, the sense which I entertained of this mark of his attachment to the British Government, declining, at the same time, to avail myself of the offer, as not being required in the actual circumstances of the moment. In reply to my letter above referred to I received one from the Vizier,‡ in which, after adverting to my declining the offer to raise Nujeeb battalions, and to the information which he states that he had received from Major Baillie and other quarters of the expense to which the Company was exposed by raising troops, his Excellency concludes by offering a loan of fifty lacs of rupees to the Honourable Company as a proof of his friendship. The amount of this offer was not exactly commensurate to our probable wants ; nor did the manner in which it was made appear to me to be so frank as to render it advisable that I should accept the aid on the part of the Honourable Company. You will observe, indeed, that it was made only under an imperfect knowledge of the actual extent of our difficulties. I determined, therefore, to decline it, and at the same time to authorize Major Baillie § to explain more fully to the Vizier Vizier the circumstances of pecuniary embarrassment in which we were placed, and thus afford his Excellency an opportunity of manifesting his friendship by an offer more adequate to the occasion. You will, I assure myself, have sufficient confidence in my sense of what is due to the delicacy and character of your Government, to be satisfied that I have not committed or allowed a trespass on the kindness of the Vizier. The only influence employed was the giving him a distinct view of the embarrassments in which I stood, and thereby exciting his own feelings to come forward with a decisive proof of the attachment he professed for me. According to my expectation, the Vizier, on being made master of these circumstances, tendered in the most friendly terms the loan of a crore of rupees, bearing interest at six per cent.* His Excellency's former letter was withdrawn at his request. I shall, in a subsequent paragraph, have the honour to submit to your Honourable Court a plan which I have in contemplation for redeeming the whole or a portion of this loan.

12. I now return to the subject of my proceedings at Lucknow. Your Honourable Court will observe, that among the stipends now to be paid by the Honourable Company are that of the Vizier's brother, the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, who has retired to Benares, and the stipend to Rumzaun Alec Khan, the brother-in-law of the late Nawaub Saadut Alec Khan. The conduct and suspected designs of Shums-ood-Dowlah immediately after the demise of the late Vizier, although happily checked by the vigilance of the Resident, could not fail to produce a feeling in the mind, both of the Vizier and of his brother, which would render the residence of the latter within the dominions of Oude incompatible with the comfort or tranquillity of either. The Vizier could not, with any confidence or satisfaction, associate with a brother whom he believed to have entertained the design of excluding him from the musnud, and to have appealed to the British Government against the succession as it had actually been established; and the necessary consequence was the estrangement of Shums-ood-Dowlah from his brother's Court, and his destitution of the dignity, honour, consideration, and power which he possessed during his father's life-time, a change in his condition which could not be borne with tranquillity.

13. I soon found this previously-conceived opinion fully justified, and your Honourable Court will perceive, from the documents noted in the margin,† that I received representations both from the Vizier and his brother framed in the spirit of the reciprocal disposition which I have ascribed to them. It was with great satisfaction, therefore, that I found Shums-ood-Dowlah desirous of leaving Oude, and that I received from him, during my residence at Lucknow, an express solicitation to be allowed to retire to Benares, to which the willing consent both of the Vizier and myself was immediately given. The several preparatory arrangements being made, and the stipend of the Nawaub fixed by the mediation of the Resident, under my orders, at one lac and a half of rupees per annum,‡ Shums-ood-Dowlah received his formal audience of leave from the Vizier, in my presence, on the 10th of November, and departed from Lucknow on the 6th of December following.

14. Rumzaun Alec Khan, the other person mentioned in the twelfth paragraph as being comprehended in the arrangement for the payment of the stipends from the Honourable Company's treasury, is the individual who conveyed to the Resident the early intelligence of the decease of the Vizier, and thus enabled Major Baillie to make those timely arrangements which secured the undisturbed succession of the present Vizier.

15. Considering the direct interest which the British Government has in the tranquillity of Oude, and the embarrassment, inconvenience, and expense to which it would have been exposed in the event of a disputed succession, or of disturbance and insurrection which might have been the consequence of a public public knowledge of the death of the late Vizier before the Resident's arrangements were completed, I could not but consider Rumzaun Alee Khan to have rendered an essential service both to the British Government and to the Vizier, and I accordingly deemed it to be my duty to recommend him strongly to the favour and countenance of his Excellency. I regret to say, that this measure had become necessary, in consequence of the too-apparent disposition of the Vizier to forget the obligation which he owed to Rumzaun Alee Khan, and that the latter had already experienced marks of his Excellency's displeasure, for which no part of his conduct, as far as I could learn, afforded just ground. I was happy to find, however, that in consequence of my recommendation of Rumzaun Alee Khan, the Vizier spontaneously proposed that his stipend, amounting to Rupees 58,212 per annum, should be included among those to be paid by the Honourable Company, and added to the loan a further sum of eight lacs and a half of rupees to meet this additional payment.*

Political Letter
from Lord Moir
15 Aug. 1815.

17. Your Honourable Court is aware, that the appointment of an efficient and responsible Minister at the Court of Oude has long been an object of anxiety with the British Government. In the life-time of the late Vizier the existence of such a channel of communication between the Vizier and the Resident would undoubtedly have prevented much of that vexatious and unpleasant altercation which has so frequently excited the regret and concern of this Government. The character of his successor afforded less ground of apprehension that similar impediments to the cordial co-operation of the two Governments in the prosecution of objects of common interest would occur in future; but there are defects in it which strongly pointed out the importance of there being an efficient Minister for the conduct of the details of the Government, possessing equally the confidence of the Vizier and of the British Government. My resolution was taken, therefore, even before the death of the late Vizier, to endeavour to avail myself of my expected personal communication with his Excellency, for the purpose of prevailing on him to appoint an efficient and ostensible Minister. Accordingly, on my arrival at Lucknow this became an early object of my solicitude; and it is with much concern I add, that it was but imperfectly attained.

18. When the subject was first agitated, the Vizier proposed Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan as Minister. Your Honourable Court is well acquainted, from the correspondence of the Resident at Lucknow, with the conduct of Hukeem Mehdee, and his uniform opposition to our just views at that Court; and you will immediately perceive the considerations which induced me, not only to declare my dissent from his nomination to be Minister, but to urge his removal from the Councils of the Vizier. I further recommended that Hukeem Mehdee Alee should be ordered to repair to the district over which he presided, that habits of intercourse between his Excellency and him might subside. His talents and capacity for business, together with his insinuating manners and address, gave him a decided ascendancy over the mind of the Vizier, and there was reason to apprehend that to maintain a consistency with his former conduct, he might exercise that power to thwart, if not destroy, the just and legitimate influence of the British Government in his Excellency's administration. Having deemed it to be my duty, for these reasons, to object to Hukeem Mehdee as a Minister, his Excellency next proposed the appointment of his confidential servant, Agha Meer, to be Paishcar, and Raee-Dya-Krishen to be Dewan, to act in their respective offices in the name of his Excellency's son, on whom he conferred the nominal office of Minister. Not deeming myself warranted in opposing his Excellency's wishes regarding his choice of Ministers, except in a case where it might fall on a person known to be adverse to the interests of the British Government, and to the true and just principles of the connection between that Government and the State of Oude, I had only to acquiesce in his Excellency's selection. Agha Meer, the Paishcar, had been in the Vizier's service from his infancy, and was represented by Major Baillie to possess his entire confidence. He is not a person, however, of the rank rank, talents, or experience in business, to qualify him for the office to which he has been appointed; but it was apprehended that his advice would have swayed his master, even had he remained in a private capacity, and it might, and probably would, often have been opposed to that of the ostensible Minister. In this point of view, therefore, some advantage was expected to be derived from his appointment to an ostensible and efficient office in the State. The Dewan, Dya-Krishen, has long been at the head of the Vizier's revenue department, and bears a good character for integrity and knowledge of business; but he does not possess that degree of weight and influence which might be wished. I am not aware, however, that a more unexceptionable person could have been selected for the office. I had no reason to doubt the attachment of both the Paishcar and the Dewan to the British Government, or their disposition to promote the interests of the two States: I thence indulged a hope, that the business of the Government would be conducted with as much regularity, order, and propriety, as can be expected under the actual circumstances of that Court. Your Honourable Court will perceive from the sequel, that the result has not been equal to the prospect held forth. I deemed it proper to be present at the investiture of the Minister and the two subordinate officers, which took place at the Vizier's palace on the 10th November.

19. I shall now solicit the attention of your Honourable Court to the paper finally presented to me by the Vizier, and to the tenor of my reply. A translation of that paper, with my answer to each specific article, which was not transmitted till after my departure from Lucknow, is recorded as per margin.* His Excellency's paper referred to the following points:

1st. The preservation of his authority as in the time of his father, and the permanent integrity of his dominions.

2d. The progress of the reform, and a proposition that such of the Ameens sent into the districts as did not fulfil the objects of their deputation should be recalled, and others appointed, when they should receive tehsildary sunnuds. That if this plan did not succeed on trial, another should be resorted to at the end of the current year.

3d. The division of the country into collectorships, and the employment of troops under their orders, so as to prevent recurrence to the aid of the British troops except in cases of necessity.

4th. The administration of justice, by the establishment in the respective Zillahs of judges, from whom an appeal should lie to the Adawlut at Lucknow, the decisions of which Court were to be appealable to a Court composed of two judges selected by the Vizier.

5th. The confirmation of his authority over his family and subjects.

6th. Restoration of maafy lands to certain individuals from whom they had been resumed; and the resumption of such as could not be proved, on investigation, to be held by valid titles.

7th. His Excellency's desire to proceed on hunting excursions, after the manner of his father and uncle, and his hope that the British troops escorting him on such occasions may be under his orders.

20. To these articles I replied in substance as follows, and I furnished the Resident with specific instructions on each. I shall, therefore, with a view to brevity as well as to the connexion of the subject, combine in the following statement the substance of my answer, and of my directions to the Resident.

21. My answer to the first article was to the purport of assuring his Excellency of my earnest desire that he should enjoy, and my determination to secure to him his just authority, begging him to have full reliance on the resolution of myself and colleagues to keep him in that relative situation towards towards the British Government to which he is entitled by treaty ; and my instructions to the Resident were framed in the same spirit.

22. The answer to the second request went to shew that as the basis of the plan in progress was a triennial settlement, its effect could not be decided by the experience of one year ; and his Excellency was solicited either to suffer that plan to proceed, or to propose another without delay for my consideration and concurrence. With respect to the Ameens, I stated my desire to be, that his Excellency should be entirely unrestrained as to their appointment, except that the British Government should have the right of objecting to persons known to be unfit. As the season was passing away, it became extremely desirable that the question of the specific plan of reform to be introduced into his Excellency's Government should be decided with the least practicable delay, and I concluded that his Excellency would immediately either signify his assent to the plan submitted to him by the British Government, or lay before me that which he might desire to substitute for it. In the former case, the Resident was to proceed without delay, in concert with his Excellency and his Ministers, to carry the plan into effect throughout his Excellency's dominions, and was strictly enjoined to observe the most scrupulous and even delicate reserve on his part, on all points connected with his Excellency's selection of the officers to be employed as Ameens, and subsequently as Tehsildars and Zillahdars, maintaining at the same time the right which the British Government could not forego, with any regard for the success or efficiency of the plan, of objecting to persons of known incompetency or proved laxity, but limiting our interference to that point. In the event of the Vizier's proffering a plan of reform of his own, Major Baillie was instructed to receive and submit it for my consideration and instructions.

23. In reply to the third article, after stating my assent to the proposed division of the country into Zillahs, which had indeed been suggested by the British Government, I adverted to what his Excellency had stated respecting the troops to be at the disposal of the Zillahdars, expressing my confidence that they would not exceed the number limited by treaty. I professed, also, the readiness with which the British troops would always be employed in support of his Excellency's legitimate authority, pointing out the marked distinction between their employment on this service and in the support of the oppression and tyranny of rapacious Aumils and farmers, and thence deducing an argument in favour of the reform.

24. With respect to the proposed system for the administration of justice, which forms the subject of the fourth article of his Excellency's paper, I avoided giving any decided answer on that subject, observing that it was a matter that required mature consideration, and I invited him to communicate on the subject with the Resident, that the details of his Excellency's plan might be brought under my consideration, and I directed the Resident to be prepared to enter on the discussion, and to submit his Excellency's plan with his own remarks for my consideration. I remarked, however, to the Resident, that there could not, in my opinion, be a better practical basis for a system of this nature than that proposed by his Excellency himself in the first paper which he delivered to me at Cawnpore, viz. the institution of three separate courts for the trial of causes arising among Mussulmans of either sect and the Hindoos ; and I desired Major Baillie to recall this plan to the Vizier's recollection, if the opportunity should be afforded him of offering any suggestions on the part of the British Government. In my answer to this article, I adverted also to the police of the country, and recommended the subject to his Excellency's attention ; but I was not prepared to form a decided opinion on the plan which might be best suited to the actual condition of his Excellency's dominions. I stated, however, the general bent of my opinions on this subject, and desired Major Baillie, in the event of its coming under discussion, to make them known to the Vizier as the result of such consideration as I had been able to give it. I took this occasion to call the Vizier's attention to the subject of the police of the Honourable Company's districts adjoining the territories of Oude. His Excellency's spontaneous offer, declared at the last last conference I held with him, to give orders to the officers of his Government to comply, without a reference to his authority, with all applications from the Magistrates of adjoining districts, and of their police Daroghas, for the seizure of offenders finding refuge in his Excellency's territories, if acted upon with zeal, energy, and good faith, might preclude, I thought, the necessity of any further recommendation to his Excellency for the correction of the existing evil. An authority limited to the Magistrates and the Daroghas or Jemadars of thannas to pursue offenders across the frontier would constitute a material improvement; but I desired Major Baillie, if he should have reason to think that the latter proposition would be unacceptable to his Excellency, not to bring it forward, unless the other plan should be found after experiment to fail. The establishment of either or both of the two plans above adverted to, combined with the arrangement already in force relative to the employment of the British troops stationed within the territory of Oude, would, I conceived, if properly executed, afford every hope of effecting an improvement in the police of the districts adjoining the territories of the Vizier, which without some such expedient could never be attained. It appears from the Resident's report noted in the margin,* that the first plan was carried into effect under his Excellency's orders; and, as far as I am informed, it has fully produced the desired effect. Major Baillie has therefore not brought forward any proposition relative to the further measure contemplated. I beg to refer your Honourable Court to the documents noted in the margin,† for a correspondence on this subject with the Superintendent of Police.

25. On the fifth article I could have no hesitation in giving his Excellency the most satisfactory assurances, with no other reservation than might be necessary for fulfilling the engagements of the British Government. The proposition which the sixth appeared to comprehend received my entire approbation and concurrence; and the seventh required no other answer, than that the point referred to was a matter exclusively for his Excellency's own decision, and that the British troops would always attend him according to established usage. On neither of these three points were any instructions to the Resident required.

26. Having thus disposed of the questions involved in his Excellency's requests, I proceed to advert to other points concerning the common interests of the two States. I have stated the grounds on which I had deemed it necessary to recommend to the Vizier the removal from Lucknow of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan. His Excellency having already assented to the measure without reserve, I had no doubt that it would be carried into effect. As the early removal of the Hukeem was considered by me, under actual circumstances, to be of urgent importance, especially with reference to the appointment of the new Ministers, I desired Major Baillie to move his Excellency to carry it into execution without delay.

27. I have already had the honour to state to your Honourable Court the grounds of my recommendation of Rumzaun Alee Khan to the kindness and consideration of the Vizier, and I took this occasion of repeating what I had already stated to his Excellency in conference. The result of this recommendation has also been already stated.

28. Your Honourable Court will observe, that I added to the answers to the Vizier's requests, and to the communication on the other points above referred to, some observations regarding the just and fair construction, in my estimation, of the terms of the Treaty, as referring to the nature and extent of the Vizier's authority within the reserved dominions, and an exposition of the principles on which I proposed to regulate my conduct towards the State of Oude. There are other observations, also, suggested by the tenor of the first paper delivered by the Vizier to the Governor-General at Cawnpore, which although afterwards

~~afterwards withdrawn~~, furnished the opportunity of stating to his Excellency the sentiments entertained by me on several points on which a knowledge of them must be satisfactory. I took this occasion, also, of communicating to the Resident some observations and instructions relative to the course of conduct which I considered it to be proper for him invariably to pursue, as being equally prescribed by the fair construction of the Treaty of 1801, and by every principle of sound policy with relation to the court of Lucknow. As the principles laid down on this occasion constitute those by which it has been my aim to regulate my policy with reference to the State of Oude, I shall take the liberty of bringing them directly under your notice in this place.

Political Letter

29. In construing the terms of the recorded engagements between the Honourable Company and the Nawaub of Oude, it was required by every principle of justice, that the most liberal and comprehensive meaning should be given to such articles as were in favour of that party, whose weakness presents no security for him but in that good faith on which he has relied. If abstract equity offer this conclusion, I am no less persuaded that sound policy will equally uphold it. It would be much gained, were one only to avoid the chance of that extremity which should force you to withdraw the Nawaub's Government and establish your own in these territories; because such a necessity, though it might morally exist, could never be made out to the world, and the seizure of the Nawaub's possessions would be universally stigmatized as a premeditated usurpation, arising from a base cupidity. When an exigency, such as that alluded to, is supposed possible, the circumstance which could create it demands close reflection. One case alone can be imagined capable of driving us to a conduct so repugnant to our wishes; namely, the discovery that the Nawaub had secretly leagued himself with the enemies of the British Government, and was practising with them for our overthrow. This case, however, could not occur, but through absolute desperation on the part of the Nawaub; and such desperation could only be produced by his undergoing a course of indignities, or oppressions which he would regard in that light, so as that he should think the most unpromising conspiracy preferable to submission under such insults. Our interests might be very seriously affected by that temper in the Nawaub. It is true he has no troops, but he has much mischief in his power. He has vast command of money; supplying by stealth funds to those who would, with such a resource, be able to levy any number of men, he might draw upon the Company the expense and danger of a war, leaving it infinitely difficult for us to trace his having furnished those supplies. The rendering the situation of the Nawaub tranquil and satisfactory, is, therefore, an object no less incumbent on our policy than dictated by our generous feelings. This consideration, then, was to be held perpetually in view by the Resident, and eminently to guide his procedures.

30. The reservation by treaty of a right to interfere with advice or remonstrance upon any management of affairs within the Nawaub's reserved dominions, which may injuriously affect the British interests, clearly implies that in all other respects the administration of the Nawaub is to be free. But indeed it is evident, from the whole tenor of the treaty, that an uninterrupted exercise of his own authority within the reserved dominions was assured to him, in order to qualify the very strong step which we took in appropriating to ourselves (as an exchange for the subsidy) so large a portion of his territories. The Nawaub is consequently to be treated in all public observances, as an independent Prince. Essentially he must be subservient to the British Government; but in proportion as that point is secure, personal attentions to him involve no inconvenience, and on the other hand they cannot but be productive of advantage. In all intercourse, the Resident should consider himself as the ambassador from the British Government to an acknowledged Sovereign; a respectful urbanity, and a strict fulfilment of established ceremonials, should thence be preserved by the Resident towards his Excellency. The latter must be conscious of the power of the Resident to exercise influence over him; so that any parade of that influence in the eyes of others must be no less useless than revolting: it must, therefore, be the care of the Resident cautiously to abstain from any such ostentation of authority. He is, in a most special manner, to forbear from countenancing or encouraging any any servant of the Nawaub in contumacious opposition to his master; and he should lay it down as a positive rule, not to recommend from his own household any person for reception into the immediate suite of the Nawaub. In regard to interviews, regular form should be invariably maintained. When the Resident desires to communicate with the Nawaub, he should always send to ask the audience and not repair at once to the palace, so as to give the appearance of the Nawaub's being constrained to grant it howsoever inconvenient. Within the palace, as well as in public, whatever may be the intimacy which prior habits or services have established between the Nawaub and the Resident, an air of deferential politeness should be maintained by the Resident. This can never deceive the Nawaub into resistance against any just propositions of the Resident, but will, on the contrary, make him the more flexible, lest he should forfeit a shew of respect calculated to exalt him in the eyes of his subjects. Finally, after what had recently passed, the Resident could not be too cautious not to let any of the gentlemen attached to the Residency slide into regular functions in any of the Nawaub's establishments. Such a position must always militate with their primary duties, and cannot fail to lead to irregularities. This observation does not extend to the physician. The claims of humanity would forbid any shackle to the Nawaub's addressing himself for medical advice to the surgeon of the Residency, and there can be no objection to any arrangement which shall make that recurrence more prompt and satisfactory.

31. In stating these principles to the Resident, I expressed my hope that by a due regard to them, both Major Baillie and succeeding Residents would obtain from the Nawaub a willing compliance on every occasion where it might be necessary to interpose advice; an acquiescence of very different import to the interests of the British Government from that enforced, reluctant, and tardy submission, which leaves the minds of the parties soured, and thence leads inevitably to mischievous estrangement.

32. Major Baillie's report of the Vizier's reception of the communications referred to in the preceding paragraphs is contained in his despatch noted in the margin;* to which, and to my instructions in reply, I have the honour to refer you for information on that subject, and for a statement of the manner in which I authorized Major Baillie to remove the anxiety which his Excellency appears to have felt on one or two of the points in question.

33. The only subject comprehended in the preceding discussion, to which it is necessary for me to solicit the further attention of your Honourable Court, is the question of reform. Your Honourable Court will observe that the Vizier signified to Major Baillie his perfect acquiescence in the plan recommended by the Resident, consonantly to the original instructions of the British Government, and engaged to carry it into effect, and that the Ministers received instructions to proceed in the execution of that work in concert with the Resident. The despatches noted in the margin† refer to the progress which had been made in the reform antecedently to the period just now referred to, in consequence of the orders issued by his Excellency soon after his accession, as reported in the fourth paragraph. It had languished for a time, in consequence of the cabals and intrigues to which reference is made in the sixteenth paragraph; but under the influence of the resolution now framed by his Excellency, and the orders to the Ministers that were zealously obeyed, the measure proceeded with apparent success.‡ A considerable impediment to its success arose from the necessity of withdrawing from Oude a large portion of the troops usually stationed in that territory, in consequence of the exigencies of the war with Nepaul; but notwithstanding this unfavourable circumstance, there was every hope that it would ultimately succeed (at least to an extent sufficient to demonstrate the expediency of persevering), if an unfortunate change in his Excellency's disposition and counsel had not taken place, which after much wavering and inconsistency of conduct conduct on the part of the Vizier has terminated in the suspension of the functions of the Ministers, and entirely put an end, for the present, to the progress of the reform.

34. Some indications of his Excellency's displeasure at his Ministers had taken place at different times, but they were not of a nature to excite a belief that he entertained any design of depriving them of their authority or official situations,* and the instances in question, as well as the return of his Excellency's good-humour, were sufficiently accounted for by the known fickleness and weakness of his Excellency's character. The enemies of Moatummud-ood-Dowlah (Agha Meer) were always at hand, to take advantage of any opportunity of exciting his Excellency's displeasure at that person, but until the occasion offered by the absence of the Minister in attendance on his Excellency's son, who was deputed by the Vizier to visit me at this station, they were not able to accomplish their purpose. It is not necessary for me to enter into any detail of the intrigues and artifices by which this object has been ultimately effected; for so I consider it to be, since although the Minister and the Dewan both retain their situations nominally, they have ceased to exercise their official functions. Major Baillie's despatches noted in the margin contain all the information I possess on that subject, and the tenor of the latest of them, and of his Excellency's letter to me, indicates a disposition on the part of the Vizier to dismiss them from office, and to combine with this measure the recall of Hukeem Mehdee. Major Baillie has also reported the entire suspension of the progress of the reform since the departure of the Minister and the Dewan from Lucknow on the duty above referred to. Their loss of the Vizier's favour is ascribed by Major Baillie to the insidious misrepresentations made by their enemies of the exertions of the Minister in prosecuting the reform, and in the part they took in the negotiation of the second loan of a crore of rupees, and other acts manifesting their desire to promote the objects of the British Government as connected with the affairs of Oude. All these acts are represented to the Vizier as so many proofs of the entire devotion of the Ministers to the British Government and the Resident, and his Excellency is made to believe that their continuance in office is incompatible with the preservation of his legitimate authority and guaranteed independence. The weakness of the Vizier's character was not proof against these artful insinuations. On these points, embracing so many important consequences, I shall probably have shortly to address your Honourable Court.

35. I shall now lay before your Honourable Court a summary of the proceedings connected with the deputation of his Excellency's son to Futtygurh, and such other points referred to in the recent correspondence with the Resident at Lucknow, as it appears proper to include in this despatch.

36. In the month of March, soon after my arrival at Futtygurh, the Vizier stated his intention† to depute his minister, Moatummud-ood-Dowlah, to congratulate me on the completion of my tour, and to charge him at the same time, with a paper of requests, to which he was instructed to obtain my answers. His Excellency ultimately resolved on sending his only son, the Nawaub Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder, on this mission, attended by the Minister and the Dewan, entrusting to the charge of the Minister the business to which the paper of requests referred. The Nawaub, attended by the Ministers, arrived at Futtygurh on the 15th of June, and commenced his return to Lucknow on the 24th of that month, during which time I endeavoured, by every demonstration of attention and kindness to the Nawaub, and of courtesy to the Minister, to manifest my friendship and regard for his Excellency the Vizier. During their residence here I had several interviews on business with the Minister and Dewan, at which his Excellency's paper of requests was produced, and the tenor of those requests and of my answers discussed.‡ The latter were finally committed to writing, and a paper under my seal and signature containing them was delivered to the Minister.

37. His

37. His Excellency's requests and my answers were in substance as follows.

1st. Relative to the contumacy of Nuseer-ood-Dowlah and the Vizier's other brothers and relations.

In my answer to his Excellency's former papers, I had declared that I considered his Excellency to be possessed of uncontrolled authority over his brothers and relations.

I was not aware of any means, on my part, of strengthening his Excellency's authority in that respect, without I gave an assurance of so unqualified a nature as might be interpreted into a sanction for severity, which the British Government would never think it just to countenance: I therefore so fashioned my answer, as to convey to his Excellency the fullest assurances of my desire to uphold his authority over his brother and the other members of his family, but to reserve the right of interposing to correct or mitigate any proceeding founded on false or exaggerated statements. "The fitness of such interposition must be determined by the circumstances of each particular case, and the Resident's knowledge of my sentiments and principles of action with reference to the Government of Oude will enable him to regulate his conduct.

2d Relative to the alleged conduct of Shums-ood-Dowlah.

I saw no reason to suppose that these charges against Shums-ood-Dowlah originated in any other cause than the Vizier's natural jealousy and suspicion of his brother. There could be no hesitation, however, on my part, in conveying the most positive assurances to his Excellency, that such proceedings on the part of Shums-ood-Dowlah as were ascribed to him, would not only receive no countenance from the British Government but be severely reprobated, and that assurance was accordingly given.

3d Expressing his Excellency's desire to be put in possession of the wealth of the Bhow Begum at her demise.

The tenor of the engagement with the Bhow Begum imposes on the British Government the obligation of securing to her relations and dependants the bequests allotted to them by her Highness's testamentary disposition of her property, which can only be effectually done by vesting in the hands of the Honourable Company a fund adequate to the purpose. It is certain, too, that the Begum considered the arrangement to be entirely independent of the Vizier's Government, and the British Government is bound to act on that construction. Admitting the Vizier's present indisposition to fulfil the objects of her Highness's will, it is obvious that occasions might (and judging from past experience, there is no doubt that they would) frequently arise for discussion and altercation relative to the stipends, which would disturb the harmony between the two Governments, and the objects happily secured by the terms of the first loan would thus be defeated, by the introduction of new causes of altercation and dispute. A compliance with the Vizier's wishes in this instance was therefore inadmissible, and I declined it, on the grounds of our faith being pledged to the Begum to carry the arrangement into effect in the manner expressed in the engagement, adding the most satisfactory assurances relative to her Highness's surplus wealth and the reversion of the jagiers.

4th. Requesting that Khyreegurh and a portion of the territories that may be conquered from the Goorkahs may be granted to his Excellency, either as a compensation for the loan or otherwise.

In reply to this, I stated, that I was earnestly desirous of meeting his Excellency's wishes in this respect, and that when the country should be conquered from the Goorkahs, and the insurrection then prevailing be suppressed and peace with the Goorkahs have taken place, I should be prepared to enter on the consideration of the subject. It appears to me to be an object of considerable importance, to render the transfer of Khyreegurh, and the rest of the Goorkah terrace lying contiguous to the Vizier's territories, a means of reducing a considerable portion, or perhaps the whole of the last loan of a crore of rupees, by adopting an arrangement of the nature spontaneously suggested by the Vizier; but in the imperfect state of my information on the subject of the resources of that country, which indeed could not yet be considered at our disposal, I did not judge it advisable to make any more specific assurance to his Excellency than that above stated.

38. I availed myself of the occasion of my last interview with the Minister, to express the sense cherished by the British Government of the extraordinary liberality of his Excellency in the pecuniary aid which he afforded to the Government during the late season of actual and apprehended exigency, and to satisfy his Excellency's mind by an assurance that the British Government did not entertain the intention of again trespassing on the liberality of his Excellency's disposition.

Political Letter
from Lord Moira.
15 Aug. 1815.

39. In the letter which I addressed to the Vizier, giving cover to the paper containing my answers to his requests, I adverted to the progress of the measure of reform in the revenue and administration of Oude, and other arrangements for the improvement of the country, adopted at the instance of the British Government, in the hope that this would testify the importance attached by the British Government to the success of those arrangements, and afford the Resident, if necessary, an opportunity of drawing his Excellency's attention to the subject. The Minister was apprized of the contents of the Governor-General's letter to the Vizier.

40. The necessity of such a suggestion was becoming very apparent, and his Excellency about this time addressed a letter to me,* proposing that the allowance of ten per cent. on the revenues, which had been allowed to the Tehsildars under the new system, should be abolished, and fixed salaries assigned to them instead, with a view to the reduction of expense. There was every reason to believe that this proposition had been suggested to him with a view to impede the progress of the reform, an effect which it certainly appeared to me calculated to produce, by discouraging the Tehsildars and weakening their zeal and exertions: I therefore replied to his Excellency,† dissuading him from the measure, at least until the close of the year, stating at some length my reasons for this advice. I beg to refer your Honourable Court to the recorded correspondence for information on this subject.

Letter from, dated 18th May 1814. Respecting the negotiation with the Nawaub Vizier for effecting a reform in the administration of his Excellency's affairs.

Par. 79. Our despatch in the Political Department of the 18th February 1814, paragraphs 131 to 135, contained a summary view of your proceedings at that time before us, on the subject of your negotiation with the Nawaub Vizier for effecting a general reform in the internal administration of his Excellency's affairs, and we expressed our regret that the negotiation, so ably and zealously conducted on the part of the Resident at the Vizier's Court, under your instructions, for the attainment of that object, had failed of success. In the one hundred and seventieth paragraph of our subsequent despatch of the 30th September 1814, we signified our approbation of the general tenor and purport of the Governor-General's (Lord Minto's) letter of remonstrance to the Nawaub Vizier of the 8th May 1812, urging his Excellency to adopt a line of conduct more creditable to himself and more consistent with the obligations of existing treaties.

80. The death of the Nawaub Vizier since the date of your letter before us, has rendered any minute observations on the narrative therein contained respecting the continuance of the negotiation unnecessary. We are not prepared to say that his Excellency in the course of the negotiation was not on some occasions urged with too much vehemence to adopt the plan of reform which had been proposed to him. It appearing, however, that his Excellency continued to entertain a decided repugnance to the particular plan of reform which had been submitted to him by Lord Minto (though he had at one time given his consent thereto), and to any modification of it consonant to the sentiments and wishes at that time entertained by your Government on that important point, and as no hopes could be entertained of success from any further endeavours short of compulsion to carry that measure into execution in the precise form in which it had hitherto been urged, we concur entirely in the view taken of the subject in the instructions which were issued to the Resident on the 25th March 1814,‡ pointing out the necessity of desisting from the further prosecution of the original original arrangement, but at the same time calling upon his Excellency to state his own views upon the subject, in such a manner as to lay a foundation for the discussion and eventual adoption of a plan, which though not embracing the full extent of the system which had been recommended to him, might yet produce considerable practical improvement in the conduct of his administration and in the condition of his subjects; but we are greatly concerned that the subsequent illness and death of the Vizier put a period to further proceedings on this highly important subject.

81. We feel it proper to take this opportunity of expressing our desire, that in the event of the discussion being resumed with the present Vizier, you will not, however favourably disposed his Excellency may be to attend to your suggestions, proceed to introduce into his dominions any system of administration which shall not be founded upon a due and considerate attention to the established institutions and general usages of the country. Without enlarging upon the subject in this place, we would refer you for our sentiments in regard to a premature introduction of our system, especially in States where it must be administered by natives, to our Political Letter to the Government of Fort St. George, dated 10th August 1814.

Par. 3. In the eightieth paragraph of our letter in the Political Department, dated the 22d March 1816, we expressed our concern at the melancholy event of the death of the Vizier, Saadut Alee Khan, and we have now to signify our approbation of the prompt and judicious measures pursued by Colonel Baillie, the Resident at Lucknow, under your instructions for securing the tranquil succession of the legal heir to the musnud of Oude, as reported in his letter of the 12th July 1814. By this course of proceeding, the supposed designs of the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah for possessing himself of the throne, to the exclusion of his brother, the Nawaub Ghazee-ood-Deen Hyder Khan Refaut-ood-Dowlah, were frustrated, and we have the pleasure to observe, that the accession of the Vizier was effectually established without the smallest interruption to the public tranquillity.

4. The arrangements adopted by you in support of the new administration, appear to have for their object the strengthening and consolidating those ties of friendship and alliance which have so long existed between the State of Oude and the British Government, and were calculated to impress upon the former our solicitude to maintain unimpaired the amicable relations so happily established between the two States.

(8 to 11, and 37, 38.) Stating that the Vizier had accommodated Government with the loan of two crores of rupees.

5. We have derived a great satisfaction from the communication made to us in these paragraphs, of the voluntary offer on the part of the Vizier, of a loan of a crore of rupees, and we are sensible of the zeal for the public interests which induced the Governor-General to prevail on the Vizier subsequently to extend that amount to two crores of rupees. We consider the important aid rendered to our finances by his Excellency as manifesting on his part the cordial interest he feels in the prosperity of our affairs.

6. We approve of the arrangement entered into with his Excellency for the permanent assignment of the interest on the first loan, to which the further sum of eight lacs fifty thousand rupees has been added, in payment of the pensions granted by the Vizier under the guarantee of the British Government, which we observe, by the statement* accompanying the letter from the Resident at Lucknow of the 29th November 1814, amount to six lacs fifty-one thousand rupees per annum. In giving our sanction to this measure, we trust that the hope entertained by our Governor-General of putting an end to a fruitless source of debate and and vexatious discussion between the Vizier and the Resident, will not be disappointed.

Political Letter to Bengal,
17 Sept. 1817.

7. We expect to be informed of the result of the arrangements in progress, alluded to in the thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth paragraphs of the letter now under reply, for redeeming the last loan of a crore of rupees, by the transfer to the Vizier of the district of Khyreegurh and the rest of the Goorkah territory contiguous to his Excellency's territories, in compliance with the spontaneous proposition made to you by his Excellency to that effect.

8. Such further observations as we may deem necessary to offer on the subject of our pecuniary transactions with the State of Oude will be communicated from the Financial Department.

o 15). Provision allotted by ier to his brother, Shums-wlah, and to the late Vi-ther-in-law, Rumzaun Aleé

9. The conduct and suspected designs of Shums-ood-Dowlah immediately after the decease of the late Vizier, and the estrangement which existed between him and his brother, rendered it necessary to the tranquillity of the Government of Oude that a firm but conciliatory course of policy should be observed towards Shums-ood-Dowlah. We therefore approve of the arrangement adopted by the Governor General in concurrence with the Vizier, permitting Shums-ood-Dowlah to retire to Benares on a stipend of a lac and a half of rupees per annum, which was assigned to him by his Excellency, and of which you have guaranteed the payment from your treasury.

10. We notice with satisfaction the success which attended the efforts of our Governor-General, as reported in his Lordship's letter* to the Vice-President in Council of the 29th December 1814, to ameliorate the situation of Rumzaun Aleé Khan, whose services, in having conveyed to the Resident at Lucknow the early intelligence of the decease of the Vizier, enabled Colonel Baillie to make timely arrangements for securing the undisturbed succession of the present Vizier, and we approve of the stipend of 58,212 rupees per annum granted by the Vizier to Rumzaun Aleé Khan at the recommendation of Marquess Hastings being included among those to be paid by your Government.

40.) Négotiation for the rethe Administration of Oude
l with the present Vizier.

12. Our sentiments on this important subject have been so fully communicated to you in our despatches from this department of the 18th February and 30th September 1814, and 22d March 1816, that it is unnecessary for us in this place to enter much at length into the subject of these paragraphs; more particularly, as in the eighty-first paragraph of our last-mentioned letter we expressed our desire, that in the event of the discussion being resumed with the present Vizier, you would not, however favourably disposed his Excellency might be to attend to your suggestions, proceed to introduce into his dominions any system of administration which should not be founded upon a due and considerate attention to the established institutions and general usages of the country. We concur in the sentiments expressed by the Governor-General in the sixteenth and twentieth paragraphs of his letter to Colonel Baillie of the 12th November 1814,† and we agree with his Lordship, that "in construing the terms of the recorded engagements between the Honorable Company and the Nawaub of Oude, it is required by every principle of justice, that the most liberal and comprehensive meaning should be given to such articles of the treaty of 1801 as are in favour of that party, whose weakness presents no security for him but in that good faith on which he has relied."

The documents above referred to, with the explanatory observations which I have added, in order to shew my view of the extraordinary transactions to which they relate, appear to me to place the whole case in such a point of view, as to enable your Honourable Court to form a judgment on the question, without the necessity of any additional remark on my part: I shall, therefore, instead of attempting to state the substance of those papers in such a summary form as would be consistent with the limits of a despatch, solicit the attention of your Honourable Court to the documents themselves.

Governor-General's despatch to the Vice-President in Council, under date the 29th December 1814, relative to the affairs of Oude, and recorded on the proceedings noted in the margin.* The style and tenor of that despatch appearing to the Governor-General to render it indispensably necessary that Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie should be removed from the office of Resident at Lucknow, for the reasons stated by his Lordship in a minute recorded on the same proceedings, that measure was carried into effect with the concurrence of the Board, expressed in minutes recorded by the Members of the Council on the same proceedings, and Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie has since proceeded to England on furlough.

2. The object of this despatch, is to lay before your Honourable Court the enclosed copy of a minute of the Governor-General, containing a detailed review of the whole transaction, and which it is the request of his Lordship may be taken into consideration by your Honourable Court at the time when the proceedings containing Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie's despatch shall come before you.

3. A separate minute has been recorded by Mr. Edmonstone, referring to one part of the Governor-General's minute, in which Mr. Edmonstone considered the measures of the former Government to be animadverted on. A copy of that minute, and of a further minute by the Governor-General, and of one also recorded by Mr. Seton, are transmitted as numbers in the packet.

Ordered, That the following letter from his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, together with its several enclosures, be here recorded.

Letter from
Governor-General.

To His Excellency Sir G. Nugent, K. B., Vice-President in Council.

Honourable Sir :

1. Being desirous of bringing under your notice, and of placing on the records of Government, a complete statement of my proceedings during my late visit to Lucknow, I now proceed to fulfil that purpose, which the extraordinary pressure of public business has hitherto compelled me to postpone.

2. In my letter of the 29th of October last, I had the honour to apprise you of my having accepted, on the part of the Honourable Company, of a loan of a crore of rupees from his Excellency the Vizier, and I intimated my intention of making an arrangement for the payment of the interest of that sum, from which I hoped that mutual benefit would be derived by the British Government and by that of Oude.

3. The correspondence of the Resident at Lucknow will have apprized you of the nature of that arrangement, and together with the copy of my final instructions on the subject to Major Baillie, transmitted to the Presidency on the

Governor-General.

4. I feel a confident persuasion that the transfer to the Honourable Company of the obligation of paying directly from its own treasury those stipends for which it is the guarantee, will destroy a fruitful source of debate and vexatious discussion between the Vizier and the Resident, the evil effects of which have been so frequently a matter of regret, while their occurrence was almost unavoidable.

5. Your Excellency in Council will observe, that among the stipends now to be paid by the Honourable Company are that of the Vizier's brother, the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, who has retired to Benares, and the stipend to Rumzaun Alee Khan, the brother-in-law of the late Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan.

6. The conduct and designs of Shums-ood-Dowlah, immediately after the demise of the late Vizier, although happily frustrated by the vigilance of the Resident, could not fail to produce a feeling in the mind both of the Vizier and of his brother, which would render the residence of the latter within the dominions of Oude incompatible with the comfort or tranquillity of either. The Vizier could not, with any confidence or satisfaction, associate with a brother, whom he knew to have entertained the design of excluding him from the musnad, and to have appealed to the British Government against the succession as it had actually been established; and the necessary consequence was, the estrangement of Shums-ood-Dowlah from his brother's Court, and his destitution of the dignity, honour, consideration, and power, which he possessed during his father's life-time: a change in his condition which could not be borne with tranquillity.

7. I soon found this previously conceived opinion fully justified; and your Excellency in Council will perceive in the documents marked Number I, of that series to which I shall more particularly refer in a subsequent paragraph, that an indirect expression of the Vizier's wish for the removal of his brother from Oude was conveyed to me by his Excellency. Although the paper which contained it was afterwards withdrawn, the real inclination of the Vizier was not the less certain, and the removal of his brother has undoubtedly been to him a source of the highest satisfaction.

8. With respect to Shums-ood Dowlah, your Excellency in Council will be pleased to observe, that he made also a direct application to me* to be permitted to retire within the Honourable Company's provinces; a circumstance which removed all difficulty in carrying the arrangement into effect.

9. It was to be supposed, that the expectation of Shums-ood-Dowlah, with regard to the stipend to be received by him at Benares, would exceed the disposition of the Vizier: but the mediation of the Resident, under my orders, effected an adjustment, which appears to me to combine a due consideration for the rank and station of Shums-ood-Dowlah, with that regard to the wishes of the Vizier which he was entitled to expect at my hands.]

10. The document marked F. of those annexed to this letter is the translation of a paper delivered to me by Shums-ood-Dowlah on the occasion of a private interview which I had with him at Cawnpore on the 11th of October. On this occasion I stated to Shums-ood-Dowlah that his recent conduct, as reported to me by the Resident, had superseded, in my mind, those sentiments which his proceedings immediately after the demise of the late Vizier could not fail to excite with relation to him, and that as long as he pursued the conduct which had received my approbation, and manifested towards his brother and Sovereign that deference, respect, and obedience, which were due to him, he might be assured of the protection and consideration of the British Government.

ment. At this time I was not apprized of the contents of his paper, which on subsequent inspection did not appear to me to require any answer.

11. The Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah received his formal audience of leave from the Vizier, in my presence, on the 10th November, and departed from Lucknow on the 6th December.

12. It is proper that I should state the grounds on which I deemed it expedient and just to interfere with the Vizier in behalf of Rumzaun Alec Khan.

13. This person, as is known to your Excellency in Council, held an office which placed him in immediate attendance on the late Vizier, and he was the only person with his Excellency when he was seized with the illness which suddenly terminated his life. The Resident has reported, in his despatch of the 12th of July, that he received the intelligence of the Vizier's dangerous situation from Rumzaun Alec Khan, who with praiseworthy fidelity and good sense proceeded directly to the Resident, carefully concealing the circumstance from every body else, and thus enabled Major Baillie to take those timely and effectual measures which secured the tranquil accession of the legitimate heir and frustrated the designs of his enemies.

14. Considering the direct interest which the British Government has in the tranquillity of Oude, and the embarrassment, inconvenience, and expense to which it would have been exposed in the event of a disputed succession, or of disturbance and insurrection, which would have been the consequence of a public knowledge of the death of the late Vizier before the Resident's arrangements were completed, I cannot but consider Rumzaun Alec Khan to have rendered an essential service, both to the British Government and to the Vizier, and I accordingly deemed it to be my duty to recommend him strongly to the favour and countenance of his Excellency. I regret to say, that this measure had become necessary, in consequence of the too apparent disposition of the Vizier to forget the obligation which he owed to Rumzaun Alec Khan, and that the latter had already experienced marks of his Excellency's displeasure, for which no part of his conduct, as far as I could learn, afforded just ground.

15. I was happy to find that, in consequence of my recommendation of Rumzaun Alec Khan, the Vizier spontaneously proposed that his stipend, amounting to Rupees 58,212 per annum, should be included among those to be paid by the Honourable Company, and added to the loan a further sum of eight lacs and a-half of rupees to meet this additional payment.

16. Your Excellency in Council will observe, that my recommendation to his Excellency in favour of Rumzaun Alec Khan was, that he might continue to enjoy the stipend of which he was actually in the receipt, and that he might be indemnified for the loss of the emoluments of the offices which he held about the person of the late Vizier, in the event of the present Vizier dispensing with his services; and according to my recollection, and that of the gentlemen who were present at the conference at which the object was agitated, his Excellency signified his acquiescence. It now appears from Major Baillie's despatch of the 6th instant, that his Excellency did not consider his assent to be given to more than a confirmation of his pension. As the Vizier has stated his intention to address me directly on this subject, I have suspended any communication either to his Excellency or to Major Baillie. My opinion is, that the advantage already secured to Rumzaun Alec Khan is liberal and ample; and if I find his Excellency extremely averse to any extension of his liberality, I do not propose to urge it. I shall think it proper, however, to repeat my orders to the Resident to represent to the Vizier the merits and services of Rumzaun Alec Khan, and the injury which his Excellency's reputation must sustain from any harsh and unmerited treatment of a person to whom he is so greatly indebted.

17. I have deemed it requisite to advert to this case at more length than it may seem to demand, as it constitutes the only one in which I found it necessary to interfere interfere in behalf of any individual at the Vizier's Court, and the only one of that description which can, I conceive, give rise to any discussion of an unpleasant nature between his Excellency and the Resident. I trust, however, that this is improbable, as the direct payment of the stipend obviates the principal cause of difference.

Letter from
Governor-General.

18. I now beg leave to draw the attention of your Excellency in Council to the enclosed documents, Nos. 1 to 13, which contain the details of all the remaining transactions relative to the affairs of Lucknow, which occupied my attention during my residence at that capital.

19. To those documents I have added a paper of observations drawn up for the purpose of conveying more clearly my view of the extraordinary transactions to which they relate, and I request that it may be recorded with the other papers.

20. The documents themselves, with my explanatory observations, appear to me to place the whole case in such a point of view, as to enable your Excellency in Council, and ultimately the authorities at home, to form a judgment on the question, without the necessity of any additional remark on my part.

21. There are only two other points on which I deem it necessary to state some observations, namely, the appointment by the Vizier of a Minister, and a Paishcar and Dewan, and the removal of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan from Lucknow.

22. Your Excellency is too well acquainted with the conduct of Hukeem Mehdee, and his uniform opposition to our just views at the Court of Lucknow, as recorded in the official correspondence with the Resident, to render it necessary for me to state the considerations which induced me to urge his removal from the presence and councils of the Vizier. His talents and capacity for business, together with his insinuating manners and address, gave him a decided ascendancy over the mind of the Vizier, which he would undoubtedly have exercised, as he had done before, to subvert and destroy the just and legitimate influence of the British Government in his Excellency's administration.

23. The appointment of an efficient and responsible Minister at the Court of Oude has long been an object of anxiety with the British Government. In the life-time of the late Vizier the existence of such a channel of communication between the Vizier and the Resident would undoubtedly have prevented much of that vexatious and unpleasant altercation which has so frequently excited the regret and concern of this Government. The character of his successor affords less ground of apprehension than similar impediments to the cordial co-operation of the two Governments, in the prosecution of objects of common interest, will arise in future; but there are defects in it which strongly point out the importance of there being an efficient Minister for the conduct of the details of the Government, possessing equally the confidence of the Vizier and of the British Government.

24. I regret to state, that I cannot consider this object to be attained, to the extent of my wishes, by the arrangements recently made, though I conceive them to be likely to be attained with advantage to a certain extent.

25. Having deemed it to be my duty, for the reasons stated, to object to Hukeem Mehdee as Minister, his Excellency next proposed the appointment of his confidential servant, Agha Meer, to be Paishcar, and Race Dya-Krishen to be Dewan,* to act in their respective offices in the name of his Excellency's son, on whom he conferred the nominal office of Minister.

26. Not deeming myself warranted in opposing his Excellency's wishes regarding his choice of Ministers, except in a case when it might fall on a person known to be adverse to the interests of the British Government, and to the true and just principles of the connection between that Government and the State of Oude, I had only to acquiesce in his Excellency's selection.

27. Agha Meer, the Paishcar, has been in the Vizier's service from his infancy, and is believed to possess his confidence. He is not, however, a person of the rank, talents, or experience in business, to qualify him for the office to which he has been appointed. There is little doubt that his advice would have swayed his master, even had he remained in a private capacity; and it might, and probably would, often have been opposed to that of the ostensible minister. In this point of view, therefore, some advantage may be derived from his appointment to an ostensible and efficient office in the State.

28. The Dewan, Dya-Krishen, has long been at the head of the Vizier's revenue department, and bears a good character for integrity and knowledge of business; but he does not possess that degree of weight and influence which might be wished. I am not aware, however, that a more unexceptionable person could have been selected for the office.

29. I have no reason to doubt the attachment of both the Paishcar and the Dewan to the British Government, or their disposition to promote the interests of the two States. Indeed, notwithstanding the opinion which I have expressed of their unfitness, in some respects, for the situations to which they have been named, it would not be easy to say, adverting to the dearth of character, talent, and integrity at the Court of Lucknow, that fitter persons could be found; and I indulge a hope, that the business of the Government will be conducted with as much regularity, order, and propriety, as can be expected, under the actual circumstances of that Court.

30. I deemed it proper to be present at the investiture of the Minister and the two subordinate officers, which took place at the Vizier's palace on the 10th November. Major Baillie's subsequent reports of the conduct of the Ministers has, as your Excellency in Council will observe, been favourable.

31. Your Excellency in Council will have observed with satisfaction, from the Resident's despatch of the 6th instant,* that his Excellency has renewed in the most unqualified terms his assent to the plan of reform proposed by the British Government, and I trust that it will now be carried into effect with as much expedition as circumstances will admit.

32. His Excellency has also issued orders to his officers which, I trust, will contribute to the efficiency of the police of the Honourable Company's districts adjoining the territory of Oude. The correspondence on this subject, excepting such part as either is included in the enclosures Nos. 32 and 33, or has been already forwarded, will be separately transmitted.

33. I request that your Excellency will direct copies of this despatch and the documents enclosed in it, to be prepared for transmission at an early period to the Honourable the Court of Directors. I propose to address the Honourable Court on the subject without delay.

From the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, Brother of His Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Received the 3d November 1814.)

(After expressions of respect and of desire for the honour of a personal meeting:)

The state of the case is this: by reason of the infinite sorrow and unhappiness which I experienced on the demise of my father, I immediately determined to remove to Benares, to which place I am naturally attached. Accordingly, I repeatedly spoke to Major Baillie on this subject. Being still fixed in my resolution to go to Benares, and having no desire whatever to remain in Lucknow, I hope that your Lordship, in your great kindness and favour, will obtain for me the consent of his Excellency the Vizier, and the payment to me, at at the former city, of the monthly personal allowance of 25,000 rupees, including my present stipend, and some increase, and also of the allowance as hitherto, of 3,171 rupees 14 annas for my mother, my muhl, and my children. Let the garden at Doorga Koon and its dependencies, together with the other buildings there, and also the rumna on the banks of the Ganges, and the houses in the city situated in the Chouk, and the house known by the name of Jetuk Raee's House, be also made over to me, that they may become my right and property. I have further to request, that your Lordship will write with your own hand to the chief authority at Benares, directing him to afford me his aid and assistance in all matters, and that a British guard may be directed to attend me to Benares for my protection by the way. Let my stipend be discharged by regular monthly payments, agreeably to the enclosed statement; that being thus at my ease with regard to my expenses, I may pass my days in quiet, secure under the protection of the Honourable Company's Government, and full of gratitude and acknowledgments for the kindness of your Lordship and the Honourable Company.

Translation

Translation of a Paper delivered to the Governor-General by the Nawaub Shumood-Dowlah, second Son of the late Nawaub Vizier, dated 11th October 1814.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
7 Mar. 1815.

The state of the case is this:—My revered parent, the late Nawaub Vizier, first selected me from amongst his other sons, and honoured me with the appointment of "General." Afterwards, when the Marquess Wellesley came to Lucknow, my late father was pleased to nominate me his Naib (or Prime Minister), and appointing me his Kaim Mokām (or Representative), placed my hand in that of his Lordship's, who offered me his cordial congratulations on the occasion. With his Lordship's concurrence, all my brothers and the nobles of the Court and commanders of the troops were required to present nuzzurs to me, and a salute was fired in honour of the event. During my father's life I also enjoyed various other marks of distinction, such as receiving richer and superior khillats, being deputed to represent him in the procession on the days of the two eeds (festivals), when I was attended by all my brothers, and went in the same state as if my father himself were present. Shookhas (or mandates) were issued throughout all his dominions under my seal. The Annals of Government and others received khillats in my house, and that distinction was conferred on several individuals at my recommendation. The keys of the treasuries and other places were consigned to my charge, my signature was affixed to all papers, and the English gentlemen were entertained at breakfast, and on other occasions, at my house. I was left as his representative in the capital when he went out on a hunting party, and the Resident, or his Assistant, whichever of them might be in Lucknow, came to breakfast with me. I enjoyed various other marks of distinction of a similar description, which it is unnecessary to particularize, as the British Government is fully apprized of all these circumstances, and they are as generally known as the sun in his meridian splendour. On a recent occasion, when his late Excellency perceived me depressed in spirits, in consequence of the bodily ailments under which he was then suffering, he cheered and comforted me in the kindest manner, and with that cordial affection which he always entertained for me observed, "By the divine favour I shall soon be restored to health; and as I am, in all respects, pleased and satisfied with your filial duty, submission, and becoming conduct, rest assured that my love and kindness towards you will increase every day. Do you continue to walk in the path of obedience, and to employ your precious days in the regulation of the affairs of Government, and be not uneasy or disheartened. As soon as my kind friend, the Governor General (Lord Moira), on whose gracious disposition I place the most perfect reliance, shall come here, the regulation of all the affairs of this Government, and what will tend to your interest and advantage both now and hereafter, will be accomplished by his Lordship's favour." Alas! a hundred times alas! that my father should have died before your Lordship's arrival here, leaving me wretched to deplore his untimely loss, and carrying with him to his grave all his anxious hope for an interview with your Lordship, and all his other wishes, the accomplishment of which depended on his meeting with your Excellency. This line of some one is applicable to his case: "I died in grief and carried with me this wish to my grave." Your Lordship will judge with what feelings of regret and disappointment I witnessed this dreadful calamity: my sorrow, indeed, did not leave me master of myself. Now that the spring of your Lordship's presence has given fresh verdure and beauty to these plains, and has breathed new life into my chilly frame, I am filled with confident expectation that the field of my hopes and the garden of my wishes will become more fertile and flourishing than ever, when watered by the generous shower of your Lordship's kindness and favour. Until my father drew his latest breath, I enjoyed his good opinion and his approbation of my duty and submission, and the promotion of the pleasure and satisfaction of the Governor-General and the Honourable Company entirely absorb my thoughts. I consider my welfare and advantage, and the settlement of all my concerns, to depend on the favour and grace, and the kindness and favour of your Excellency. Under these circumstances, it is evident that whatever favour and kindness shall be shewn to me, will convey peace to the spirit of my departed father, and will equally redound to your Excellency's reputation, as it will oblige me and command my gratitude.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
7 Mar. 1815.

From the time of Shooja-ood-Dowlah till the demise of his late Excellency, no infringement of any treaty or engagement between our house and the Government of the Honourable Company has ever taken place; and from the time of my father's Government and since his death, I have never committed any action which could expose me to the displeasure of your Lordship and the British Government, and be a cause of shame and sorrow to myself or give rise to discussion. I beg your Excellency to be assured, that nothing but obedience to your Lordship and the British Government will ever be manifested by me. And now that I have taken shelter, under the shade of your favour and justice, from the scorching rays of the sun of calamity, I hope to experience whatever is worthy of your infinite kindness and distinguished favour; for I hold alone by the strong cord of your gracious consideration and regard.

Persian Secretary to the Governor-General.

Translation of a Paper (No. 1) delivered to the Governor-General by the Nawaub Vizier. (13th October 1814.)

1. Praise be to God that the Prophet has said, "I render thanks to the Most High that I was born in the age of Noshervan the just." In like manner I, who am the slave of the Prophet, unquestionably rejoice with sincerity of heart, that by the divine blessing my establishment on the hereditary musnud of the Vezārut and in the Government of my ancestors, has taken place in the time of so just and cordial a friend as your Lordship: and although, agreeably to the custom of Kings and Viziers, both past and present, and especially to the custom of this family, I possessed the right to the hereditary Government, and the musnud of the Vezārut of my ancestors belonging to me, yet if it had not been for the support and assistance of your Lordship, who is my kind friend and benefactor, it was not possible that the right should have been settled in favour of the rightful person, that is to say, myself. Therefore what has been, and what will be, is all to be ascribed to your Lordship's gracious assistance; and while I live I shall ever be bound in gratitude to your Lordship for such favour. It is a tradition of the Prophet's, that whoever has not made the return of gratitude to his benefactor for favours received, has not made the return of gratitude for the mercies of his God.

2. The degree of cordial friendship and union which have ever subsisted between the Honourable Company and this House is more evident than the sun: nay, it is beyond the power of speech or writing to express it. Notwithstanding the right to the hereditary musnud of the Vezārut was possessed by my grandfather, (Shooja-ood-Dowlah,) still at the time when this country (Oude) had fallen into the powerful hands of the Company, if it had not pleased them in their favour to continue the said hereditary possessions to my grandfather as in former times, it was not possible that the rule of this house could have endured. The favours conferred by the Company have no bounds nor measure.

3. It is universally known, that every one who takes another by the hand, considers him as himself, or reckons him as his dependant, or looks upon him as one on his own part, and consequently has always at heart to promote his interests and welfare, and daily to give more and more stability to his concerns: I, who in every point of view have been taken by the hand by your Lordship and the Honourable Company, regard the arrival of your Lordship as a particular dispensation of mercy.

4. I feel assured, that with respect to whatever will conduce to my benefit and welfare by the kindness of your Lordship, my Government (Kooar) will be strengthened under any circumstance more than ever was that of my forefathers.

5. In consequence of the firm friendship and intimate union established between the Honourable Company and my ancestors, your Lordship has been kindly and graciously pleased to act in conformity to former treaties, and to execute a treaty with me to the effect of those treaties. As by treaty treaty my father and grandfather were the masters and managers (Mālick-Moktaur) of their country, and had the control and management of the affairs of their Government, let me, who am in every respect under obligations to your Lordship and have been taken by the hand, have the management of my country and the affairs of my Government, in all things like my father. I regard your Lordship, who is my cordial friend, as my late father; and in like manner as it was my duty to obey him, so I shall consider it to be my duty, still more, to seek your Lordship's satisfaction.

Consultations,

6. In the time of my late grandfather, Shooja-ood-Dowlah, it happened that Mooneer-ood-Dowlah wrote whatever lies and calumnies he pleased to the Governor-General, Mr. Hastings, regarding Shooja-ood-Dowlah's levying troops to oppose the British Government. The Governor-General came to Benares to investigate the truth of this. My grandfather, being conscious of the purity of his intentions, came to Benares with his ladies and family in the height of the rainy season, when the roads were nearly impassable, and had a meeting with the Governor-General, who was so pleased and satisfied that he delivered the letters of Mooneer-ood-Dowlah to him, observing that their contents had been the sole cause of his proceeding to Benares. When the calumnies and mischievous designs of Mooneer-ood-Dowlah became clear, the Governor-General being extremely pleased and satisfied with my grandfather, said to him on his taking leave, that he might raise as many troops as he wished. Thus, with respect to myself, if in like manner any one make a false representation, either verbally or by letter, let it not be listened to; for in every circumstance I am, and ever will be, desirous to seek your Lordship's satisfaction.

7. After the demise of my grandfather, when my uncle, the Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, ascended the musnud of the Vezārut, all his brothers, although their stipends were small, remained submissive and obedient to him. In nowise did they swerve from the path of subjection and submission. For example, my late father, who was then at Benares and received an allowance of three lacs of rupees from Asuf-ood-Dowlah, through the Honourable Company's Government, made no objection when his brother reduced that allowance to two lacs, and was submissive and obedient. As to my brothers, who receive large stipends, and such as the Nawaub Shooja-ood-Dowlah never granted to his children, I have made no reduction in those stipends, and will not make any; but let your Lordship give them in a manner to understand, that the power of increasing and diminishing their stipends is in my hands. In that event, they will all render due obedience, and my authority will suffer no diminution; a thing which will be extremely gratifying to the heart of your Lordship, my kind friend.

8. Your Lordship may have heard, or will hear, what language is held in his own family by my brother, Shums-ood-Dowlah, at the instigation, and by the evil advice of some wicked counsellors, regarding certain matters which are contrary to the usages of this house and in opposition to the determination of your Lordship. Under all circumstances, I hold my brother as dear as my own life. No alteration shall be made in the amount of his stipend. With respect to his remaining here or residing in the Honourable Company's dominions, as the interests of both States are identified and they are one and the same, he is at liberty to do as he pleases. In the event of his continuing to reside at Lucknow, let him not object to, or excuse himself from conforming to my orders on any matters, a compliance with which is agreeable to the special usages of this Government, and will be a source of satisfaction to your Lordship.

9. Besides my late father, who resided at Benares, the Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah had many brothers who lived at Lucknow, and whose friendship and attachment to the Honourable Company were evident. Nevertheless, the Governor-General received no visits from any of them, but with the concurrence and pleasure of my father. Your Lordship is, in every respect, my kind friend. On this point, whatever your judgment shall decide will be most right and proper.

10. The British Government, some time since, suggested that Ameens should be deputed on the part of this Government into the districts of my country. My late father at times acquiesced in that arrangement, and at times procrastinated and kept it in suspense; but as soon as your Lordship's letter reached my father, father, stating that the measure in question had been formerly proposed by the British Government from motives of regard for his Excellency's welfare, and that now he might exercise his own discretion, my father, on the receipt of that letter, suspended the deputation of several persons whom he had appointed for that duty. At this time, agreeably to the suggestions of Major Baillie, some Amceens have been deputed into the districts; but I hope, from your Lordship's favour, that if it should appear advisable to you, I may, agreeably to former custom, with the concurrence of Major Baillie, suspend this affair: for as nothing is concealed from your Lordship, it must be known that when the Amceens shall be appointed, people will say that this arrangement never took effect in the time of the late Nawab, and now it has been carried into execution. This will expose me to ridicule and be a cause of degradation. I am confident that your Excellency will never approve of any thing which will derogate from my dignity.

Consultations,

11. I am desirous to place the whole of my dominions under Amānee Tuh-seel for collection of the revenues by the officers of Government, in distinction to the system of farming, and to prepare a plan which I wish to introduce for the benefit of my subjects, with such care, that it may be approved by your Lordship.

12. The British troops are stationed in many places within my dominions. Your Lordship, in your cordial friendship and regard, is in all matters desirous to promote the good order and regularity of the affairs of my Government. Let an order be given to the officers commanding the troops, directing them, on my requisition, with a view to the good order of the districts, to punish and chastise in an exemplary manner the Zemindars who depart from the path of obedience and payment of the revenues, and refuse to pay the dues of the Government, that thus no individual may dare to evince a refractory spirit: and with respect to the Ryots and Zemindars who may abscond from my dominions and settle in the territory of the Honourable Company, let the British Government, on notification from me, forthwith seize and deliver them up.

13. With regard to the manner in which justice was administered at Lucknow in former times, it was as it was. I now propose to vest my dear son (grandson), Mirza Mohsen Alce Khan Behauder, with the dignity of the general superintendence of the adawlut, and to divide it into three departments. The department of the adawlut for those of the Sheca sect to be committed to the charge of Molvee Syud Dildār Alce, who is qualified in every respect by his integrity and honesty, and by his learning, talents, and piety. The department of adawlut for the Soonnees to be given to Molvees of that sect who may be qualified to discharge the duties of it: and with respect to the settlement of the causes of the Hindoos, that charge will be committed to some virtuous and upright Mahajens (merchants or bankers), five in number, in whom the sect of Hindoos may place confidence; so that, by this arrangement, the suits of all the three sects will be adjudicated in the best possible manner.

14. For the protection of the city from thieves and gang-robbers and domestic broils, it is my desire to appoint several persons as guards, with a headman, after the fashion of police-officers; and I propose to cause them to execute engagements and penalty bonds, to perform their duty within their assigned jurisdictions, and to hold themselves responsible for this affair (restitution of the property stolen).

15. The persons in the employment of my late father shall be continued in their former situations, on the condition of their attendance, service, and fidelity; and otherwise, others shall be entertained in their room. Besides the former servants, no more persons are required for the good order and tranquillity of the districts, since the British troops are stationed in different quarters and at your Lordship's order, which once given is sufficient for ever. These troops, when necessary, will chastise the Zemindars.

16. Although I have not confidence in any men except the British troops as guards and sentries, yet I wish that the same persons who were always entertained for that duty by this Government may be continued in that duty as heretofore, and that the British troops may be stationed at the same places as those where they were placed as guards and sentries in the time of his late Excellency.

17. My

Bengal Political
Consultations,
7 Mar. 1815.

17. My grandfather, Shooja-ood-Dowlah, my uncle, Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and my late father, Saadut-Alee-Khan, had in every respect the power of making augmentations and reductions, and of confiscating on their demise the property and effects of the ladies of the muhl and of their own slaves. By your Lordship's favour I shall act in this affair in conformity to the established usages of this family.

18. My respected grandmother, who lives at Fyzabad, was kept in a state of irritation by my late father about many matters of trifling importance. I have removed all those causes of annoyance to my grandmother, and have made obedience and submission to her pleasure my rule of conduct in all her affairs. May God grant that she may yet live for one hundred and thirty years: but as the path to the mansions of eternity must be trodden by all, and no one can escape that common fate, when she shall be no more, I, as is the usage and practice of Kings and Viziers, and in particular of this house, am the master and proprietor (of her property). Agreeably to the usages of this Sirkar and the principles of my Government, none has any right to interfere with me with respect to it. I do not make this declaration from any avaricious motive, but because it is in conformity to the usages of our house, that thus, when the time comes, no further representation may be necessary. The persons who receive allowances from her Highness the Bhow Begum shall continue to receive them from me, on condition of attendance and obedience to my orders.

19. Although I was brought up by my father, to whom I am exclusively indebted for every thing, yet I regard your Lordship as my parent and benefactor: I therefore hope that you will constantly, and without reserve, suggest such propositions as may be calculated to strengthen my authority and to promote my benefit and advantage, and such as may not be regarded by the people as the means of exposing me to be scoffed and laughed at. Your Lordship, by doing so, will in the highest degree consult my welfare and happiness.

20. By your Lordship's kindness, Major Baillie loves me from his heart. Under the influence of this disposition, in consequence of my father's demise he visits me almost every day; and agreeably to rule, I also have gone to visit him. While Major Baillie may continue to remain here, there is no need for making any representation: after he shall have gone away, it is my wish that the practice of visiting, as observed between the Resident and my father, may be reverted to.

21. There are many persons who, having appropriated to their own use the property of this Government, call themselves dependants of the Honourable Company. As the two Governments are, in truth, but one, and no difference or separation of interests exists, whatever is for the benefit of the one is for that of the other. The loss sustained by this Government, therefore, affects the British Government in an equal degree. I do not consider the dominions and property of the two States as possessing any separate and distinct interest. If any one meditates what will be a loss to this Government, let him fall under displeasure.

22. A letter from the King of England was sent to my uncle, Asuf-ood-Dowlah, containing expressions of satisfaction, joy, and encouragement. As I look upon your Lordship as a parent, nay, in the place of the King of England himself, your Lordship is in every respect master to do whatever you please for the adjustment of all my concerns. If my concerns are not adjusted to my satisfaction in your Lordship's time, I can never hope that they will be adjusted hereafter. If it be proper, and if your Lordship shall so determine, I will prepare some rarities of this country, however unfit, to compose a suitable nuzzur for his Britannic Majesty, together with an address expressive of my respectful attachment, and send them to your Lordship to be forwarded to his Majesty. Your Lordship will be pleased to obtain for me the gratification of receiving a favourable answer.

23. All that I possess in money and effects is at the disposal of your Lordship and the Honourable Company. But of what account are money and goods: I would not even spare my own life. Now that, by the influence of my propitious stars, your Lordship has arrived here, my hope is, that you will do for me something something new, greater than any thing before, of such a nature that the fame of your Lordship's kindness will be celebrated all over the world. In this event my honour (izzut) will be exalted in the highest degree.

Consultations,

24. In conformity to an old custom of our family, my father sent such of his dependants, servants, connections, relations, and brothers, as he thought proper, to pay their respects once to the Governors-General who have preceded your Lordship. On no other occasion did those Governors-General receive any visits from any individual of my father's Government contrary to his inclination. I now trust that the same observances respecting the visits of all persons, the particulars of which may be known by a reference to the records, will still be adhered to. I am confident that your Lordship will never infringe an established rule.

25. Lacs of rupees of property, which my late father committed to the charge of my brothers, Shums-ood-Dowlah and Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, and also some escheated (or reversionary) property of my late grandmother, which is in the custody of the mother of my brother Mehdee Alee Khan, are stated by those persons to have been given to them by my father. If they can shew deeds of gift from my father regarding such property, let them be produced; otherwise that property belongs to the State. Let it be rendered up.

26. With regard to the holders of maafy lands and pensioners in the time of Asuf-ood-Dowlah, whose sources of maintenance were resumed by my late father, it is my wish that such as can shew their title to those grants, and can produce the sunnuds under the seals of Shooja-ood-Dowlah or Asuf-ood-Dowlah, should, with your Lordship's concurrence, be again put into possession of their lands or pensions as formerly. Those people are a host of piety and prayer, and this act would equally redound to the credit of your Lordship and the Honourable Company, as it would exalt my reputation.

Translation of a Paper (No. 2) received from His Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, 26th October 1814.

1. In the same manner as authority was exercised over the dominions of Oude by the Nawaubs Shooja-ood-Dowlah and Asuf-ood-Dowlah and my late father, all of whom possessed the power of regulating the affairs of the Government, so in like manner let the regulation of affairs of the Government be in my power and at my discretion, without the agency of any one (lit. without a medium).

2. Wherever any of the Ryots and Zemindars of this State, or any of the Aumils or Tehsildars and others run away and take up their abode in the territories of the Honourable Company, let the British local authority seize those persons and send them to me.

3. Of the persons who from former times have been the servants, favourites, adherents, or dependants of this Government, some are dead and some are alive. Their jagiers and allowances continue to be held, as before, by their descendants. The latter are not deserving of such jagiers and allowances. Under these circumstances, therefore, the large jagiers and allowances are not to be continued, but each person shall have a suitable stipend assigned to him.

4. In the event of any of my servants or relations, on the resumption of their jagiers or allowances, seeking through their connexion with the Honourable Company's Government to obtain the restoration of those jagiers and allowances, let not their applications be listened to by the British Government, for this will lead to disorder, and every one will seek connexion with the British Government.

5. Since, by the aid and support of the Honourable Company, I have obtained possession of the Government of my forefathers, let the Honourable Company, under all circumstances, support and assist me.

6. Since

Consultations,

6. Since the time of my late father, the amount of my expenses has increased; the diminution, therefore, of the expenses of this State, in whatever manner it may be, is intended.

7. After the demise of my father, the conduct of all my brothers has been changed, and they have become profuse in their expenses. Some other occurrences, also, which are not fit to be mentioned, have taken place. Under these circumstances, they will receive the original allowance which was first fixed for them by my father, without the subsequent augmentation.

8. The power of changing and removing the Aumils and Foujdars, and of sending Aumils, either as farmers of the revenue (Moostajers) or as collectors or trustees (Amānee) shall rest with me.

9. The system of the adawlut (administration of justice) shall be according to former custom, as it was in the time of Asuf-ood-Dowlah. One Cāzee and one Mooftie for the dispensation of justice, according to the ordinances of the law. What necessity exists for several courts of adawlut? The system of adawlut above specified shall be observed.

10. My grandmother, the Bhow Begum, who resides at Fyzabad and has attained a very great age, cannot be exempted from the general law of nature. In the event of her demise (which Heaven avert), I am her legal heir. Let her wealth and effects become the right and property of my Government.

11. Whatever increase of allowance has taken place in my time, and whatever grounds and gardens have passed into the hands of my servants and relations shall be taken back.

12. Since the time of my accession to the Government my grandmother has, contrary to former usage, taken under her own management the golaub baree (mausoleum of Shooja-ood-Dowlah) and other places, together with the muls of the late Mirza Alea Khan (brother of the Bhow Begum). Let her Highness restore them.

13. From motives of friendship and regard, the Honourable Company have stationed British troops in various parts of my dominions for their protection. This occasions a great expenditure of the Honourable Company's money. It is my sincere desire that the said troops should be stationed within the Honourable Company's frontier, and I will raise and entertain as many troops as may be necessary for the protection of the country. Whenever the British troops may be required, let them co-operate with me on my requisitions to that effect.

14. The British Resident is stationed here solely for the purpose of strengthening the friendship and harmony subsisting between the two States, and in time of need to be associated with me for the purpose of aiding and assisting my Government, either by his counsel and advice, or by affording me the support of the British troops. On occasions of my requiring support, let him co-operate with me without fail.

Note. His Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General intimated to me on the 31st ultimo, that he had received a communication from his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier to the following effect: That Dr. Law, and not Dr. Wilson, was the physician of his choice: that he wished to remove from his service the four sons of Mirza Jāfer, as they were obnoxious to him, from being in fact spies on his actions, and receiving very exorbitant salaries, about eight or nine thousand rupees a-month. That he was anxious for his son to be appointed Minister, and as Paishcars under him Hukeem Mehdee Alea Khan and Imaum Bukhsh; and that in many respects, he was much dissatisfied with Major Baillie's conduct towards him. That his Excellency had further stated.

on being asked why he had not expressed those sentiments in his conference with his Lordship, that he had been deterred from doing so, as he had been given to understand that Mr. Swinton was a particular friend of Major Baillie's.

In consequence of this communication, his Lordship desired me to wait upon his Excellency and deliver the following message to him :

That after the explicit and repeated declarations made to his Excellency by his Lordship, of the regard and friendship which he entertained for his Excellency and of his anxiety to learn his Excellency's real sentiments, and to receive from him a frank and unreserved avowal of all his wishes, with a view to enable his Lordship satisfactorily to adjust all questions relating to his comfort prior to his Lordship's departure from Lucknow, he could not fail of being surprised that his Excellency should have resorted to irregular channels for the conveyance of his wishes, instead of making them direct to his Lordship, or through the legitimate authorities ; and that his Lordship could in no way admit the validity of the cause assigned by him for not resorting to this course, as his Excellency ought to have been aware, from the peculiarly responsible and confidential situation which Mr. Swinton held, he could never allow his partiality (even admitting his alleged friendship for Major Baillie) to interfere, either directly or indirectly, with any of his official duties. That in the hope of his Excellency being fully satisfied in this point, his Lordship proposed to give his Excellency one more opportunity of disclosing his genuine feelings and sentiments, and for this purpose invited him to a conference in the evening.

At about twelve o'clock I accordingly waited on his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, who received me in a private room, and I endeavoured, as well as my imperfect knowledge of the Hindoostanee language enabled me, to convey the message from his Lordship.

His Excellency, in answer, took pains to describe his full conviction of his Lordship's kindness, and his hope that what had fallen from him regarding Mr. Swinton would not be conceived to imply any disrespect towards that gentleman, of whom he had heard the highest character. His Excellency then took a slip of paper from his cummerbund, and said that he would repeat to me the wishes which he had conveyed to his Lordship ; and his Excellency did accordingly state to me, from the paper, the circumstances explained in the preceding part of this report, and observed that what he had so stated were his wishes. His Excellency next said, that the greater part of the requests which he had to submit for his Lordship's consideration he had already drawn out ; and taking a fold of paper* from his cummerbund, requested me to present it to his Lordship, adding, " what I may have further to state I will put down on paper and deliver " to his Lordship this evening." On taking my leave, his Excellency asked me, in a significant manner, if I thought that Major Baillie's removal from Lucknow could be managed : to which I involuntarily said, " What, has not Major Baillie " been a friend to your Excellency?" His Excellency answered, " Perhaps " so ; but I have many grievances to submit for his Lordship's consideration." The conference closed by my saying that, whatever his Excellency had to expect, either in respect to Major Baillie or to any other circumstance, that he had only, in conformity to his Lordship's desire, to convey it in writing and to present it to his Lordship, who would be prepared to give specific answers to each point of reference from his Excellency.

Translation of a Paper (No. 3) delivered to Mr. Ricketts by his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, 31st October 1814.

On the day of my late father's decease, neither the Resident nor any one of the English gentlemen attended the funeral. When my grandmother died, the Resident in person attended the funeral. My late father was desirous to such a degree to manifest respect to the British Government, that he sent all the respectable respectable persons of his Court to attend the funeral of a female who had lived in the Resident's house: several English gentlemen were also present. It is a matter of regret, therefore, that the Resident should not have gone in person, nor have sent any of the English gentlemen to attend the funeral of so great a Vizier, and so old a friend of the British Government.

Bengal Political
Consultations,
7. Mar. 1815.

In the time of my late father, the Resident applied for a sunnud of the Chowdree and Canoongoe of the purgunnah of Sandee, in the name of the Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan; but my father conceiving it to be the right of other persons would never consent. After my father's decease, Major Baillie caused me to give the sunnud for the villages of the jagier and the Chowdree and Canoongoe of the said purgunnah, and having pulled down the houses of several persons levelled them with the ground. On the occurrence of this, all the Chowdries of the said purgunnah abandoned their native home, and throughout the whole of my dominions the circumstances of this slight and lessening of my dignity became notorious.

The Resident several times applied to my late father to shut up a high road which is contiguous to the Residency, and which had never been objected to by any of the former Residents, from the time of the first construction of the Residency. My father observed, that it was not proper to shut up a high road and to occasion inconvenience to the people. After my father's death the road was shut up by the Resident for several days, which occasioned the people to open their mouths in reproach against me. Not satisfied with this, the Resident constructed a large and lofty gate which overtopped all my buildings; and as the ingress and egress of the people of my durbar were necessarily established through the middle gate of my palace, the great gelow-khana (or open court) was rendered of no use.

The whole world passes along the high road, and my rutt-khana (a place for bullock-carriages) is situated close to it. On the 10th of Shuvvaul (September 1814) the people belonging to the Resident threatened the Chowdries of the rutt-khana with the punishment of any person who should bring a carriage or rutt, or cart, along that road.

After my father's demise, the Resident stationed British guards and sentries over the treasuries and jewel-rooms and other places, and he has not yet removed them.

After my father's death, the Resident forthwith proceeded to the dwelling of Goomanee Khanum, who was one of my late father's ladies, and called her into his presence, totally regardless of my late father's honour; and in consequence of her connexion with Gorce Bebee (widow of General Martin), the Resident caused her allowance to be raised from two hundred to one thousand rupees per mensem.

The females and servants of her late Highness Shums-oon-Nissa Begum, who received less than one thousand rupees per mensem in her life-time, had their allowances raised by the Resident to the amount of four thousand; so that it may be said, the whole jumma of the jagier was settled on them.

The Resident bringing with him persons who never were entitled to sit down, caused them, in consideration of their connexions with him, to receive chairs, contrary to the usages of this Government.

The Resident, from motives of regard, caused an augmentation of five hundred rupees to be made by me, contrary to custom, to the allowance of Cāsīm Alee Khan, who was not in favour with my late father.

Whosoever of my servants and dependants goes to the Resident receives encouragement from him; and being intoxicated with this, these people do not attend to my orders.

The superintendence of the ladies of the muhls of the late Nawaubs, Salar Jung and Mirza Alee Khan (brother of the Bhow Begum), the distribution of their stipends, and the charge of all their other concerns, belonged to the Government since the time of Asuf-ood-Dowlah till my late father's death. The Resident, although it is by no means proper that he should interfere in any matter connected with the honour of our house, has removed my people, and placed the muhls under charge of Punnah Alee, the Vakeel of my grandmother, the Bhow Begum.

Consultations,

The Resident placed over me, I may say, the sons of Mirza Jāfer from the day of my ascending the musnud, in such a manner that I never had a moment's privacy from them. Mirza Hajee, who was employed in the Resident's service at a salary of two hundred rupees per mensem, was appointed by him to be in attendance on me, and this person asked for himself an allowance of five thousand rupees per mensem, and of one thousand for each of his three brothers. The Resident, although he himself performed all the duties, great and small, of this Government, did not in any manner restrain Mirza Hajee from making so extravagant a demand. As, in the expectation of your Lordship's arrival, I did not say "yes" or "no" in any matter, so in this affair I made no objection.

The style in which the retinue of the Resident proceeds has been noticed at the end of the account of the circumstances relating to my father. On the day of the Resident's coming to Enow (near Cawnpore), a horseman in my service was going along the same road. Notwithstanding every endeavour to take his horse aside, the animal being alarmed by the crowds of people and the beating and kicking, reared up. According to the representation of the Resident's people, the rider drew his sword and sought to attack Captain Fortune. As I did not see the fray myself, I cannot deny any thing which may be said; but where the clothes even did not receive a scratch, it was not proper to seek to destroy a man's life. They drove a spear into his side and hip, in such a manner that he fell on the ground as if he had been killed. Hopes of his living are not entertained. Tyrannical kings have never prevented the people from going on the road in such a manner as this. The English gentlemen cannot bear to injure even a feeble ant. The occurrence of this affair has lowered me in the eyes of the people in the greatest degree. Had I been apprized of what had passed, I should have inquired into the case, and would have punished the offender in an exemplary manner as a warning to others.

From the day of my ascending the musnud the Resident was in the habit of coming every day, of perusing the papers and accounts of the country, and of issuing, according to his own way, orders in answer to the petitions of all the Aumils and others, whatever was the duty of the Government. Without requiring from me an answer to your Lordship's letter of the 25th March to the address of my father, the contents of which had augmented his sense of obligation to your Lordship and his own satisfaction, Major Baillie proceeded to nominate the Ameens, as if I had no concern whatever with the affairs of the Government. The particulars of what is above briefly stated are these. However desirous I was that this affair should lie over until the arrival of your Lordship in this quarter, my wishes did not succeed; but, on the contrary. Major Baillie made more haste and dispatch, dividing the country into muhāls, and forming the Zillahs agreeably to the suggestions of Mirza Jāfer, and deputing Ameens, dependants of his own and dependants of his agents. If some, also, of my people were appointed, they were selected by the Resident himself, and I had no voice in the matter. He assigned the muhāl of Sandee proper, the Chowdree's right of which had been usurped by Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, to the nephew of that person, for the sake of giving support to oppression. For my own exculpation I addressed a note to the Resident, protesting against the Ameens as I know nothing about them. To this, however, he paid no attention. When the joyful tidings of your Lordship's approach were received, I pretended indisposition, to shorten his sittings with me for the dispatch of business. He gave orders to Moontuzimood-Dowlah, Mehdee Alee Khan, who had had the management of the affairs of this Government in the time of my late father, and also to Dya-Krishen, the principal person of the dufter (or office of accounts), to attend him daily at noon, when he would give them such orders for the settlement of the country as he should see proper: those persons accordingly attended him. In this case, what power and authority are left to me?

Let my son, Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder Khan, be appointed to the office of Naib (or Minister), and on the part of my son let Moontuzim-ood-Dowlah Mehdee Alea Khan, who enjoyed the confidence of my late father, and in whose charge was the management of the country and other affairs, and who in like manner is possessed of my confidence, be appointed, or let Sheikh Imām Bukhsh be appointed; but in my opinion, Moontuzim-ood-Dowlah is better for all affairs, for he is a man of integrity and above all temptation (lit. one whose eye is satiated, or who has nothing to desire), and of a high family. Under these circumstances, the business of the Government will be conducted by him with integrity and fidelity, for he has been approved ever since the time of my father.

Let the system of Government be the same as in the time of the late Nawaub, The new Ameens and other Omlah (officers) who have been appointed are quite unfit and inexperienced. Let them be dismissed, and let the regulation of the Government be after my manner, and let the English troops in time of need chastise offenders.

Report of a Message from the Vizier to Mr. Swinton and Mr. Adam, delivered by Agha Meer, Tuesday 1st November.

Agha Meer, the confidential servant of the Vizier, came with a message from his Excellency to Mr. Swinton and Mr. Adam. He commenced by saying that he was desired by the Vizier to state that his Excellency did not comprehend the conversation which passed yesterday evening at the Residency. That Mr. Clarke had given him to understand that the Governor-General was in his heart dissatisfied with Major Baillie, and that it would be pleasing to his Lordship to hear from the Vizier something that might be laid hold of against him. That his Excellency felt that he must have been deceived by Mr. Clarke, as that did not turn out to be the subject of the conference. He then went on to state that Mr. Clarke had formerly endeavoured to impress on the Vizier's mind a belief that the Governor-General was secretly displeased with Major Baillie ; that the favourable terms in which his Lordship had spoken of Major Baillie at the conference at the Nawaub's tent on the 11th of last month were merely intended as words of course ; that his Lordship repented of having made use of them ; and that, to gratify his Lordship and to procure Major Baillie's removal, his Excellency ought to represent Major Baillie's conduct in the manner which he suggested : adding, that he would inform him of circumstances which had passed in the time of the late Vizier, and of others which had occurred since his Excellency's accession, but to which his Excellency had not paid attention. That the Vizier replied, that he had no cause of discontent with Major Baillie ; that Major Baillie was his friend, and that to him he was indebted for the musnud, and that he would say nothing against him. That when Mr. Clarke continued to urge him to state grievances against Major Baillie, and to write a paper, he refused ; but said, " as it is his Lordship's pleasure, do you write what you please and I will deliver it." That Mr. Clarke did accordingly give a paper to the Vizier.

That yesterday, after Mr. Ricketts had taken his leave of the Vizier, Mr. Clarke visited his Excellency : and after again urging his Excellency to speak against Major Baillie, gave him the paper which was delivered at the conference of yesterday, telling him to say, if it he should be asked any questions, that every thing was written in that paper. Agha Meer ended by saying, that the Nawaub had spent a sleepless night and was indisposed this morning, and was anxious to unburden his mind, and that his Excellency also wished that Mr. Swinton and Mr. Adam would do him the friendly office of informing Major Baillie of these circumstances. To this they replied, that it was their duty to report to the Governor-General any communication from the Vizier, but that Agha Meer must know that they were not the channel of communication to Major Baillie, and that it was, of course, optional with his Excellency to make such communication to Major Baillie as he might think proper. Agha Meer then said, that he was charged with a communication himself to Major Baillie of these circumstances, but that the Vizier wished them also, as his Excellency's friends, to mention the subject to Major Baillie. Agha Meer was then asked whether all these particulars were communicated by the desire of his Excellency ? He replied, that they had been mentioned to him by his Excellency, and that he should now report what had passed, and would return with any further message which the Vizier might wish to send.

In the course of conversation he repeatedly stated the Vizier's friendship and regard for Major Baillie ; and in answer to a question put to him he said, that his own observation did not lead him to suppose that any discontent against Major Baillie existed in the Vizier's mind. During the conversation Agha Meer

Meer appeared to recollect himself, and said there was another subject which he was to mention, namely, that Mr. Clarke had stated to the Vizier that the Governor-General was disposed to favour the appointment of Hukeem Mehdee and Imām Bukhsh to be the Naibs under his son, and that this subject was accordingly included in the paper.

Report of a Conference held by Mr. Swinton and Mr. Adam with the Vizier, at his Excellency's Request, 2d November 1814.

Yesterday evening Agha Meer returned with a message from the Vizier, desiring our company at breakfast this morning, that he might make a communication to us: Agha Meer stated also, that Major Baillie was to be of the party. Having received your Lordship's sanction and your instructions to request an audience of his Excellency in private, for the purpose of stating to his Excellency the tenor of Agha Meer's previous communication, and of asking whether that person was authorized by his Excellency to convey any such message, we informed Agha Meer that we should attend his Excellency, and we accordingly waited on him this morning.

Shortly after our arrival we requested a private audience; and having retired with his Excellency we began by stating that Agha Meer had yesterday communicated a message on the part of his Excellency which we had reported to the Governor-General, and that his Lordship being anxious that the authenticity of it should be confirmed from his Excellency's own mouth, had desired that we would request him to state whether the message was delivered by his order. His Excellency nodded assent.

We then proceeded to state the substance of it; but his Excellency interrupted us, by saying that Mr. Clarke had informed him that it was the Governor-General's pleasure that his Excellency should state matter of inculpation against Major Baillie, with whom his Lordship was dissatisfied. That the paper was given to him by Mr. Clarke, who had deceived him by making him believe that such was his Lordship's wish. That Captain McLeod, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. Law, were concerned in this affair, and that he had dismissed them from his service, as they were the cause of interruption to the harmony between the parties (meaning, as he afterwards explained himself, the British Government and himself). His Excellency added, that he was preparing a letter to the Governor-General on the subject, and that what he had to say was written in it.

His Excellency said, that he had been informed that the Governor-General had given an order that the nobut should beat; but that when he mentioned the subject at the conference on the evening of the 31st, he found, to his surprise, that it was perfectly new to his Lordship and the gentlemen attending the conference.

The paper delivered by his Excellency to the Governor-General at the conference was then produced, and he was asked whether that was the paper which was written and given to him by Mr. Clarke on the day of the conference? His Excellency, with some appearance of hesitation and confusion, replied that Mr. Clarke had "given him the paper." We then asked his Excellency whether the paper which he had delivered to Mr. Ricketts on the same day was also given him by Mr. Clarke; to which he replied in the affirmative, but with some degree of confusion and hesitation, as in the former instance. This paper was also produced.

His Excellency then went on to say, that his genuine sentiments and wishes were contained in the two first papers delivered by him, and that those presented on the day of the conference were dictated by Mr. Clarke and the others, and that they were not his papers.

Bengal' Political
Consultations,
7 Mar. 1815.

His Excellency then looked over the paper delivered by him at the conference, and mentioned one or two articles in it as being to the same effect as those contained in his former papers. To explain this, he said that Mr. Clarke previously knew his Excellency's real wishes, and had inserted them in the latter papers as well as those articles of his own suggestion. He then particularly pointed out the article purporting that he was desirous that Major Baillie should be removed, saying "that is not mine, it is theirs."

During the conversation, and while the papers were in the Vizier's hand, Agha Meer came in unsent for; and after whispering something to the Vizier, began to repeat the message which he had delivered yesterday, his Excellency confirming the statement by words and gestures. Thinking Agha Meer's presence inconsistent with the nature of the interview, and being satisfied that the message was authentic, and adverting to his Excellency's declaration that he was stating in his letter what he wished to communicate to your Lordship, we observed to his Excellency that it appeared unnecessary to pursue the subject with Agha Meer, and he was accordingly dismissed. The remainder of the conversation consisted chiefly of a repetition of what is above stated, and of assurances, on our part, that his Excellency might state with perfect confidence and unreserve whatever he might wish to convey to the Governor-General, to whom it would be faithfully reported.

The main point of the authenticity of the message having been attained, and his Excellency leading us to suppose that the letter would contain all that had been communicated by Agha Meer, we desisted from further inquiry.

Major Baillie having arrived we sat down to breakfast; and a short time before we rose the letter for the Governor-General was brought and put into our hands.

It seems proper to state, that previously to the delivery of the letter a Persian paper was brought to his Excellency, who desired it to be shewn to Major Baillie. Major Baillie declined reading it, and it was brought to Mr. Swinton, who perceiving that it was the draft or copy of a letter to the Governor-General declined the perusal, observing that when it was received by the Governor-General he should peruse it. Major Baillie, about this time, said to Mr. Adam that the perusal of the draft of his Excellency's letter to the Governor-General had been tendered to him, and that he had declined reading it; we conclude, therefore, that the Persian paper in question was the draft of the letter afterwards delivered to us.

On rising from table we reminded the Vizier of his having signified to us his desire to make a communication and our readiness to receive his commands. His Excellency then withdrew with us, leaving Major Baillie in the outer room. His Excellency said, "Present my respects to the Governor-General and deliver that letter to him." He then repeated, on our again putting the question to him, that the two first papers were those which contained his requests, with which he hoped the Governor-General would comply, and that the two last delivered were not his papers.

We then rejoined Major Baillie, and after some indifferent conversation we all took our leave.

Letter
from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Received the 2d November 1814.)

(After expressions of desire for a happy meeting):

Mr. Clarke, and some other persons, for some time past have been in the habit of saying to me that a paper containing a statement of the faults of Major Baillie should be prepared and given to your Lordship. I never would consent to this. At length, the day before yesterday, having brought a paper, he (or they), they), in the way of deceit, stated that the giving of the paper to your Lordship would be the cause of pleasing you, and that your Lordship wished to receive from me a communication by which accusation might attach to Major Baillie. Of necessity, I conveyed the said paper to your Lordship, with a view to your Lordship's pleasure; but I have in nowise any cause of complaint or dissatisfaction with that gentleman, and he is my friend, and is in every respect the well-wisher of the Honourable Company's Government, and not a word but matters of friendship and attachment has ever passed between us. As Mr. Clarke and the other persons had been the contrivers (or authors) of this deceit and insinuation (lit. spell or sorcery), I have therefore caused them to be dismissed from my service, because the retaining of such persons in my service is nowise proper.

Further, may the days of your Lordship's prosperity and happiness be perpetual.

The Governor-General's Minute.

Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Adam, and Mr. Swinton, will have the goodness to wait upon the Nawaub Vizier this morning, and will please to make to his Excellency the following statements :

First. That I came to Lucknow with the most earnest wish to promote his dignity and satisfaction, by establishing all matters on what I conceive to be the just and honourable construction of the treaty existing between the British Government and the State of Oude; but I have been so perplexed by contradictory communications of his Excellency's wishes, that I really must be doubtful whether, in the steps I take, I may truly advance his comfort.

Second. That there is one point, at least, in which I can feel secure. As his Excellency complained directly to Mr. Ricketts, my confidential secretary and friend, that it was a grievance to have had the sons of Mirza Jāfer placed in his family with excessive salaries, for the purpose, as his Excellency represented it, of superintending all his actions, I cannot err in freeing him from the painful feeling which he professed to suffer, at not appearing in the eyes of his household and subjects as a free agent: I therefore earnestly solicit that his Excellency will not hesitate, should he think proper, in immediately dismissing from his service the four sons of Mirza Jāfer, as well as any other private servants who may be obnoxious to him. I make this request personal from myself, to mark to his Excellency, in this procedure, that I do not sanction any attempt to circumscribe his freedom of action in his private affairs.

Third. That another point which I am desirous of bringing to his Excellency's consideration is the nomination of a physician. That Mr. Wilson has been stated to the Governor-General, in the Vizier's name, as the person whom his Excellency is desirous of employing in that capacity. That his Excellency, however, had stated to Mr. Ricketts, as also in his supplementary paper, in express terms, for the sanction of the Governor-General, and that his Lordship had also heard it from various quarters, that his Excellency is anxious to employ Mr. Law. That this is an affair in which no other consideration but his Excellency's unbiassed wish can be permitted to operate; and that he is entreated, therefore, to name the physician of his real choice, without reserve or hesitation.

Fourth. I wish it also to be distinctly stated to his Excellency, that although the firm establishment of the Vizier on the musnud of his ancestors, under the support and assistance of the British Government, must have put an end to any hopes which might have been entertained of disturbing the legitimate order of succession, yet the known expectations of the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, and his conduct at the period of the accession of his Excellency, cannot fail to render the continued residence of Shums-ood-Dowlah at Lucknow a source of uneasiness uneasiness and anxiety to his Excellency's mind. That it must also be a source of uneasiness to the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah himself, who cannot feel satisfied under the entire alteration of his condition since the decease of the late Vizier. That viewing all these circumstances, the Governor-General is satisfied that it is necessary, for the comfort and happiness both of his Excellency and of his brother, that the latter should retire from the territory of Oude and reside within the dominions of the Honourable Company.

That his Excellency's known liberality would lead him, of his own accord, to assign an ample provision to his brother, and that, in the Governor-General's opinion, every claim on his Excellency's justice and generosity would be satisfied, by fixing that provision at two lacs of rupees per annum.

That if his Excellency concur in this proposition, which is earnestly recommended to him on the grounds above stated, the Governor-General will communicate the arrangement to Shums-ood-Dowlah without delay, and carry it into immediate effect.

Fifth. That as I am very desirous not to leave any thing unsettled relative to those measures which I trust will be a guard to his Excellency's happiness, and as my departure from Lucknow must be very speedy, I have commissioned Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Adam, and Mr. Swinton, to entreat the communication of his Excellency's wishes respecting the appointment of a Minister and his subordinates, and that I have empowered those gentlemen to discuss that important subject fully with his Excellency.

Sixth. That it is gratifying to me to believe, that the tenor of the answer which I had been preparing to the public points stated in his Excellency's first paper would have been satisfactory to his feelings. The British Government has no petty points to carry: it wishes the welfare and prosperity of his Excellency's dominions, because it regards his interest as inseparable from our own; and it studies that his Excellency should enjoy not only all the splendour and ostensible sway, but all the solid authority within his territories, which it was the honest meaning of the treaty to secure to the sovereign of Oude, subject always to the advice and representations of the Governor-General directly, or through his representative at the court of Lucknow, on all measures affecting the interests of the two States.

Seventh. I request that his Excellency may be distinctly given to understand, that this answer is kept back on account of the difficulty experienced by the Governor-General in forming a judgment of the real sentiments and wishes of the Nawaub Vizier, in consequence of the contradictory statements which have been made. These inconsistencies should be clearly pointed out, as they exist in the two papers first delivered, and the successive declaration and retraction of the requests contained in the papers delivered on the 31st ultimo, when his Excellency had, in the most confidential and unreserved manner, imparted to Mr. Ricketts, to be laid before the Governor-General, those very requests. His Excellency ought also to be apprized, that the gentlemen now charged with having instigated his Excellency against Major Baillie desire to attest on oath before the Council, that the agitation of the subject was spontaneously urged upon them by the Vizier and reluctantly submitted to by them. That to clear up these difficulties and to bring out his Excellency's genuine wishes, it is particularly requested by the Governor-General that he will well weigh all the circumstances, and allowing no bias or apprehension to interfere with him, finally to deliver to the Governor-General his ultimatum, stating distinctly and explicitly the nature and object of the several wishes which his Excellency may have to prefer for the consideration of his Lordship.

Eighth. It is farther to be explained to the Nawaub Vizier, that as Mr. Clarke is charged with having insinuated it to be the Governor-General's wish to obtain grounds of crimination against Major Baillie, it behoves his Lordship to enquire distinctly whether his name has been made use of by any one, to influence the Nawaub Vizier in sending the message of Agha Meer to Mr. Adam and Mr. Swinton, Swinton, or in framing his Excellency's last letter to the Governor-General : and the Nawaub Vizier is to be informed that the Governor-General puts that question in the most solemn manner to his Excellency's honour.

(Signed) MOIRA.

Report of a Conference held by Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Adam, and Mr. Swinton, with His Excellency the Vizier, on the 4th of November 1814.

Conference
with the Vizier.

His Excellency the Vizier received us at one of his villas (Arnott's house), and having led us into a private room we opened the business of our deputation without delay.

We informed him that we were commissioned by the Governor-General to make a communication to his Excellency on some matters of importance: that, for the sake of greater precision and correctness, the substance of it had been committed to writing; and that, with his Excellency's permission, we would read over the paper, which Mr. Swinton held in his hand, from beginning to end, without entering into any conversation on the subject, after which we would proceed to the discussion of each point separately.

His Excellency having assented, Mr. Swinton proceeded verbally to translate the contents of the paper to the Vizier. He had scarcely pronounced the words referring to the contradictory statements made to the Governor-General, before he was interrupted by his Excellency, exclaiming that his wishes were expressed in the two first papers; that Mr. Clarke and the others, by deceit, made him write the others, which he disclaimed; that he had dismissed them from his service; that he wished to withdraw the papers; and that he would prepare another, under his seal, containing his genuine wishes, and deliver it to the Governor-General. During this discourse he adverted to the circumstance regarding the nobut, stated at the conference of the 31st ultimo as that which had opened his eyes, and shewed him that the name of the Governor-General had been used without authority, and that he had been deceived. The easy and natural manner in which these observations were made by the Vizier had every appearance of his speaking from the real dictates of his heart.

When his Excellency had finished, we again requested his permission to read the paper to the end, and begged that he would reserve what he wished to communicate to us until each point should be separately discussed.

We beg leave in this place to state, that we pursued this method, in order that his Excellency being fully apprized of the subjects on which we were instructed to confer with him, might be relieved from any embarrassment or apprehension of what was to follow the discussion of any one question, and be encouraged to speak his mind fully on each.

With some occasional interruptions from the Vizier, which it is not necessary to particularize in this part of our report, we accomplished the perusal of the paper.

On hearing the eighth and last paragraph, his Excellency not quite comprehending the nature of the solemn appeal to his honour which we were desired to make, appeared to be hurt at the suspicion which he conceived it to imply that what he had said required such a confirmation. He repeatedly asserted in the most earnest manner, that what he had said of the practices of Mr. Clarke and the other gentlemen was true; that they had influenced his mind by making use of the Governor-General's name; and that their denial of the fact was entirely false. We again explained the nature of the question, observing how important it was that the Governor-General should be satisfied whether any unauthorized use had been made of his name: and we again put the question to him distinctly, whether his Lordship's name had been used to influence him in sending to Mr. Adam and Mr. Swinton the message conveyed by Aga Meer, or in writing his last letter to the Governor-General, disclaiming the two last papers, and charging Mr. Clarke and the others with having improperly used the Governor-General's name. His Excellency denied, in the most direct and positive manner, that any person had employed the Governor-General's name for these purposes, or that he had been influenced by any bias or apprehension of the displeasure of any one to send that message or write that letter, adding that they were the genuine dictates of his own heart.

Having satisfied ourselves that his Excellency fully understood the purport of the last paragraph, as well as that he had comprehended the whole of the preceding ones, we conversed for a short time on indifferent topics, with a view to relieve his Excellency's mind and attention and enable him to recollect himself.

We then proceeded to state the substance of each article and discuss them separately.

In reporting what passed on each, we shall give the substance of the remarks which casually occurred during the first perusal of the paper, without distinguishing it from the more regular conversation which now ensued.

First. Contradictory Statements of the Vizier's wishes.

On this subject his Excellency repeated his former assertions, that Mr. Clarke and the others had deceived him, and led him astray by the use of the Governor-General's name to persuade him to inculcate Major Baillie; that Major Baillie was his friend; and that he had no cause of complaint against him. His Excellency begged that he might have the two last papers back, and said that he would prepare another, under his seal, containing his real sentiments. We at first wished to avoid restoring the papers, saying that the contents having been communicated to the Governor-General they must form matter of record; but that they would not be considered as expressive of his Excellency's wishes, excepting in as far as they might be confirmed by the paper which he now proposed to deliver. On further consideration, however, we thought it advisable to return all the papers, telling his Excellency that we hoped they would be given back for the purpose of being recorded, and repeating our former assurance. The papers were accordingly delivered. In order to connect the subject, we have, in the foregoing statement, anticipated a part of what passed in conversing on the subject of paragraph 7.

*Second. The Sons of Mirza
hold Servants.*

We readily perceived that his Excellency's disposition was adverse to the sons of Mirza Jāfer, and that he was gratified by the manner in which he was encouraged to discharge them if they were disagreeable to him. He did not at first like to speak out; but he at last said that he would discharge them when they committed a fault, as it was not the custom to discharge servants suddenly and without a colourable cause; that it was discreditable to a man of rank to do so, and that it would shake the confidence of his other servants: adding that it did not become a prince suddenly to break the hearts of his servants. He concluded by saying, that as his Lordship had given him permission to discharge such of his household servants as he pleased, he would find an opportunity of dismissing the sons of Jāfer. In order to give his Excellency confidence on this subject, we went so far as to tell him that it was not only the Governor-General's wish, as stated in the paper which he had heard read, that his Excellency should be entirely free in the choice of his domestic servants, but that it would be a positive gratification to his Lordship to see dismissed from his service persons whom he felt assured were disagreeable to him.

Third. The choice of a Physician.

When we recurred to this point, his Excellency said that a communication had been made by Major Baillie, at his desire, to the Governor-General at Baroun, on the day of the elephant fight, respecting his desire to employ Mr. Wilson; that he did not wish to employ Mr. Law; that it was not proper to change one's physician, and that it was not even the practice of the English gentlemen. We remarked on this, as delicately as we could, that as Mr. Law had been his Excellency's physician, he would, by now selecting Mr. Wilson, do that which he condemned. His Excellency instantly, and in a manner calculated to convey complete conviction, exclaimed that Doctor Wilson was always the physician of his choice: that in his father's life-time he used to procure medicines from him by stealth, although Mr. Law was nominally his medical attendant: that he would never take Mr. Law's medicines, medicines, whose attendance was disagreeable to a sick person. He then mentioned an instance of Mr. Law having attended him in a serious illness in which he gave him great dissatisfaction : on the whole, we were fully persuaded, both by his Excellency's words and manner, that his genuine wish is to employ the services of Mr. Wilson.

with. Shums-ood-Dowlah.

His Excellency fully acquiesced in the propriety of the removal of the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah from the territory of Oude, and assented to his residing in any part of the Company's dominions which he might prefer, naming of himself Benares or Patna.

We then repeated the Governor-General's opinion with respect to the amount of the stipend to be assigned to him. The amount appeared to his Excellency to be too great. He repeatedly said that he had many other brothers, who would also expect large allowances; and asked whether what Shums-ood-Dowlah received now was a trifle, calculating it at nearly a lac and a-half of rupees per annum. We observed, that the case of Shums-ood-Dowlah was too different from that of his other brothers, to admit of its being made a ground of claim on their part for an increase of stipend; that his allowance was already much larger than those of his other brothers; that in his father's life-time he had held a situation of high dignity and importance, and that his claims were proportionably great: that he was now deprived of all his authority and influence, and about to become an exile from his native country: that all these considerations ought to operate in his favour, as far as related to a liberal provision for him: that the removal or continued residence in Oude of the other brothers was a matter referring only to his Excellency's pleasure, but that the removal of Shums-ood-Dowlah was a measure of State, recommended to him by the Governor-General on grounds of public expediency, and that therefore, in this instance also, no analogy could be found between his situation and that of their younger brothers. We urged the importance to his Excellency's reputation that his brother should not be sent away without a sufficient and even a liberal provision; and we instanced the case of his late father, who at one time received even three lacs of rupees per annum. His Excellency informed us that he would consider the subject and give his answer without delay. We informed him, that it was desirable to receive it early, as in cases of this nature the adoption of the resolution should be instantly followed up by its execution: that on knowing his Excellency's final sentiments, the Governor-General would communicate the arrangement to Shums-ood-Dowlah and carry it into immediate effect. His Excellency intimated a wish, that the communication should be made by himself to Shums-ood-Dowlah; but we recommended that no step should be taken until the question respecting the stipend was finally arranged. To this his Excellency assented.

th. Appointment of a Minister and his subordinates.

His Excellency declined any discussion on this subject, and said that he would communicate his wishes in writing without delay. We observed, that on this question and the preceding one relative to Shums-ood-Dowlah, it would be satisfactory to receive an early communication of his Excellency's sentiments, as the Governor-General would be desirous of settling them before his departure from Lucknow, which was now drawing near. His Excellency replied, that on these points he would write forthwith, reserving the others for a subsequent communication.

th. Referring to the intended measures, the Vizier's first papers, laying the general principle on the British Government will regulate its conduct with relation to the state of Oude.

His Excellency expressed his full confidence in the Governor-General's justice, friendship, and kindness, and his own desire to act in a manner to merit them. He admitted, in the fullest manner, the right of the British Government and the Resident to offer advice in the measures of his Government, and his own obligations to square his conduct according to that advice.

enth. Answers deferred on account of the contradictory statements of his Excellency's wishes, as given by Mr. Clarke and the others: charge alleged against them.

His Excellency said again, that he should prepare without delay, under his seal, a statement of all his wishes. He referred to the paper given at Cawnpore as containing his requests, and we took this occasion to point out some of the inconsistencies between the first and second papers: for example,

Bengal Political
Consultations,

with the Vizier.

example, the articles relating to the system of collection and those relating to the courts of justice. He said they would all be reconciled, and his real wishes given in the paper to be now prepared. With respect to the collections, he said that in Asuf-ood-Dowlah's time, and in the early part of Saadut Alee's, the system of amānee tuhseel prevailed, but that it was succeeded by the farming system, and that his wish was to revert to the former one.

On coming to the passage respecting the denial by Mr. Clarke and Captain McLeod of the charge of having urged him to inculcate the Resident, and of his Excellency's having instigated them to do so, and their readiness to attest this on oath, his Excellency pointedly and repeatedly declared, as he had done before, that it was false, and that whatever oaths they might take they were unworthy of belief: that for himself, he was now so displeased with their conduct, that he had dismissed them from his service. We pursued this subject for some time, and his Excellency in the course of the conversation, partly of his own accord and partly in reply to our questions, said that Mr. Clarke, Captain McLeod, Mr. Law, and Mr. De L'Etang, consulted together in this business: that Captain McLeod used to speak to him on the subject when they drove out together in a carriage, which his Excellency had got from Captain McLeod: that Doctor Law also used to speak to him on these matters; and that he first suggested the removal of Major Baillie, whose enemy he was, because he ascribed to his (Major Baillie's) influence the Vizier's preference of Doctor Wilson to Mr. Law as a medical attendant: that Mr. Clarke frequently gave advice and prepared the papers for him: that he had no direct communication with Mr. De L'Etang, but that he was a party to the consultations: that his Excellency delivered the two last papers under the impression which he had received from Mr. Clarke and the other gentlemen, that the Governor-General would be gratified by it. His Excellency further declared, that he fully understood Mr. Rickett's communication to him on the occasion of his visit to his Excellency on the 31st of October, and that what he then said to Mr. Ricketts was prompted by Mr. Clarke. We expressed some surprise at so sudden a change in his Excellency's sentiments in the short period which elapsed between the conference at which he delivered his last paper, and the deputation of Agha Meer. His Excellency, without the least embarrassment or hesitation, replied, "There was a cause. " On my mentioning at the conference the nobut, I plainly observed that " neither his Lordship nor yourselves seemed to know any thing about it, " whereas I had been distinctly given to understand that my wish for the nobut " to beat at the new nobut-khana had been stated to his Lordship, and they " told me to beat it without delay as his Lordship had sanctioned it. Seeing " that the circumstance was new to his Lordship, it instantly struck me that " deception had been practised upon me. I passed a sleepless night, and the " next morning I, of my own free will, determined to dismiss Mr. Clarke " and the others from my service, and sent the message by Agha Meer."

We concluded by repeating what we had said during the conversation above reported, that the Governor-General had no object but the promotion of his Excellency's dignity, comfort, and satisfaction. That to enable his Lordship to give effect to this desire it was necessary that he should know the full extent of his Excellency's wishes, we therefore entreated him to conceal nothing; and as a proof of the advantage of declaring his wishes without reserve, we instanced the nobut, of which the Governor-General would have had no knowledge, and in which his Excellency's wishes could not have been obtained if he had not imparted it to the Governor-General.

His Excellency fully comprehended all that we said to him, and made short notes of some of the points which were the subject of the conference.

The whole of his Excellency's manner and conversation impressed us with a conviction that he spoke to us with freedom and confidence. He was perfectly unembarrassed, and in the intervals of the conversation on business conversed with gaiety and cheerfulness on common topics. Among other matters, on one of us inadvertently styling Captain McLeod "Major," he corrected the mistake, and said, in a jocular manner, "Mr. Clarke ordered his " servants

“servants to call him Major, and wished me to make him an Aide-de-Camp.” His Excellency, seemed highly amused at this story.

Letter
from the Vizier

Not having discerned the drift of the counsel and the insidious views (lit. deceit and incantation) of Mr. Clarke and the others, I lately gave to your Lordship the papers those persons wrote and brought to me. Now that I place no trust in the counsel of those persons, and doubt and uncertainty have arisen in my mind, so in like manner I entertain doubt and distrust respecting the contents of the papers in question. Under these circumstances, I hope, from your parental kindness and favour, that your Lordship will be pleased to return to me the whole of those papers, that after carefully examining and considering their contents, I may commit to paper whatever necessary and proper requests it may be my wish and desire to bring before your Lordship, when I will affix my seal to the paper and transmit it to your Lordship, for in every respect I hope for the prosperity and success of my affairs from your Lordship.

Letter
from the Vizier

It must be quite clear and evident to your Lordship, that it is very difficult to regulate the affairs of the State, and to transact all business connected with the civil and revenue branches of the Government, without the appointment of a trusty and faithful Minister possessed of integrity and honesty. I consider my prosperity and welfare to depend on your Lordship's parental favour and kindness, and I wish that all the arrangements of my Government should be made with the sanction of your Excellency's concurrence and advice : I therefore propose that Race Dya-Krishen, who has hitherto been employed in keeping the civil and revenue accounts, should be confirmed in that office. It was also my intention formerly, that the management of the civil and revenue affairs should be committed to Rajah Bhuwanee Purshād, because he had apparently acquitted himself well on the part of the late Almass Alee Khan in the settlement and management of many muhāls. As I do not, however, possess a thorough knowledge, such as is requisite, of all the circumstances of his character, it is therefore most advisable and expedient that I should nominate and appoint, on the part of my dear son Mirza Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder Khan, the respectable Agha Meer, of whose virtue, integrity, honesty, fidelity, and attachment, I entertain a high sense, that he may be entrusted with the conduct of affairs and carry on the business of the State. As the communication of this affair to your Lordship is one of my indispensable duties, I now state it in writing. Your Lordship having returned to me the papers of requests which I formerly gave to you, it is now my intention, after your Lordship's departure, to prepare a paper under my seal, which shall contain my necessary requests, and to transmit it in a letter to your Lordship, with the hope that you will be pleased to signify your acquiescence in those requests by returning the paper to me with your seal affixed.

Further, may the days of your happiness be perpetual.

To his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Written the 8th November 1814.)

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's letter. (Recapitulate contents of letter received 7th November.)

The arrangement which your Excellency has proposed, namely, that Raee Dya-Krishen should be continued in his present office of adjusting the accounts of the civil and revenue branches of your Government, and that Agha Meer should be appointed on the part of your Excellency's son, Mirza Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder, to transact the business of the State, appears to me to be entirely unobjectionable: and as I could have no desire but that your Excellency's wishes should be fulfilled in every respect where some marked consideration of our common interest did not oppose them, I have only to signify my cheerful concurrence in your Excellency's proposition.

Communication
from the Vizier.

Substance of a Communication from His Excellency the Vizier to the Governor-General.

That Captain McLeod, Mr. Law, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. De L'Etang, had invited and encouraged his Excellency to lay before the Governor-General matter of charge against Major Baillie, with a view to accomplish his removal from the office of Resident at Lucknow, and that they informed his Excellency that by this procedure he would gratify the Governor-General, who was displeased with Major Baillie. His Excellency states, that this subject was pressed upon him at various times by Captain McLeod, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. Law; and that although he had no personal communication with Mr. De L'Etang, that gentleman was a party in the consultations of the others. That Captain McLeod was accustomed to take the opportunity of accompanying the Vizier to drive out in a carriage, to converse with his Excellency on the subject. That Mr. Law first suggested taking measures for effecting the removal of Major Baillie, being hostile to that officer from a belief that the Vizier was influenced by him to prefer Mr. Wilson to Mr. Law as his medical attendant. That Mr. Clarke frequently urged him to bring forward matter of inculpation against Major Baillie, and persuaded him that by so doing he would please the Governor-General. That on his urging his Excellency to draw up a paper containing matter of that description, his Excellency refused, but at length told Mr. Clarke to write what he pleased and he would present it, being led to believe that it was the Governor-General's desire. That Mr. Clarke accordingly prepared and gave him a paper. That the discourse held by the Vizier with Mr. Ricketts, at that gentleman's conference with him on the 31st October, was prompted by Mr. Clarke and was to the following effect: viz. that Doctor Law, and not Doctor Wilson, was the physician of his Excellency's choice; that he wished to remove from his service the four sons of Mirza Jāfer, as they were obnoxious to him, being in fact spies on his actions, and receiving very exorbitant salaries, about eight or nine thousand rupees a month; that he was anxious for his son to be appointed Minister, and Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan and Imām Bukhsh, Paishcars under him; and that in in many respects, his Excellency was much dissatisfied with Major Baillie's conduct towards him.

That after Mr. Ricketts took his leave, Mr. Clarke waited on His Excellency, and gave him the paper which he presented to the Governor-General at the conference which he held with his Lordship at the Residency on that evening.

His Excellency has further stated, that Mr. Clarke informed him that the Governor-General was disposed to favour the appointment of Hukeem Mehdee and Imām Bukhsh to be Naibs under his son.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to the Government.

Sir :

I only to-day had the honour to receive your letter of yesterday's date, covering a memorandum of the substance of a communication made to his Excellency the Governor-General by his Highness the Vizier, and requiring of me such explanation, for his Lordship's information, relative to the charge it involves against me as I may wish to offer.

I most solemnly deny that I ever invited his Highness the Vizier to lay before his Excellency the Governor-General matter of charge against Major Baillie, with a view to effect his removal from office ; but admit, that I agreed with his Highness in opinion, that the removal of Major Baillie was essential to the establishment of his authority and independence.

I also most solemnly deny, that I ever led his Highness to believe that the Governor-General would be gratified by any such procedure, or that he was displeased with Major Baillie. It is, consequently, unnecessary to state that I never pressed these subjects upon his Highness.

It is true that I was in the habits of attending his Highness of an evening to drive out with him in his carriage, at his particular desire, and that he on those occasions always assailed my ears with his grievances, and that I was constrained to hear him from motives of humanity, my feelings having been excited by them.

In conclusion, I have only to express my firm belief, that the person named Agha Meer, in the service of the Nawaub, acting in the interest of another or others, has betrayed and deceived his master ; that he has been in the habits of fabricating stories and making use of the Governor-General's name, in a manner to intimidate the Nawaub to make the subsequent declaration detailed in your memorandum. Should his Lordship be pleased to order an investigation into this matter, I hope to be able to prove to his satisfaction, on the evidence of several persons on oath, that my representation is founded in truth.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to the Government.

Sir :

I have had the honour to receive your letter of the 8th instant, enclosing a memorandum of the substance of a communication made to his Excellency the Governor-General by his Excellency the Vizier, and desiring that I shall state in writing, for his Lordship's information, any explanation which I may wish to offer, relative to the charge which it involves against me of interfering in the public affairs of the Government of Oude; enclosing also a copy of a paper stated to have been given by me to the Vizier, and which I have the honour to return to you herewith, agreeably to your desire.

In answer to the substance of the communication, I have the honour to request that you will be pleased to inform his Excellency the Governor-General, that I never invited his Excellency the Vizier to lay before the Governor-General matter of charge against Major Baillie, with a view to accomplish his removal from the office of Resident at Lucknow, nor have I ever informed his Excellency the Vizier that such a procedure would gratify the Governor-General. I never urged his Excellency the Vizier to draw up a paper containing matter of charge against Major Baillie, nor have I ever framed a word, sentence, or article of such a nature. I have never received orders or leave from his Excellency the Vizier to draw up a paper of that description, nor have I ever solicited orders or leave to that effect. I attended his Excellency the Vizier to the review and to breakfast on the same day at the Residency, but did not attend him home from the Residency after breakfast. It was not likely I could have known in the morning before the review or breakfast, that Mr. Ricketts, the principal Private Secretary to the Governor-General, would visit the Vizier on that day, or at any subsequent period; nor did I see, hear from, or send to the Vizier after breakfast on that day, until late in the evening, and after Mr. Ricketts had been with him, when I happened to attend to ask his Excellency the Vizier if he had any commands for me, and he desired me to go home, dress, and come and attend him to dinner at the Residency. I declare, that the discourse held by the Vizier on that day, the 31st October, or at any other period, to Mr. Ricketts, as stated in the memorandum or otherwise, was not prompted by me: and I most solemnly declare before God, that the Persian paper of which I have been favoured with a copy, signed by George Swinton, Esq., Persian Secretary to the Governor-General, was never framed, or drawn up, or copied by me, under my eye, or by my order or direction; and I most solemnly declare before God, that so far from giving that paper to the Vizier (and I beg leave to repeat and declare that I did not give it), I did not give any paper whatever after Mr. Ricketts took leave of the Vizier that evening, nor in the morning, nor during that day, nor did I cause or direct any paper to be given to him on that day. May I beg the favour of your adverting to and reflecting on the improbability that the Vizier, a man of education, of forty years of age, and a prince, would give an unlimited authority to me, or any other person, to frame a paper of such importance and magnitude, and contrary to his own judgment and discretion, and without grounds; the improbability that he would present a paper of that description, really not framed or approved of by himself, to the Governor-General, and the improbability that I should be in possession of all the matter contained in that paper, and capable of arranging it as it is in a foreign language, in which Major Baillie knows that I am not a proficient, and which in fact I have never studied or acquired any considerable smattering of. Captain McLeod has authorized me to say, that he has received satisfactory information respecting that paper, viz. that Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, by authority of the Vizier, delivered it to the Vizier, and Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan has acknowledged this to Captain McLeod. Whilst the Vizier was waiting for Mr. Wilson to come to attend him to the Residency that evening, Captain McLeod and I saw Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan put two papers, one after the other, into the Vizier's hands, uttering some words in a low tone, which we did not understand; nor did we know what papers these were, but the Vizier put them into his pocket.

In regard to what the disposition of the Governor-General respecting the appointment of Ministers and other officers under the Vizier might be expected to be, whenever the Vizier occasionally adverted to or dropped a word confidentially in the course of conversation on such subjects, I thought it my duty to state, when I could not help replying and was urged by his anxiety, that he, the Vizier, had every thing to hope and to expect from the justice, liberality, kindness, and enlightened and expanded mind of the Earl of Moira, as to his (the Vizier's) independence, comfort, happiness, and wishes, as far as might be reasonable and practicable. That my situation in the family of the Vizier for many years rendered me subject to hear such topics, both from the late and present Vizier, I lament, and request that you will be pleased to state to his Lordship, that I shall ever continue to lament it, and that I solicit pardon for any incorrectness on my part on what has passed, and beg leave to apologize for inaccuracies in form, &c. in this letter.

Sir :

Letter
from Mr. Law.

1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter under date the 8th instant, transmitting, by direction of his Excellency the Governor-General, a memorandum of the substance of a communication made to his Lordship by his Excellency the Vizier, and desiring that I will state in writing, for his Lordship's information, any explanation which I may wish to offer, relative to the charge which it involves against me of interfering in the public affairs of the Government of Oude.

2. It is with feelings of extreme mortification and unfeigned regret, that after a residence at Lucknow for upwards of five years, during the whole of which period I enjoyed with unimpeached integrity a confidential situation in the household of his Highness the late Vizier, I find myself most unexpectedly called upon, within a few months of his death, to answer charges preferred by his son, of a nature so serious as those conveyed in his communication to the Governor-General, and which, as far as regards me personally, may be reduced, I believe, to the following heads :

First.—Having, in concert with Captain McLeod, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. De L'Etang, invited and encouraged his Excellency to lay before the Governor-General matter of charge against Major Baillie, with a view to accomplish his removal from the office of Resident at Lucknow, and informing his Excellency that by such a procedure he would gratify the Governor-General, who was displeased with Major Baillie.

Secondly.—Pressing this subject upon his Excellency at various times.

Thirdly.—Suggesting the taking measures for effecting the removal of Major Baillie, being hostile to that officer, from a belief that the Vizier was influenced by him to prefer Mr. Wilson to myself as his medical attendant.

3. Disclaiming, as I do in the most solemn manner, any and every communication of the nature alluded to with his Excellency the Vizier, I am really at a loss for language which, while it preserves the respect due to his Excellency's rank, shall convey in a sufficiently peremptory manner, that most unconditional denial of the whole of the charges in question, which I feel it due to my character to record in refutation of them.

4. When I advert to that degree of intimacy between his Excellency the Vizier and myself, which was induced by my constant attendance on the person of his father and himself, to the very high opinion of me which his father, in his presence, was pleased so repeatedly to express, and to the many assurances of affectionate regard which I have received from himself, both before and after his accession to the musnud, I am unable to conjecture from whence the idea of preferring these charges against me has originated in the mind of his Excellency.

5. Had these charges been confined to an interference in the public affairs of the Government of Oude, I should have contented myself with this most unequivocal denial of them, and with challenging the production of the slightest shadow of a proof in confirmation of his Excellency's assertions. As, however, he has thought proper not only to tax me with a conduct which I most solemnly disavow, but to assign as a motive for that conduct an hostility to Major Baillie, from a belief that the Vizier was influenced by him to prefer Mr. Wilson to myself as his medical attendant, I think it my duty to submit, for the information of his Excellency the Governor-General, the following statement of the only communications I have had with the Vizier since his accession to the musnud, regarding my own appointment.

from Mr. Law.

6. In the month of July, soon after the Vizier was placed on the musnud, I received not only the usual complimentary presents, but several polite messages to enquire after the state of my health, which was at that time much affected by a severe attack of the gout. A few days subsequent to his accession, I was further honoured by a visit from himself in person, accompanied by the Resident, and he was shortly afterwards pleased to repeat his visit attended by Captain McCleod. On those occasions, his Excellency was kind enough to evince the most tender concern at my illness, and to express an earnest hope that I should soon be sufficiently recovered to resume my attendance on his person; requesting, at the same time, that I would on no account endanger a relapse by venturing out too soon, as he found himself in the enjoyment of most perfect health.

7. On the 6th of August, being sufficiently recovered to go out, though extremely weak, I paid my respects to the Vizier at the usual hour of breakfast, and continued in attendance from that day until the 10th, being on every occasion received with the most marked and friendly attention. While at breakfast on that day, His Excellency evinced symptoms of indisposition and immediately retired to his apartments, to which I followed him, as I had been accustomed to do his father in his life-time. On my arrival at the door, I was informed by the sentry that I could not be admitted. Conceiving this, however, to be a mistake, I proceeded to another entrance, when to my great surprize I found his Excellency and Mr. Wilson in consultation together. I immediately apologized for my intrusion and retired. On the succeeding morning similar circumstances occurred with regard to the Vizier's illness, and I was proceeding to his apartments, when I was met by the Resident, who informed me that the Vizier was unwell, that he had a message to deliver to me from his Excellency, the purport of which was to the following effect: that the Vizier was distressed beyond measure at my having found himself and Mr. Wilson in consultation together on the preceding morning, and was anxious to prevent a similar occurrence; that he was desired by the Vizier to state to me that he entertained the highest respect and esteem for my character; that he considered me as his friend; that as Mr. Wilson had attended on his person for the last ten years, he had the greatest confidence in his abilities as a professional man, and was desirous of retaining him as his physician. At the same time he trusted that I would not be offended at this communication, as he was anxious to continue me in his service; that the arrangement proposed was, that Mr. Wilson should be the Vizier's personal surgeon, and myself surgeon to his household. Major Baillie remarked, that I must be well aware that the Vizier had a right to appoint any medical gentleman he thought proper: to which I answered, "most assuredly, but not at the expense of my feelings." After some trifling conversation I took my leave. On my return home I addressed a note to Major Baillie, a copy of which, together with his reply, accompanies this letter.

8. The agitation produced upon my mind by these communications brought on so severe an attack of the gout, that I was again confined to my room; and whilst labouring under this relapse, being anxious to ascertain how far the Vizier's sentiments corresponded with his former professions of regard and attachment, I addressed a letter to him in Persian, intimating the nature of Major Baillie's communications, and requesting to know if I was to consider it as declaratory of his Excellency's intentions. The Vizier's reply was in substance similar to Major Baillie's verbal intimation. It was then my intention to have resigned my appointment; but, prior to my adoption of this line of conduct, I thought it advisable to see his Excellency, and accordingly waited on him as soon as the state of my health permitted. On my entering his apartment the Vizier appeared in great agitation, and ere I had time to acquaint him of the object of my visit embraced me most cordially, and with tears in his eyes declared that in his late conduct towards me he was not a free agent, but had acted in conformity to the orders of the Resident, with whom the whole had originated; that it was in obedience to Major Baillie's directions that he had consulted Mr. Wilson, and that his regard for me was unalterable. His Excellency concluded this conversation by a request that I would rest satisfied for the present with these assurances, and on no account think of leaving his service.
Vizier

Letter
from Mr. Law.

9 Shortly subsequent to this I received messages to a similar effect from Captain McCleod; and these at later periods have been repeated through the same channel, as well as through Mr. Clarke; in every instance, I have understood from both these gentlemen, at the earnest and express desire of his Excellency.

10. On the occasion of the birth of my child in August, his Excellency took this further opportunity of evincing his attention and regard by a present of ornaments and dresses for the infant.

11. I continued in regular attendance on his Excellency's person; and while encamped at Cawnpore he one evening invited me to accompany him on an excursion down the river. On our meeting he took one of my hands in both of his, and without any prefatory discourse informed me that Mr. Wilson had sent him various medicines at different times, none of which he had however taken. In the course of the evening he again expressed a lively interest in my welfare, and on our return to the shore requested my company to dinner.

12. The ensuing morning, during our ride, his Excellency observed, with his accustomed familiarity, that he did not approve of the howdah in which I was seated, and ordered his attendants immediately on their return to furnish me with a better, which I accordingly received. The Vizier on this day also applied to me for medicines, a requisition which was of course complied with.

13. From that period until the 2d November I experienced from his Excellency every mark of friendly and polite attention: but on the latter date I received a sum of money from his treasury, accompanied with a receipt specifying the same to be the amount of the salary due to me up to that day. This I considered as equivalent to a dismissal from his Excellency's service, and since that period all personal intercourse between the Vizier and myself has necessarily ceased.

14. Having thus, to the best of my recollection, furnished a succinct account of all my communications with his Excellency since his accession to the musnud, it only remains for me to state, that prior to that event, and during the whole period of my employment in the service of his father, I was on terms of the most confidential intercourse with the present Vizier; that I attended him throughout many dangerous illnesses both by day and night, administered medicines to him repeatedly with my own hands, and received innumerable assurances of the utmost gratitude for my attention.

15. From whence the sudden alteration in his Excellency's opinion, as indicated by his conduct of the 2d of November, arose, it is not my province to determine; nor shall I attempt to draw the slightest inference from the foregoing statement, either with a view to reconcile his Excellency's late treatment of me with his former profession, or to inculcate any of the parties whose names have been incidentally mentioned.

16. I am conscious of having fulfilled, to the utmost of my ability, the duties of the situation to which I was appointed by the Government five years ago, and I throw myself upon the candour and justice of the Governor-General to determine how far the circumstances I have here faithfully detailed for his Lordship's information tend to acquit or to convict me of the charges involved by the Vizier's communication.

Letter
from Mr. Law.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

My dear Baillie :

If the conversation that passed between us this morning conveyed the sentiments of the Nawaub, it is evident he no longer wishes for my services ; for it is not very likely that Government will allow his Excellency two full surgeons from the establishment, one as his personal surgeon, the other to attend his household. I therefore feel that what passed between us was a delicate hint for me to retire, which I am afraid I must do, being the only line of conduct which I can adopt to preserve my reputation in the service, as well as to save me many mortifications hereafter.

Your's sincerely,

My dear Law :

The explanation which I conveyed to you this morning was communicated with a view to your satisfaction, by the express desire of his Excellency the Vizier, who entertains the most friendly regard for you, and wishes to retain you in his service on the same footing exactly as you were in his father's, with the single exception which I stated, Your conjecture regarding the views of Government is in my opinion premature. No additional drain from the Company's medical establishment is intended by the arrangement proposed, and my friendship for you would induce me to regret very much your persisting in the view which you have taken of the nature and object of the communication which I made to you this morning by his Excellency the Vizier's desire.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government.

Sir :

In answer to the letter with which you have this day honoured me, and desired I would answer to a copy of the substances of communications made to his Lordship by his Excellency the Vizier :

I do declare, on my word of honour and that of a gentleman, that I have never interfered in any of the affairs of the Government of Oude : that I have no subjects of charge or complaint against Major Baillie ; on the contrary, remember with gratitude the interest he has evinced towards me on a former occasion, and the kind reception I have experienced from him on my return to Lucknow the 30th September last : that I have not been a party at the consultations of Messrs. Law, Clarke, and Captain McLeod, otherwise than on matters most insignificant, neither having respect to politics, to Major Baillie, or disrespectful to his Excellency the Vizier.

I confess that I have expressed to my friends the disquietude and grief I experienced that his Excellency, since my arrival, had not entrusted me in the exercise of the situation he has honoured me with (superintendent and veterinary surgeon of his stud) ; though in a report I had the honour to submit to his consideration I had stated the advantage he might expect and derive were his stud judiciously managed : and I hope that neither what I have expressed to my friends, nor my report to his Excellency, will have proved disrespectful.

Lucknow Residency, 9th November 1814.

I have perused all the papers delivered to me by Mr. Adam with as much attention as the time would admit.

The only documents (Nos. 3 and 4) on which it could have been necessary for me to comment, having been voluntarily withdrawn by his Excellency the Vizier, and the contents of them most solemnly disavowed within a few hours after their transmission to the Governor-General, the necessity of a refutation has has been superseded: yet I owe it to myself, and to justice and truth, to declare, and to express my readiness to confirm the declaration on oath, that they form a tissue of the most glaring falsehoods and absurdities, and that I do not, in my conscience, suspect the Vizier of having ever for a moment entertained the sentiments, far less of having fabricated the assertions that are conveyed by them. His own retraction of those assertions, in the form of a letter to my address, dated the 1st instant, is translated and submitted with these remarks.

presence to his Excellency's Darogha of buildings. The present road is well known to be much shorter and more convenient than the former for all the people of the town, and particularly for his Excellency's courtiers. The conduct of my servants, or of people belonging to me, as referred to at the close of this article, is totally unknown to me, and I have reason to consider the charge as utterly groundless.

His Excellency expressed a desire to do much more for this person than I could authorize. He has probably repented of his justice to Cāsīm Alee Khan, as well as of his liberality to the sons of Mirza Jāfer. The former was suggested certainly by me, and most readily agreed to : the latter was in opposition to my repeated and earnest advice, as shall be stated more fully in its proper place.

Whosoever of my servants, &c. &c. &c. This seems unworthy of notice. His Excellency's servants and dependants come to me only when he sends them.

The Resident placed over me the sons of Mirza Jāfer, &c. &c. &c.

} His Excellency, on the morning of his accession, insisted, before many witnesses, on my giving up to him my Dewan, Mirza Hajee, whom it appears that he had promised while heir apparent to advance to the highest possible rank and honours in the event of his ascending the musnud. I yielded to the Nawab's most earnest entreaty, expressing my fear, at the same time, that his Excellency's kindness would spoil a young man to whom I was partial, and who had served me faithfully and zealously for a period of eleven years. The employment of the younger brothers was totally unknown to me till his Excellency announced it; and the salaries given to them, as well as to their elder brother, if indeed they enjoy what is stated, are so unreasonable, that I could never have authorized them if the question had been referred to my advice. His Excellency once, I recollect, proposed to assign an allowance of 1,000 rupees per mensem to each of those young men, and I remonstrated against this allowance, declaring that half the sum was in my mind more than sufficient; and that although I could never presume to control his Excellency's liberality to his servants, yet as those young men were supposed to be connected with me, I thought it my duty to state my sentiments regarding them without reserve. On another occasion I recollect a proposal, on the part of the Vizier, to appoint Mirza Mohsen, the fourth son of Mirza Jāfer, to the office of Darogha of the adawlut, and I objected to the measure in such terms as must have convinced his Excellency of my disinclination to encourage any liberality on his part, to persons connected, or supposed to be connected with myself. For the truth of this statement, and indeed of all the foregoing remarks, I should have no hesitation in referring to his Excellency's candour and veracity, if questioned in my presence, and free from the influence of those evil counsellors who induced him to prefer such charges.

The style in which the retinue of the Resident, &c. &c. &c.

} I do not understand the commencement of this article :
but with regard to the affray on the road, occasioned by a gross insult and violence on the part of his Excellency's troopers, one of whom attempted to destroy Lieutenant Fortune, the commander of my escort, I could wish, if it be thought necessary, to refer to that gentleman's testimony on oath. The Vizier, on hearing the circumstances, came suddenly to my tent to apologize for the conduct of his servants, offering to dismiss the whole corps from his service if I required it.

From the day of my ascending the musnud, &c. &c. &c.

} My proceedings with regard to the reform are reported in detail by my despatches to the Government. My daily attendance on the Vizier, while it lasted, was occasioned solely by his own earnest and repeated desire. His acquiescence in all my suggestions was voluntary, prompt, and apparently cordial. My recommendation of a very few Ameens to him was offered with extraordinary reluctance, in compliance with his earnest request; and of all the officers employed since his accession, no more than three or four are even personally known to me. The note which his Excellency addressed to me regarding Ameens, after he had been induced by his evil counsellors to oppose the progress of reform, and my answer to that note, shall be translated and submitted to the Government.

from the Vizier.

From his Excellency the Vizier. (Received the 1st November 1814.)

Mr. Clarke and Captain McLeod have been for some time past in the habit of saying to me, that a paper of faults to be imputed to you should be prepared and given in to the Governor-General : but I never would consent to this suggestion. At length, yesterday, after the departure of Mr. Ricketts, they brought me a paper, and stated to me deceitfully that the Governor-General was displeased with you, and desirous of receiving from me a communication which might attach blame to you ; consequently, that the giving in of such a paper would be pleasing and satisfactory to his Lordship.

I being quite unaware of the deceitful and insidious views of those gentlemen, gave the paper in question to Lord Moira. Yet God is my witness, that my heart has never felt, and does not now entertain the least dissatisfaction with you, and that the friendship and unity subsisting between us have not suffered the smallest diminution or change.

Be not, therefore, grieved or displeased with my conduct ; because I have not been the origin of this matter myself, but on the contrary, it has proceeded alone from the deceit and incantations of those gentlemen. Mr. Clarke has another paper of the same description with those, and I know not whether he has given this also to Lord Moira or not.

As these gentlemen have entered into such designs as those described, I have dismissed them both from my service, and with them Dr. Law and Mr. De L'Etang, who were also their associates in this affair ; because the continuance in my service of such persons as interrupt the friendship between you and me is improper on every account.

Captain McLeod's
Statement.

Captain McLeod's Statement.

His Excellency the Governor-General having directed me to detail in writing all particulars relating to certain communications which have been made by me from time to time, regarding the dissatisfaction of his Highness the late Nawaub Vizier, and that of his Highness the present Nawaub Vizier, with Major Baillie resident at Lucknow, from the commencement to the present time, I hereby state as follows, and declare my readiness to confirm the same on oath, if required so to do.

I never had any personal communication with the late Nawaub, Saadut Alee Khan, on any matters touching his situation with the Resident, or connected with the affairs of his Government, until the day on which I proposed taking leave of him preparatory to embarking for Calcutta early in the month of October 1818. On that occasion he took me aside with tears in his eyes, and apparently in the deepest distress, he said, " Captain McLeod, although I never opened my " mind to you, you must be aware, from report, how degraded my situation " is, and always has been, from the interference of Major Baillie in every " branch and department of my Government. I believe you to be my well-
" wisher, and entreat of you to represent to Lord Moira that I am, under present " circumstances, the most wretched being on the face of the earth, and that " I wish death would put an end to my miseries. You may state to his " Lordship from me, that I conceive Major Baillie is acting contrary to the " instructions of his Government, in thus trampling on my authority ; that " he is in the habit of supporting and holding out every encouragement to all " persons who come under my displeasure from disobedience, arrears of " revenue, and various other causes ; that I have no regular channel of " communicating my grievances to his Lordship but through this gentleman,
" whose interest it would be to withhold the communication ; and that not " being fully aware of the views of the British Government, I am afraid of " forcibly

“ forcibly opposing the Resident’s measures, lest I might thereby give offence to that Government to which I owe every thing; and whose wishes it is my interest and inclination ever to conform to. You may also state to his Lordship, that I do not think so ill of Major Baillie on this subject as of his principal adviser, Mirza Jāfer, and other natives about him, to whom I attribute all the harshness I constantly experience. I entreat of you most earnestly to do what you can for me in this business, and I hope for much from your interposition in my favour.” His Highness said a great deal more, which I cannot immediately recollect. Finding it impossible to resist this appeal to my feelings, I replied as follows: “ That his Highness did me but justice in believing that I wished him well, and that it would be gratifying to me to be of service to him. That I could not promise to state his sentiments to Lord Moira, as it would be presumption in me to address the Governor-General, in the first instance, on such a subject, even if I had the honour of being personally known to his Lordship, which was not the case; but that if his Lordship gave me an opportunity, I should endeavour, with caution, to bring the matter under his observation. On my return from Calcutta I stated to his late Highness that I had ascertained, through satisfactory sources, what his Lordship’s sentiments in regard to the princes of the country were; and from those I ventured to assure him with confidence, that they held out every prospect of his wishes being accomplished, on his stating them to his Lordship without reserve. That I understood it was his Lordship’s intention to proceed from Calcutta to Lucknow on the commencement of the rainy season, and that his Lordship’s presence here would afford him a good opportunity.” His Highness told me, I believe that same day, that my information was strongly supported and confirmed by some very friendly communications received from his Lordship through the Resident, and further by his Lordship’s abolition of a most obnoxious measure which had been sanctioned by the late Government and partly acted upon. The measure alluded to I understood to be the appointment of commissioners (Ameens) to establish the rates for the collection of revenue in the several districts. After this I had little or no communication with the late Vizier on public matters of any description, further than related to his Lordship’s approach and his anxiety for his arrival.

Captain McLeod’s
Statement

Soon after the death of the late Nawaub, his present Highness having always evinced a considerable degree of regard and consideration by his manner towards me, told me that he knew I was his father’s well-wisher, and that I had interested myself in his case: that he hoped I would observe the same friendship towards him, in which case he would look forward to relief from his degraded situation.

His Highness then, from time to time, as opportunities offered, either in the carriage, of an evening, or in a private room, detailed to me his grievances; the general purport of which were, that Major Baillie had availed himself of peculiar circumstances to assume the sole authority in his country by interfering in all matters, and although business was conducted in the name of the Vizier, yet his power was merely nominal: that he had gained over to his views, by promises or otherwise, almost all the public servants of the State as well as the higher classes of his private servants: that he (the Vizier) thus felt he had scarcely a native officer on whose fidelity he could rely: that he was daily insulted by acts of disrespect and disobedience by his own servants, under the influence of Major Baillie, and that he could not punish or remove them because they were supported by him.

That from the moment of his Highness’s accession to the musnud, Major Baillie had placed the sons of Mirza Jāfer about his person as spies and a check on his conduct: that those people were detestable to him, as was their father, whom he said the Resident wished to appoint Minister. That Major Baillie expressed his desire that he should take his medicine, when he required any, from Doctor Wilson, and said that if he took any from Doctor Law, he (Doctor Law) would kill him, from his ignorance of the duties of his profession: that to all this he felt himself compelled reluctantly to agree for the present.

Captain McLeod's
Statement.

His Highness repeatedly told me, that Mr. Wilson attended him contrary to his wishes; that he disliked Mr. Wilson; that he had always been partial to Mr. Law, was yet attached to him, and wished him, to the exclusion of all others, to be his personal physician. My compassion being excited by the wretched state of mind in which I saw him, I was induced to listen to these complaints, tending to accuse the Resident of an intolerable assumption of his authority, in the shape of interference, not only in the higher offices of the State, but descending to the more trifling and interior arrangements of his household, and at length complied with his earnest and repeated solicitations, that I would, if opportunity offered, communicate to Lord Moira the abject state to which he was reduced, by the unbounded and uncontrolled influence of Major Baillie. On one of these private conversations with the Nawaub, I asked him if he had ever consulted Mr. Clarke on all these points. He said that he had not, but that he thought Mr. Clarke a steady, intelligent, and discreet man, and that he should like to communicate with him. I strongly urged him to do so, as I thought that Mr. Clarke, from his long residence here, his knowledge of the language and general intercourse with the natives, could be of much more service to him than I could; that I knew him to have been a well-wisher to his father and much in his confidence. He said that he should be most happy to have Mr. Clarke's opinions, and begged I would tell him to give him (the Vizier) an opportunity of speaking to him the first time he came. Much cause have I now, and most sincerely do I regret, that I should have thus involved my friend in a cause which, from the strange inconsistencies in the Nawaub's communications, has proved so embarrassing to all parties. I now, however, most solemnly declare, that all we admitted the propriety of his Highness's doing, was, to state to Lord Moira what he (the Vizier) had so repeatedly urged to us, provided he was decidedly of that opinion, that such was the influence which Major Baillie and his native advisers had obtained throughout the country, and such was the use they made of it, that he was thoroughly convinced his authority and independence never could be established whilst they continued in office, and that those persons above alluded to had been placed by Major Baillie about his person contrary to his wishes. We always most strongly advised his Highness not to bring forward any complaints of a more serious nature against Major Baillie, and that if he persisted in doing so we should decline hearing further on the subject.

His Highness had repeatedly stated various articles of complaint against Major Baillie to Mr. Clarke and myself, which it has never been our intention or wish to disclose. Previously, I believe, to Mr. Clarke having been spoken to on these matters, the Nawaub told me that he was then causing a book to be written, containing what he termed (muckoozāt) wishes in regard to the conduct and management of his country, which he was desirous of presenting to Lord Moira on his arrival, and said that he wished to obtain my opinion on it. He accordingly, one morning, produced a roll of paper in presence of Agha Meer and myself only, containing seven or eight articles numbered; and added, that this was not the whole, but that I should have the continuation hereafter. He put this paper into the hands of Agha Meer to read to me, but he read it in so loud a tone of voice that I immediately stopt him, and said that if he would allow me to take it home I would read it carefully and give him my opinion. The paper was accordingly given to me.

A few days after Agha Meer called at my house, and delivered to me a few more of the articles for the said book for my perusal. Before I thought of returning these papers, I think it was, that Mr. Clarke was spoken to, and consulted by the Vizier on his situation; and I was accordingly desired by his Highness to give them to Mr. Clarke, in order that he might have his opinion on them also; I did so. I cannot now recollect whether it was Mr. Clarke or myself that returned them to the Vizier, but I think Mr. Clarke told me that Agha Meer had come to him for them by the Vizier's desire. Those articles were afterwards drawn up on large English paper. He delivered it into my hands and requested that after perusal I would hand it to Mr. Clarke. We both gave our opinion to his Highness on the paper as a loose vague document, which it would be difficult for his Lordship to comprehend the object of; but as he seemed desirous of adhering to it, we admitted that if it did no good it would would do no harm. He then requested Mr. Clarke to make a copy of this document on English letter paper, saying that as he was surrounded by Major Baillie's people, and was so constantly watched by them, he had scarcely any man of his own on whom he could place confidence sufficient, and his time being otherwise much occupied he could not conveniently get it copied himself.

Captain McLeod's
Statement.

Mr. Clarke accordingly had this paper copied, as he told me, in his presence, by his own Mootusuddie, and delivered it to his Highness on the day of our arrival on the banks of the Ganges; and we have understood from his Highness that this same paper was delivered by him to his Lordship on the morning his Lordship returned his visit in camp. Besides the above papers, his Highness put two others into my hands, which I also, by his desire, delivered to Mr. Clarke, containing such matter as it was contrary to our wishes should be brought forward, and we accordingly prevented his doing so; at least we know not whether any such paper has been presented.

After his Lordship and suite had departed from camp on the occasion of the return visit above alluded to, his Highness detained Mr. Clarke and myself. We retired to another tent with his Highness; Agha Meer, the only person present besides. He (the Vizier) appeared greatly dejected and vexed, accused me of not having paved the way for his intended communication to Lord Moira, and stated that, to his great surprise and mortification, Lord Moira had recommended Major Baillie to him in the most particular manner, expressed his satisfaction at finding he was so much pleased with Major Baillie, and that he made himself so useful to his Highness. To this he said he made no reply, but winked to Mr. Ricketts, who seeming to understand his meaning, returned the nod. I told his Highness that it was not surprising he should find Lord Moira unacquainted with the real state of the case in the first instance; but that if he wished to persevere in making his wishes known to his Lordship, I was confident they would be attended to, from what I had heard of his Lordship's character and general principles of policy and justice. He accordingly told us that he would make known his wishes to his Lordship verbally, and would request a conference for that purpose, on the day in which he was invited to dine with his Lordship. The gentlemen of his Highness's family (Mr. Clarke and myself included) attended the Vizier that evening at an early hour, to accompany him to his Lordship. He then assured Mr. Clarke and me that he was determined to make his wishes (relative to Major Baillie's removal) known to Lord Moira that evening verbally. Immediately after this declaration, Major Baillie came in. He appeared, I thought, much agitated, and after sitting for some time with us in public, took his Highness away into another tent; and some delay having occurred in the arrival of those gentlemen, who were sent by his Lordship to escort his Highness to dinner, they were closeted, I imagine, nearly an hour. We learnt afterwards that although the conference took place that evening, his Highness did not notice this subject of his dissatisfaction to Lord Moira, and we concluded that he had been intimidated by Major Baillie. After this Mr. Clarke and myself were for a length of time never admitted to any private conversation with the Vizier: Mirza Jāfer's sons were more watchful than ever. Captain Gilbert and Captain McRae having come to breakfast with the Vizier one morning lately, Captain Gilbert requested to speak with his Highness privately. His Highness took him to a private room accordingly, and Mr. Clarke was soon afterwards summoned to attend them. Captain McRae and myself remained at the breakfast-table. After these gentlemen had gone, the Nawaub seemed in high spirits, took Mr. Clarke and myself into the same private room, and talked slightly of the subject of his conversation with Captain Gilbert. I then taxed his Highness with treating all the gentlemen of his family with unkindness and inattention of late, and in presence of Mr. Clarke he seized my hands, and said, "for God's sake, do not think any thing of this just now: you know I am not acting from my own inclination; and pray say the same from me to Mr. Law and Mr. De L'Etang."

On the day preceding the tiger fight, I had learned that his Highness had given orders at all the gates of his palace that none of us should be admitted without without a special order. I however went that morning to put the matter to the test. I was not obstructed, nor was Mr. De L'Etang who accompanied me; but I learnt there, from good authority, that the order had been given, but on that day could not be acted on. I took an opportunity of going up to the Vizier, and of asking him whether he had given such orders: his reply was, with a kind shake of the hand, "I will tell you hereafter;" and hurried away from me.

Since then a Choubdar has been sent to me, to desire that I would send back the elephants which his Highness had allowed for my use. The day before yesterday one of Mirza Jāfer's sons came to me with his Highness's compliments, to signify that he desired I would consider myself no longer in his service. In reply to this I desired this person to offer my respectful compliments to the Vizier, and to say that as I had been appointed to his service by the Governor-General in Council, I could not receive a verbal message of that nature, and suggested that the communication should be made in writing through the Resident. Since that time I have heard nothing more on the subject. I ought further to add, that Mr. Clarke and myself having heard of a message sent by his Highness to the Governor-General, through Agha Meer, contradicting all that he had yet said, and charging us, or some of us, with having induced him to act as he had done, we went at the usual hour of breakfast, and determined, if possible, to question him on this subject. We were in some degree opposed in our progress up stairs, but went on and found his Highness seated near the landing-place. He was much agitated at seeing us, but desired us to sit down. Mr. Clarke then asked him if he had sent such a message to Lord Moira; and he denied to us both, in the most positive terms, that he had done so. Mr. Adam and Mr. Swinton then arrived. We were desired to go away, and in our way met Major Baillie going there, where we subsequently heard he had breakfasted.

J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

A cursory perusal of the second statement of Captain McLeod, which Mr. Adam has this instant put into my hands, suggested to me a number of observations which I could wish to submit to the Government at a period of greater leisure. For the present, I shall content myself with remarking on one most extraordinary insinuation at the bottom of the seventh page of the statement, which requires an immediate explanation. It is, that of my having appeared to Captain McLeod, as he thought, to be agitated on the night of the Vizier's first visit to the Governor-General at Cawnpore, and my having been closeted with his Excellency on that occasion, for the purpose, as Captain McLeod has been pleased to infer, of intimidating his Excellency from preferring a complaint to Lord Moira. To this extraordinary insinuation I shall answer in a few words; and I am ready to depose upon oath, that the possibility of a complaint against me by the present Vizier, and of an intrigue against the Government and me by Captain McLeod, were equally distant from my mind, and had never entered into my contemplation till the evening of the 1st of November at Lucknow, where I received the Vizier's letter retracting the accusations, and charging Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke as the authors of them. My visit to his Excellency, and my conference with him on the occasion to which Captain McLeod has alluded, were solely and exclusively to negotiate the loan of a crore of rupees for the Honourable Company, under the orders of the Governor-General, and I am ready to make oath, to the best of my recollection and belief, that the above was the only topic of our conversation.

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

1. I am directed by the Governor-General to impart to you that the Nawaub Vizier has notified to his Lordship the circumstances of his Excellency's having dismissed you, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Law, and Mr. De L'Etang from his service.

2. As the part which the British Government had in your several appointments was no more than simply an acquiescence in the Nawaub Vizier's temporarily employing each of you, the Governor-General would, in any ordinary case, have only had to cause his receipt of the intimation to be communicated to you. His Lordship, however, cannot in justice leave the characters of individuals under British protection liable to that sort of misconstruction, to which he sees your's may be exposed from recent occurrences.

3. Attaching perfect faith to your respective statements, which collateral information forcibly confirms, his Lordship desires me to signify to you, and through you to the other gentlemen above mentioned, that you stand in his judgment wholly free from the imputation of any unworthy practices.

4. Your own candour has made an acknowledgment which fixes upon you personally no inconsiderable degree of blame in another respect. You confess that, when urged by the Nawaub Vizier's repeated complaints, you agreed with his Excellency in regarding the removal of Major Baillie as the only means of establishing his own legitimate authority in his dominions.

5. The assenting to any such suggestion, nay, even the mere discussing such a question with the Nawaub Vizier, is a culpable infraction of those orders of Government by which all its servants (the Resident excepted) are strictly forbidden from holding political conversation with any Native Prince.

6. Great allowance is made by his Lordship for the difficulty, when your duties called you into attendance on the Nawaub Vizier, of avoiding to listen, through pure urbanity, when complaints were lightly and incidentally thrown out at first; and he further feels, that apparent sympathy imperceptibly grows into an implication of concurrence, calculated to betray you into an inconsiderate expression of corresponding sentiment.

7. His Lordship also comprehends the possibility of your having erroneously satisfied yourself, that in counselling the Nawaub Vizier to lay his grievances before the Governor-General (a procedure perfectly regular and licit for you), it was equally lawful for you to strengthen the advice by your opinion of the case to be submitted; although such a representation from the Nawaub Vizier ought to be the exposition of his own feelings alone, untinctured by your notions on the subject.

8. Admitted in extenuation as these points are, his Lordship has still to hold your conduct, in the particular alluded to, as reprehensible; and his Lordship trusts that the sense which he must believe you will yourself, on reflection, entertain of this error, will secure you against a similar deviation on any future occasion.

9. At your early convenience you will proceed either to Cawnpore or to Agra, as may best suit yourself, there to wait the instructions of the Commander-in-Chief.

Translation of a Paper enclosed in the foregoing Letter from his Excellency the Nawaub Vizier, received 9th November 1814.

Praise be to the Almighty for his exceeding favour, that by the influence of my propitious stars, the illustrious nobleman and exalted ruler, who established me on the hereditary musnud of the Vezārut, has at so early and auspicious a period adorned this quarter with his presence. Deeming it proper, therefore, that several requests should be honoured with the special signature of that illustrious nobleman and ruler, I now commit to paper the seven requests specified below.

First. Whatever portion of territory was held by my late father until the hour of his decease, and by your Lordship's placing me on the musnud has descended as an inheritance to me, let my power and authority be exercised over it as in the time of my father, and let not a purgunnah or a village thereof, on any occasion or by any change, be separated from my rule, but let it be confirmed to me and to my posterity to the latest generation.

Second. The late Governor-General the Earl of Minto proposed, as it appears, a plan to my father for the administration of his country; but my father, notwithstanding the urgent and repeated instances of his Lordship on this subject, never introduced it during his life. In consideration of the urgent representations of the late Governor-General, and of the promise of my deceased father to carry the plan into effect in his lifetime, I have introduced it with the concurrence of Major Baillie, and have deputed Ameens into the districts; my object being to make an experiment of the plan after this manner, that such of the Ameens as may be disqualified by inexperience, incapacity, or unworthiness, should be replaced by others, when tuhseeldarce sunnuds should be given, and with the concurrence of Major Baillie, trial of the system be made until the expiration of the current year. If the plan in question shall be productive of comfort and relief to the Ryots and of augmented revenue to the State, and shall facilitate the collection of the rents and promote the security and happiness of the people and the reputation of the Government, it will be permanently adopted and established; otherwise, whatever other plan may be calculated to secure those objects will be introduced.

Third. Now that the introduction of the system of reform, as proposed by the late Governor-General, has been agreed on, I have divided the whole of the country into six Zillahs. It has, therefore, become necessary that in each Zillah a Zillahdar, the same as a collector, should be established, with such state and military force as may impress all the Zemindars of the purgunnahs in his Zillah with due respect and awe, and that, in the event of any refractoriness on their their part, he may have the means, with such force, to punish and repress it, that thus the necessity may be obviated of giving constant trouble to the British troops by requiring their presence in the several purgunnahs. If the Zillahdar shall conceive himself to be unable with his force to accomplish his object, he will then of necessity require the aid of the British troops. Under this arrangement, therefore, let permission be granted for the entertainment in each Zillah of a force sufficient for maintaining good order and punishing the refractory.

Fourth. With respect to the administration of justice, it has been determined that in each division or Zillah a person learned in the law, with the requisite establishment of Omlah (officers), shall be attached to the Zillahdar, for the purpose of settling the disputes of the Zillah, agreeably to the ordinances of the holy law. If one of the litigants shall have a doubt (regarding the justice of the decision), an appeal will lie to the court of adawlut at Lucknow; and if such party shall still have a doubt, he may refer his case to two doctors of approved experience in the law, who shall be attached to the Presence, and who shall constitute the court of sudder appeal.

Fifth. If any one of my relations, dependants, servants, or subjects, shall go to your Lordship or to Calcutta to complain, any little attention or regard to the subject of his complaint will be the cause of impairing my dignity and consequence, and will excite others to follow the same course, and be a source of trouble to your Lordship, I hope that, immediately on their being heard, this answer will be given to them, that they must go and refer their complaints to their own Sovereign. In the event of their persevering and being urgent, let them be turned away with a sharp reprimand, that thus my authority and dignity may be upheld and the door be shut against evil, for three degrees of adawlut have been established here; and if, notwithstanding this, a person seeks to go from hence, it is a proof that his claim is an unjust one.

Sixth. Whereas charitable gifts and endowments bring blessings and prosperity upon a government, are acceptable in the sight of God and exalt our reputation among men, it is my intention that the subject of the rent-free lands, which were conferred during the time of my uncle the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and which, in consequence of some doubts, were resumed in the time of my father, shall be enquired into, and that such lands as shall appear proper to be released shall be restored. Nay, I propose to provide, on my own part, a suitable maintenance for the poor and destitute men of learning and piety, that being rendered easy in their circumstances they may occupy themselves in prayer for long life to me and the prosperity of my government. I have written this for your Lordship's information.

Seventh. My late uncle and my father went on hunting parties whenever they were so disposed. I propose, in this respect, to follow the custom of my ancestors; and I have now apprized your Lordship of this, that it may not be displeasing to your Lordship's mind: and, agreeably to custom, let the British troops on such occasions be under my orders.

Third.

The Governor-General's Answers.

I have no other view than the placing the Nawaub Vizier in that relative situation, with regard to the British Government, which clear and undeniable justice demands, and which, therefore, must be the wish of our nation. The effect of my procedure would undoubtedly be to give to his Excellency's Government character and efficiency in a degree which could not fail to satisfy all his Excellency's wishes on that head.

The success or failure of the plan of reform recommended by the British Government cannot be decided by the experience of a single year, the basis of that arrangement being a settlement for three years, founded on the result of the investigation by Ameens. I recommend to his Excellency either to pursue the plan already partially in progress with his consent, or to furnish me, with the least practicable delay, with one of his own, to be substituted for it with my concurrence. If the former shall be his Excellency's resolution, the Resident will be prepared to enter on the details of the arrangement with his Excellency and his Ministers without delay. If the latter, I request his Excellency to communicate to me his plan without loss of time, as the season is passing away. My earnest desire is, that an arrangement so essential to the best interests of the Nawaub Vizier's Government may be carried into effect with his Excellency's full concurrence, and according to the provisions of the treaty, that is to say, through his own officers. The British Government does not desire to interfere with his Excellency's free choice of his Ameens and other officers. It only reserves to itself the essential privilege of representing its objections to the employment of any person whom it may know to be unfitted, by want of talents or integrity, for the duty to be assigned to him. My purpose is, that the authority of his Excellency shall

Third. Now that the introduction of the system of reform, as proposed by the late Governor-General, has been agreed on, I have divided the whole of the country into six Zillahs. It has therefore become necessary, that in each Zillah a Zillahdar, the same as a collector, should be established, with such state and military force as may impress all the Zemindars of the purgunnah in his Zillah with due respect and awe; and that, in the event of any refractoriness on their part, he may have the means, with such force, to punish and repress it, that thus the necessity may be obviated of giving constant trouble to the British troops, by requiring their presence in the several purgunnahs. be exhibited as valid and substantial: therefore the mission of Ameens would appear the result of his Excellency's own judgment, and could never excite any misconstruction. The Nawaub Vizier has given me to understand in general terms, that his plan is to place his dominions under amānee tulseel, in contradiction to the system of farming the revenues. This is all that has been recommended to him by the British Government; all the minor provisions of the plan being left to be settled by his Excellency with the Resident, in a manner that may be thoroughly satisfactory to his Excellency. My last letter to the late Nawaub Saadut Alea defines this principle strictly. Whatsoever be the modification of an amānee system, Ameens will be requisite, and no supposition can ever exist that their appointment does not flow from the unconstrained wisdom of the Nawaub Vizier himself.

The division of the country into Zillahs is in strict accordance with the plan submitted to his Excellency's late father, and cannot fail to have my entire concurrence. It is highly proper that the Zillahdars should be attended by a suitable retinue. His Excellency is aware that, by the provisions of the treaty, the number of troops to be maintained by the Government of Oude is fixed, and that limit will, of course, not be exceeded. The requisite sebandy and armed Peons, for the purpose of the collections, will of course be maintained by his Excellency's officers. The British troops will always be ready to support the just authority of the Nawaub Vizier. The objections which have been made to the employment of the British troops, in certain cases, relative to the collection of the revenue, did not apply to any instance of refractory or rebellious conduct of Zemindars against their Sovereign the Nawaub Vizier. The suppression of any opposition to the authority of his Excellency is distinctly a part of the duty of those troops. The restriction upon their interference referred itself to the support of the farmers of the revenue, whose extortions drove the Zemindars and Ryots into natural resistance. The aiding those men in their rapacity and oppressions was disgraceful to the British and always affected their feelings painfully. Abuses of that nature cannot be protected by the British troops; but when when the establishment of an improved system of administration shall afford to the British Government a confidence that its troops will not be required to enforce the orders of rapacious and tyrannical Aumils and farmers, his Excellency may rely on their prompt and efficacious assistance for the maintenance of his legitimate rights and authority.

Fourth. With respect to the administration of justice, it has been determined that in each division or Zillah a person learned in the law, with the requisite establishment of Omlah (officers), shall be attached to the Zillahdar, for the purpose of settling the disputes of the Zillah, agreeably to the ordinances of the holy law. I highly applaud his Excellency's intention of introducing into his dominions a regular system for the administration of justice. As this is a subject of great importance and difficulty, however, it is impossible at present to speak more specifically. When his Excellency shall have explained, as doubtless he would be solicitous to do, to the Resident the details of his plan, a just opinion may be formed of its probable efficacy. Believing it to be a point on which his Excellency would be desirous to know my sentiments, I shall be prepared to state them with the utmost frankness, and I assure myself that his Excellency would receive that communication on the subject, through the Resident, as the best proof of my regard for his interests.

I also wish to recommend to his Excellency's attention the establishment of an efficient police within his territories. On this subject the Resident will be prepared to enter into details with his Excellency.

I take this opportunity of adverting to the state of the police in those of the Honourable Company's districts which border on the territory of the Nawaub Vizier, and which, notwithstanding the arrangement adopted in concert with the late Nawaub Saadut Alea Khan, continue to be infested by banditti issuing from his Excellency's territory and finding refuge there with their booty. On this point I shall instruct the Resident to address his Excellency; and I earnestly request his Excellency's attention to what the Resident may represent, and the remedy which he will suggest to his Excellency under my orders.

Fifth. If any one of my relations, dependants, servants, or subjects, shall go to your Lordship or to Calcutta to complain, any little attention or regard to the subject of his complaint will be the cause of impairing my dignity and consequence, and will excite others to follow the same course, and be a source of trouble to your Lordship.

I can have no hesitation in promising this in the fullest manner, with no other reservation than what may be necessary for the fulfilment of the engagements of the British Government, in cases where its guarantee is pledged.

ship. I hope that immediately on their being heard, this answer will be given to them:—that they must go and refer their complaint to their own Sovereign. In the event of their persevering and being urgent, let them be turned away with a sharp reprimand, that thus my authority and dignity may be upheld and the door be shut against evil; for three degrees of adawlut have been established here: and if, notwithstanding this, a person seeks to go from hence, it is a proof that his claim is an unjust one.

Whereas charitable gifts and endowments bring blessings and prosperity upon a government, are acceptable in the sight of God, and exalt our reputation among men, it is my intention that the subject of the rent-free lands, which were conferred during the time of my uncle the late Nawaub Asuf-ood-Dowlah, and which in consequence of some doubts were resumed in the time of my father, shall be enquired into, and that such lands as shall appear proper to be released shall be restored. I propose, in this respect, to follow the custom of my ancestors; and I have now apprized your Lordship of this, that it may not be displeasing to your Lordship's mind;—and agreeably to custom, let the British troops, on such occasions, be under my orders.

Having thus replied to the articles contained in the Nawaub Vizier's paper, in a manner which, I trust, will be satisfactory to his Excellency, I proceed to advert to some other points on which I am desirous of stating my sentiments.

His Excellency is aware of the opinion which former transactions, as well as those of a more recent date, have compelled me to form of the character and disposition of Hukeem Mehdee Alce Khan, and of the powerful considerations referring to the interests of both States, which compelled me to recommend to his Excellency to direct that person to quit the Court and retire to the district under his charge, and never to return to Lucknow. His Excellency having, in the spirit of friendship and a just attention to the advice of the British Government consented to this measure, it only remains to express my assurance that he will not permit it to be delayed or evaded by the Hukeemon any excuse or pretext whatever,

As far as I comprehend this paragraph, the object of the Nawaub Vizier must be equally just and generous. I understand the case to be, that certain lands were left by Asuf-ood-Dowlah for the support of particular individuals or communities. It is to be presumed, from his making that destination of them, he had the right so to alienate those lands: it is, therefore, a grievance on the pensioners, that such a provision should be taken from them. Of course, it will redound to the honour of the Nawaub Vizier's equity, if those individuals shall be re-established in their little comforts. His Excellency's intention of providing, on his own part, a suitable maintenance for the poor and destitute men of learning and piety is highly honourable to his Excellency, and must augment and extend his reputation.

This is a point on which his Excellency will have nothing to consult but his own wishes. With respect to the troops, they will attend his Excellency according to established practice.

Enclosure in
Governor-General's
Letter.

The important service rendered to his Excellency, and consequently to the British Government, by Rumzaun Aleo Khan, at the moment of his Excellency's accession, need not be insisted on nor urged to his Excellency as giving Rumzaun Aleo Khan a claim to his Excellency's kindness and regard. I considered it to be due to him, however, as a person who had essentially served both States, to recommend him to the Nawaub Vizier at the conference which I had the honour to hold with his Excellency on the evening of the 10th instant. His Excellency may be assured, that no unreasonable expectations on the part of Rumzaun Aleo Khan will ever be countenanced by the British Government. All that I feel it incumbent on me to solicit on his behalf, besides his Excellency's general countenance and favour, is the continuance to him of his present allowance from his Excellency's Government, and an equivalent for the emoluments of the offices which he held at the period of his Excellency's accession, if at any time his Excellency should think fit to supersede him in the exercise of the functions of those offices. To this extent I consider Rumzaun Aleo Khan to be entitled to my recommendation of him to the justice and liberality of the Vizier, and I offer it in perfect confidence of his Excellency's acceptance of it in the spirit in which it is conceived.

I trust that the appointment of the persons selected by the Nawaub Vizier to conduct the details of business on behalf of his Excellency's son and Minister, the Nawaub Nuseer-ood-Deen Hyder, will, by relieving his Excellency's mind of a burden of detail, and by facilitating a free and unreserved communication with the Resident on all points of common interest, promote both his Excellency's personal comfort and the welfare of the Government of Oude. While those persons continue to act with fidelity towards their master, and shall study to promote the genuine interests of his Excellency's Government, they will not fail to merit and receive the countenance, approbation, and support of the British Government, which can never be acquired by any of his Excellency's subjects or servants, except by the conduct which I have described.

The paper delivered to me by his Excellency at the first conference which I had the honour to hold with him at Cawnpore, although since withdrawn, contains many points on which it appears to me that a communication of my sentiments would be satisfactory to his Excellency. I therefore add some observations and assurances arising out of the consideration of that paper, which I trust will constitute a new ground of confidence, on the part of his Excellency, in the sincere interest which the British Government takes in his honour, dignity, and welfare, and of my cordial personal disposition to promote them.

The treaty unquestionably, in every fair construction, purported to leave the Nawaub Vizier an independent Sovereign within the reserved dominions. The clause by which the interference of the British Government, with advice or remonstrance through the Resident, is acknowledged as a right, can never, in any decent acceptation, be understood to mean a meddling with the Vizier's family and domestic concerns much less an avowed protection of his servants when they act in opposition to the orders of their master, and a pretension to bow his Excellency to subservience in the ordinary and indifferent affairs of life. No interference of that nature will ever have the countenance of the British Government.

It has already been distinctly explained to his Excellency, in my name, that I not only am earnestly desirous that his Excellency should be free and unshackled in the choice of his domestic servants, but that I shall derive a positive gratification from learning that he removes from his presence any individuals who may be obnoxious to him, from whatever cause. I take this occasion of repeating and recording the sentiment.

The situation of the Nawaub's brothers and relations, unless where provision is made for them under some guarantee of the British Government, is a matter exclusively for his Excellency's own judgment. It is a subject on which neither the Governor-General nor the Resident, in his official character, will ever touch, unless where he has had special instructions, or where his Excellency may invite an opinion by some spontaneous introduction of the topic. The relations of the Nawaub Vizier must owe to him that obedience and submission which is due to the Sovereign from his family in all Mohummudan Governments, and the British Government can never legitimately uphold any of them in contumacy against their Sovereign. The Nawaub Vizier's resolution not to reduce their stipends, while he justly claims the power of doing it, is becoming his generosity.
10 Z and

The completion of the arrangements connected with the retirement to Benares of the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah has afforded me great satisfaction. The discharge of the arrears of the Nawaub's former stipend, in the manner settled with his Excellency at the conference, namely, by the payment being made in the first instance from the Company's treasury, and the amount to be replaced by the Vizier, has also proved satisfactory to me.

On the justice or the policy of calling Shums-ood-Dowlah and others to account for sums received by them from their late father, the Governor-General might offer counsel were it asked, but he could never dictate. It is a concern of the Nawaub Vizier's internal administration. On the face of the thing, it is obvious that there would be insuperable difficulty in ascertaining what sums had been issued by the late Vizier to those personages on account for public purposes, or what was considered by him as absolute gifts to them. I apprehend that no documents exist to mark any such distinction, if even the specific amount of monies delivered to Shums-ood-Dowlah and Nuseer-ood-Dowlah can be ascertained. No proof in that case could be attained beyond their own acknowledgment. It might, therefore, be most expedient only to call upon them for a statement, without appearance of suspicion or harshness of address. This, however, is said on an assumption of a fact (the non-existence of official records) which may not be accurate.

His Excellency having intimated, through the Resident, his disposition to refrain from any demands respecting this money on the Nawaub Shums-ood-Dowlah, a disposition which, under the actual circumstances of the case, I highly applaud, his Excellency will perhaps consider what is above stated as acquiring greater force in its application to the case of Nuseer-ood-Dowlah.

If it be the custom of the Nawaub's family that they should none of them pay a visit to the Governor-General without previous permission from his Excellency the Vizier, the Governor-General undoubtedly will not encourage any breach of that observance.

Nothing can be more humane and generous than the disposition professed by the Nawaub Vizier to retain in their situations all those who were in employment under his father, on condition of their serving him with attendance and fidelity. His Excellency is the only judge as to what number and description of persons shall be employed by him. I have only to repeat the assurance, already given, that no interference in his Excellency's family and household will ever be practised or countenanced by the British Government.

British troops are at present employed as guards over the palace, treasury, &c. This is a matter wholly dependant on the pleasure of the Vizier, and he has only to signify his orders that those duties shall be taken by his own sepoys.

The British Government can have no cognizance of any thing that relates to the ladies of the harem or slaves. This observation does not extend to anterior fundamental arrangements, in which the British Government may have become guarantee for provision to female branches of his Excellency's family. In all other cases any interference of the British Government would be improper.

I have the sincerest solicitude to give to the situation of the Nawaub Vizier every degree of respectability and comfort. If I fail in the attempt to effect that purpose, it will be only from inability to ascertain in what particulars his Excellency feels ill at ease, or considers his dignity not duly consulted.

The augmentation of business consequent to his Excellency's accession to the musnud, doubtless rendered necessary more frequent communications from the Resident than would be required in ordinary times. Since that necessity has ceased to exist, the intercourse by visit will, of course, revert to its former footing, viz. whenever the Resident may have business to communicate, he will will send and request that his Excellency will fix a time for honouring him with an audience. Whensoever his Excellency may wish to confer with the Resident, he will send to propose an interview. The intercourse of the Resident with the subordinate Ministers must, of necessity, be frequent, and will of course be regulated in such a manner as shall best suit the regular transaction of business and the convenience of the parties.

Enclosure in Governor-General's
Letter.

The British Government is perfectly disposed to render the succession to the musnud of Oude in the family of the present Nawaub Vizier secure and unquestionable. If the line of that succession, as defined by the law and recognized in principle by the country, be certified to the Governor-General, the British Government will have no hesitation to guarantee it.

To conclude, I have only again to request his Excellency to repose entire confidence in the justice, honour, and friendship of the British Government, and in its earnest desire to promote, by every practicable means, his true interests and advantage. I also entreat his Excellency to repose a similar reliance on the Resident, Major Baillie, who possesses my entire confidence, and whose conduct will be regulated by the principles stated in this paper, and to consider the Resident as his friend, and to recur to his advice and assistance in all matters of difficulty and importance, in the perfect confidence that they will be directed to no other object than his Excellency's genuine interest and reputation.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

1. You will receive from the Persian Secretary to the Governor-General a copy and translation of a letter addressed to his Lordship by his Excellency the Vizier, and of a paper under his Excellency's seal enclosed in it, together with the Governor-General's reply, enclosing the answers to the Vizier's papers, and copies of them in English and Persian, for your information.

2. Although you were present at the conference held by the Governor-General with his Excellency the Vizier on the evening of the 10th instant, at which the substance of the Governor-General's reply to the Vizier's paper was communicated verbally to his Excellency, and are apprized of the views and sentiments of his Lordship on all the points to which it relates, his Lordship deems it advisable to communicate to you in writing such observations and instructions as occur to him to be necessary for your guidance, with reference to the questions discussed in the documents above referred to.

Article 1.

3. It is only necessary to observe, with reference to this article, that the Governor-General considers it to be no less essential to the honour and reputation of the British Government than to the comfort, independence, and dignity of the Vizier, as secured to him by the provisions of the Treaty of Cession, to maintain the principle stated in the Governor-General's answer. His Lordship relies with confidence on your disposition cordially and zealously to give effect to the views and resolutions of the Governor-General in these respects, and both to regulate your own conduct in conformity to this principle and to enforce the observance of similar conduct in others.

Articles 2 and 3.

4. It is extremely desirable that the question of the specific plan of reform to be introduced into his Excellency's Government should be decided with the least practicable delay. The necessity of a reform need not be insisted on in this place, and you are fully apprized of the sentiments of the Governor-General on every part of that important subject. Under the tenor of the answer returned by the Governor-General to the second article of the Vizier's paper, his Lordship concludes that his Excellency will immediately either signify his assent to the plan submitted to him by the British Government, or lay lay before the Governor-General the plan which he may desire to substitute for it. In the former case, you will proceed without delay, in concert with his Excellency and his Ministers, to carry the plan into effect throughout his dominions. The Governor-General cannot too earnestly enjoin the most scrupulous, and even delicate reserve, on your part, on all points connected with his Excellency's selection of the officers to be employed as Ameens, and subsequently as Tuhseeldars and Zillahdars. The efficiency and success of the system depend so much on the proper selection of officers, and the interest of the British Government in its efficiency and success is so direct, that his Lordship cannot relinquish or compromise the right of representing its objections to any persons of proved or known incompetence with respect to character or qualifications, with a view to the reconsideration of the selection; but no degree of interference beyond that just described would be consistent either with the provisions of the treaty, or with that free and independent authority within his own territories, to which the Vizier is justly entitled, and which his Lordship is determined to secure to him. You will feel yourself at liberty, therefore, to convey to his Excellency, in the most full and explicit manner, the resolution of the Governor-General to leave to his Excellency's free choice, with the qualification above stated, the instruments of the proposed reform, together with the assurance of his Lordship's entire reliance on a discreet and judicious selection of them: And, on the other hand, you will not hesitate to represent any objections which may exist to the employment of particular individuals, and request his Excellency to reconsider the subject with a view to the appointment of more competent persons.

Consultations,

5. If the Vizier shall proffer a plan of his own, you will, of course, receive and submit it for the consideration of the Governor-General with such observations and remarks as may occur to you; and you will suspend any further proceedings relative to the reform until the receipt of his Lordship's instructions, which will be communicated without delay. Should neither of the courses above adverted to be adopted by the Vizier at an early period, you will be pleased to bring the subject to his recollection, and request him to follow one or the other, in time to admit of a speedy decision of the question.

6. I am directed to take this opportunity of adverting to your despatches of the dates noted in the margin,* which were not replied to at the time of their receipt, as the measures reported in them, relative to the introduction of the reform into a part of the Vizier's dominions with his Excellency's concurrence did not appear to require any special remark or instructions, having been adopted under the previous orders of Government. It may not be misplaced on the present occasion, however, to signify the Governor-General's entire approbation of those proceedings.

Article 4.

7. On receiving from the Vizier a communication of the details of his Excellency's plan for the administration of justice within his territories, you will, of course, submit them with your own remarks for the consideration of the Governor-General. If his Excellency should express a desire to enter on the discussion of those details with you, you will, of course, comply with his wishes and afford him the benefit of your advice and suggestions.

8. It occurs to his Lordship, that there can be no better practical basis for a system of this nature, than that proposed by his Excellency himself in the first paper which he delivered to the Governor-General at Cawnpore, and of which a copy is in your possession: viz. the institution of three separate courts for the trial of causes arising among the Mussulmans of either sect and the Hindoos. His Lordship will approve of your recalling this plan to the Vizier's consideration, if the opportunity shall be afforded you of offering any suggestions on the part of the British Government. With respect to the police, his Lordship is not prepared to form a decided opinion on the plan which might be best suited to the actual condition of his Excellency's dominions. His Lordship is disposed to think, however, that the charge of the police in the mofussil might be vested in the the Zillahdars and subordinate collectors of revenue, and that in some cases the Zemindars might have charge of the police within their own estates, and be held responsible for the good order of the tract under their authority. These observations are made to enable you, in the event of the subject being brought by the Vizier under discussion between his Excellency and yourself, to state your knowledge of the Governor-General's sentiments as far as they can yet be formed.

* 20th July, 29th July, and 2d, 13th, and 26th September.

Government.

9. With regard to the police of the Honourable Company's districts bordering on the territories of the Vizier, a subject to which the Governor-General attaches considerable importance, I am directed to desire that you will bring it to his Excellency's notice with the least practicable delay. His Excellency's spontaneous offer, declared at the conference, to give orders to the officers of his Government to comply, without a reference to his authority, with all applications from the Magistrates of adjoining districts, and of their Police Daroghas, for the seizure of offenders finding refuge in his Excellency's territories, if acted upon with zeal, energy, and good faith, might preclude the necessity of any further recommendation to his Excellency for the correction of the existing evil. An authority limited to the Magistrates and the Daroghas, or Jemadars of thannas, to pursue offenders across the frontier, would constitute a material improvement, but if you should have reason to think that the latter proposition would be unacceptable to his Excellency, you will not bring it forward, unless the other plan shall be found after experiment to fail. You will, at all events, be pleased to request his Excellency to issue his proposed orders to the officers of his Government and to enforce their obedience.

10. The establishment of either or both of the two plans above adverted to, combined with the arrangement already in force relative to the employment of the British troops stationed within the territory of Oude, would, if properly executed, afford every hope of effecting an improvement in the police of the districts adjoining the territories of the Vizier, which can never be attained under the present system. The Governor-General is persuaded that his Excellency the Vizier will admit, without hesitation, the justice of the grounds on which his Lordship feels himself entitled to expect the sincere and cordial co-operation of his Government in a measure so essential to the security and comfort of the Honourable Company's subjects.

Articles 5, 6, and 7.

11. These articles require no observation in addition to those stated in the Governor-General's answer to each.

12. I now proceed to the other points adverted to at the conference, but not immediately arising out of the Vizier's paper.

13. You are fully aware of the solid grounds of justice and expediency on which the Governor-General felt himself entitled to recommend to the Vizier the removal from Lucknow of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan. His Excellency having assented to the measure without reserve, the Governor-General does not doubt that it will be carried into effect. As the early removal of the Hukeem is considered, under actual circumstances, to be of urgent importance, you will be pleased to move his Excellency to carry it into execution without delay, and not to admit of any excuse or pretence on the part of the Hukeem to evade the order. It is superfluous to observe, that as the Governor-General would not have proposed the measure, except under a firm conviction that the continued residence of the Hukeem at Lucknow was irreconcilable with the real interests of the State of Oude and of the British Government, his Excellency cannot recede from a proposition so deliberately made and unequivocally assented to.

14. The case of Rumzaun Alee Khan is one deserving of the kindness and consideration of the Vizier and of the regard of the British Government, whose interests were essentially served by the conduct of that person, in immediately communicating to you, and to you alone, the demise of the Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan, by which means you were enabled to take the precautions necessary for securing the unopposed accession of the present Vizier. The Governor-General infers, from the remarks which fell from the Vizier on this subject at the conference,

Consultations,

Letter

ference, that Rumzaun Alee Khan estimates his service on this occasion too highly, and founds on it unreasonable pretensions. No countenance can, of course, be given to such pretensions; but the Governor-General has inserted in the answer to the Vizier's paper, his expectation, founded on his Excellency's promise at the conference, that Rumzaun Alee Khan shall continue in the enjoyment of his actual allowance from the Vizier's Government, and receive an equivalent for the emoluments of the offices which he held at the Court of Lucknow at the period of the Vizier's accession, in the event of his Excellency not deeming it to be proper to continue him in the exercise of those functions. To this extent, therefore, you are authorized, in the event of any attempt to deprive Rumzaun Alee Khan of the advantages above specified, to interpose in his behalf, by representation to the Vizier, and by reminding him of the assurance which he gave to the Governor-General on the subject.

15. You will observe that the Governor-General has added to the answers to the Vizier's requests, and to the communication on the other points above referred to, some observations regarding the just and fair construction, in his Lordship's estimation, of the terms of the treaty, as referring to the nature and extent of the Vizier's authority within the reserved dominions, and an exposition of the principles on which his Lordship proposes to regulate his conduct towards the State of Oude. There are other observations, also, suggested by the tenor of the first paper delivered by the Vizier to the Governor-General at Cawnpore, which although since withdrawn, furnish the opportunity of stating to his Excellency the sentiments of the Governor-General, on several points on which a knowledge of them must be satisfactory.

16. The Governor-General cannot omit this opportunity of communicating to you some observations and instructions relative to the course of conduct which he considers it to be proper for the Resident at Lucknow invariably to pursue, as being equally prescribed by the fair construction of the treaty of 1801, and by every principle of sound policy with relation to the Court of Lucknow.

17. In construing the terms of the recorded engagements between the Honourable Company and the Nawaub of Oude, it is required by every principle of justice, that the most liberal and comprehensive meaning should be given to such articles as are in favour of that party, whose weakness presents no security for him but in that good faith on which he has relied. If abstract equity offer this conclusion, his Excellency is no less persuaded that sound policy will equally uphold it. It would be much gained, were one only to avoid the chance of that extremity, which should force you to withdraw the Nawaub's Government and establish your own in these territories: because such a necessity, though it might morally exist, could never be made out to the world, and the seizure of the Nawaub's possessions, would be universally stigmatized as a premeditated usurpation, arising from a base cupidity. When an exigency, such as that alluded to, is supposed possible, the circumstance which could create it demands close reflection. One case alone can be imagined, capable of driving us to a conduct so repugnant to our wishes, namely, the discovery that the Nawaub had secretly leagued himself with the enemies of the British Government, and was practising with them for our overthrow. This case, however, could not occur but through absolute desperation on the part of the Nawaub; and such desperation could only be produced by his undergoing a course of indignities or oppressions which he would regard in that light, so as that he should think the most unpromising conspiracy preferable to submission under such insults. Our interests might be very seriously affected by that temper in the Nawaub. It is true he has no troops, but he has much mischief in his power. He has vast command of money. Supplying by stealth funds to those who would with such a resource be able to levy any number of men, he might draw upon the Company the expense and danger of a war, leaving it infinitely difficult for us to trace his having furnished those supplies. The rendering the situation of the Nawaub comfortable is, therefore, an object no less incumbent on our policy than dictated by our generous feelings. This consideration, then, is to be held perpetually in view by the Resident, and eminently to guide his procedures.

18. The reservation by treaty of a right to interfere with advice or remonstrance upon any management of affairs within the Nawaub's reserved dominions, which which may injuriously affect the British interest, clearly implies that, in all other respects, the administration of the Nawaub is to be free: but, indeed, it is evident from the whole tenor of the treaty, that an uninterrupted exercise of his own authority within the reserved dominions was assured to him, in order to qualify the very strong step which we took in appropriating to ourselves (as an exchange for the subsidy) so large a portion of his territories. The Nawaub is, consequently, to be treated in all public observance as an independent prince. Essentially he must be subservient to the British Government; but in proportion as that point is secure, personal attentions to him involve no inconvenience, and on the other hand they cannot but be productive of advantage.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

19. In all intercourse the Resident should consider himself as the ambassador from the British Government to an acknowledged Sovereign. A respectful urbanity, and a strict fulfilment of established ceremonials, should thence be preserved by the Resident towards his Excellency. The latter must be conscious of the power of the Resident to exercise influence over him, so that any parade of that influence in the eyes of others must be no less useless than revolting. It must, therefore, be the care of the Resident, cautiously to abstain from any such ostentation of authority. He is, in a most special manner, to forbear from countenancing or encouraging any servant of the Nawaub in contumacious opposition to his master; and he should lay it down as a positive rule, not to recommend from his own household any person for reception into the immediate suite of the Nawaub. In regard to interviews, regular form should be invariably maintained. When the Resident desires to communicate with the Nawaub, he should always send to ask the audience, and not repair at once to the palace, so as to give the appearance of the Nawaub's being constrained to grant it, howsoever inconvenient. Within the palace as well as in public, whatever may be the intimacy which prior habits or services have established between the Nawaub and the Resident, an air of deferential politeness should be maintained by the Resident. This can never deceive the Nawaub into resistance against any just propositions of the Resident, but will, on the contrary, make him the more flexible, lest he should forfeit a show of respect calculated to exalt him in the eyes of his subjects. Finally, after what has recently passed, the Resident should be cautious not to let any of the gentlemen attached to the Residency slide into regular functions in any of the Nawaub's establishments. Such a position must always militate with their primary duties, and cannot fail to lead to irregularities. This observation does not extend to the physician. The claims of humanity would forbid any shackle to the Nawaub's addressing himself for medical advice to the surgeon of the Residency, and there can be no objection to any arrangement which shall make that recurrence more prompt and satisfactory.

20. By a due regard to these principles, the Governor-General hopes that both yourself and succeeding Residents will obtain from the Nawaub a willing compliance, on every occasion where it may be necessary to interpose advice, an acquiescence of very different import to the interests of the British Government from that enforced, reluctant, and tardy submission, which leaves the minds of the parties soured, and thence leads inevitably to mischievous estrangement.

The Governor-General's Minute.

In order that my view of the extraordinary transactions to which the foregoing documents relate may be distinctly understood, it is necessary that I should enter into details which are not furnished by those documents.

When I arrived at Cawnpore, viz. on the 8th October, I had not the remotest suspicion that Major-Baillie was not to the highest degree in the good graces of the Nawaub Vizier. The letters of Major Baillie, my only source of information, pictured the confidence and attachment of the Nawaub Vizier towards him in the most glowing colours: and although Major Baillie made some complaint about his Excellency's hanging back from the reform of the revenue administration, I did not put upon the circumstance any construction beyond this: that the the Resident had used an indiscreet importunacy on that particular point, which had made the Nawaub Vizier regard the subject with some distaste.

The visit which the Nawaub Vizier first paid to me was a matter of such ceremony as left no room for deducing any conclusions. I only made it the opportunity of testifying to his Excellency such dispositions as were calculated to invite his fullest reliance on me.

On Thursday the 13th October, I returned his Excellency's visit. After breakfast I requested that I might have some private conversation with him. I had the day before desired the Resident to apprise him that I should do so. On his proposing to retire to an inner tent, I begged that Mr. Ricketts (Mr. Adam was unwell) and Mr. Swinton, as well as the Resident, might accompany us, stating that the two first were necessarily to be apprized of all that might there take place, and might therefore as well witness the conversation as have it subsequently retailed by me. This was admitted. The conversation commenced by the tender by the Vizier of the loan (see despatch to his Excellency the Vice-President in Council dated 29th October*) to the Honourable Company of one crore of rupees, and which was accepted with suitable expression of my sense of the friendly spirit in which the offer was made, and then entered into the views of the British Government regarding his Excellency's situation, which were calculated to excite great satisfaction in him; for they not only extinguished some apprehensions which I am sure he entertained, but they must have gone beyond his hopes in the security they afforded for his future comfort. I entreated him to repose himself without reserve on Major Baillie, whom I stated as possessing my entire confidence; and I told his Excellency that if any thing capable of promoting his respectability and ease were left unarranged, it would be his own fault in not suggesting the points to me. It did strike me that this address was not met by his Excellency with as much display of gratification as I thought it might naturally have produced; but I ascribed this, on reflection, to the habitual gravity of countenance which the Asiatics are accustomed to preserve. His Excellency then presented a paper,† containing, as he said, certain articles to which he solicited my attention. I handed it to Mr. Swinton saying that it would be translated by that gentleman, and that I would then lose no time in answering it. Major Baillie took the paper and began to examine it with an apparent anxiety, which proved that such a production was unexpected by him. I interrupted this by a remark, that no comment could be made on the sudden upon a document of that nature, and that I must see its contents in English before I could discuss them.

Mr. Clarke had been introduced to my Secretary, Mr. Thompson, by a letter from Mr. Alexander, in which the latter represents Mr. Clarke as not only a person of tried integrity, but as one so possessed of the language, and so conversant with all concerns at Lucknow, as that he might be very useful to Mr. Thompson in his arrangements for our progress, on which ground Mr. Alexander recommended him to acquaintance and attention. Captain McLeod's sister was intimately known by Lady Loudon when in Scotland, whence civilities had been shown to him while he was in Calcutta. From this cause those gentlemen were asked to dine with me on the same day.

When they arrived at Cawnpore they went to Mr. Thompson's tent. As a mere loose topic of conversation, he said that he trusted I had left the Nawaub Vizier's mind thoroughly comfortable. He was astonished at their answering, "so far from it, he is in a state of absolute despair." On his asking the meaning of such an assertion, they told him that the Nawaub Vizier had reckoned upon being delivered from the despotism of Major Baillie, but that I had, on the contrary rivetted his chains, by declaring that Major Baillie possessed my entire confidence. Mr. Thompson very properly judged that I ought not to be left ignorant of the circumstance, and communicated it accordingly. I desired to see the two gentlemen, and I received them separately. I could not have the least doubt of the Nawaub's having imparted to them all that passed at the interview, for the course of the conversation which I had held was accurately detailed by each of them. No Minister or attendant of the Nawaub had been present, therefore his Excellency himself was the only person capable of imparting what had then passed. In answer to my questions, many matters felt as grievances by the Nawaub were mentioned by them. Not either of them spoke with the slightest asperity of Major Baillie, and Captain McLeod appeared to me not frank enough in his replies. I had, either on the preceding day or the day before that, endeavoured to obtain from him information about a story current in the camp, of a servant of the Nawaub's having been wounded by the Suwarree of the Resident, and the tone of his answers had really made me believe that he was labouring to give a favourable colour to the transaction from attachment to Major Baillie. I said to both those gentlemen, that though I could not doubt the accuracy of their information, the statement did not come in a form which I could recognize; that the Nawaub himself was the only person from whom I could formally know particulars of such a nature; and that I had reason to complain of his not unbosoming himself, when I had given him such ample encouragement in the morning. Their remark was, that his Excellency's mind was in such subjection to Major Baillie, as that he would never attempt to complain of that gentleman in his presence.
Nawaub

*Governor-General's Minute,
30th Nov. 1814.*

This passed on Thursday. The Nawaub Vizier was to dine with me on the Saturday. In the interval a letter came from Mr. Clarke, requesting, on the part of his Excellency, that when he should arrive at my quarters I would give him the opportunity of speaking to me in private without Major Baillie's being present. I requested Mr. Ricketts to answer the letter, intimating that the desired opportunity should be given to the Nawaub Vizier; but observing that the application should have come through the official channel of one of the Government secretaries, and cautioning Mr. Clarke against bearing any further part in such a correspondence.

When the Nawaub came, viz. on the 15th of October, I expressed my wish that he would retire with me to a private room, telling Major Baillie that I thought it would be most delicate to dispense with his attendance. I told the Nawaub, however, that I must take the liberty of having Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Adam, and Mr. Swinton present, as they were my confidential assistants, sworn to secrecy, and as I had made the resolution that I never would have a private conference with any Native Prince unless they witnessed the interview.

His Excellency did not object. I then asked if he wished that any of his suite should be present. He said it was unnecessary. My first question to his Excellency was, whether he had authorized Mr. Clarke to request that I would give his Excellency the opportunity of a conference without Major Baillie's being present. He answered that he had authorized Mr. Clarke to that effect. My reply was, that I was happy to meet his wishes; but that as I could not rest on what Mr. Clarke had loosely said, I entreated his Excellency to explain himself to me without reserve.

The Vizier took this occasion to observe that he had proposed to advance to the Honourable Company a crore of rupees by way of loan, but that this was nothing, and he begged that it might be accepted as a free gift. The obvious objections to my receiving the money on any other terms than that of a loan were explained to his Excellency. I repeated my assurances, that it was the sincere disposition of the British Government to uphold his dignity and to promote his comfort. He still maintained an unaccountable silence as to particulars, but he said that he had drawn up a paper explaining the objects for which he looked to my justice and kindness, though he had not brought it with him; and he added, that he would transmit it on the morrow, with every hope that I would attend to it. I assured him that the contents of the paper should be duly weighed; but I observed, that the duration of my stay at Cawnpore must be short, and that we should expedite matters much if he would now enable me to discuss with him the outline of what he had committed to writing. He appeared so shy, that I doubted whether he really thought me sincere in the invitation I had given him to speak; so that I repeated again with energy the assertion that the British Government had no indirect views, and only required to know what would best advance his prosperity and satisfaction.

Governor-General's Minute,
30th Nov. 1814.

Still his Excellency maintained the same caution, only referring me to Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan. This he did twice. It appeared to me awkward to take the Hukeem into consultation after I had entertained an objection to that individual's being contemplated by his Excellency for his Minister, on account of recorded obstructions attempted by Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan to purposes of the British Government: the interview therefore closed. Mr. Clarke afterwards declared that the Nawaub Vizier had pleaded his knowledge of Mr. Swinton's peculiar attachment to Major Baillie, as the reason for his not having availed himself of the opening thus afforded to him.

In this state matters continued till I reached Lucknow; nor did any thing particular occur for a short time after my arrival there. The second paper promised by the Nawaub Vizier was not sent until the second day after my arrival, and then only in consequence of my having taken occasion, at a visit the Vizier paid to me at Constantia, at breakfast, to say to his Excellency that I had delayed the answer to the first paper until I had received the further one promised. It was then sent to Mr. Swinton (see Document No. 2). A morning or two afterwards, when we had been to see an elephant fight at a country palace of the Nawaub Vizier's, at the breakfast which followed, his Excellency said two or three things, which I understood, across me to Major Baillie. He then said something which I did not exactly catch, my attention having been attracted elsewhere. Major Baillie on this said to me, "His Excellency desires that I would petition your Lordship, in his name, to appoint Mr. Wilson physician to his Excellency's person." It had been represented by Mr. Clarke, that a heavy grievance of the Vizier's was Major Baillie's endeavouring to deprive him of Mr. Law, and to fix his (Major Baillie's) own physician, Mr. Wilson, on his Excellency. Struck with this recollection, and not confident that the phrase which I had loosely heard applied itself to a physician at all, I answered that I could not give any promise so much on the sudden, as there might be objections to which I was not at the instant able to advert. The next day we went to course antelopes with cheetas in the park of Dil Cooshā. The Nawaub Vizier remarked to me the unfitness of the hackeries on which two cheetas of mine were carried. Immediately after I heard him ask Captain Gilbert to breakfast with him the next morning. Captain Gilbert had so little suspicion of any political objects being involved in the invitation, that he came in the middle of the day to ask me if I would allow him to take my aide-de-camp, Captain M'Rae to the breakfast. His addressing me for that leave gave me the opportunity of speaking to him on a point which I should not otherwise have thought of mentioning to him.

I told him it was clear to me that the Nawaub had desired his attendance for the purpose of arranging with him some kind of carriage for my cheetas, which I desired Captain Gilbert to resist, as I had already got Captain Gilbert to provide convenient vehicles; but I said, "as you are to have this conversation, I wish you would dexterously make out for me what is the Nawaub's real wish about a physician, it being doubtful to me whether he prefers Mr. Law or Mr. Wilson."

After breakfast the next morning, the Nawaub took Captain Gilbert into a private room. Before his Excellency began any discourse Captain Gilbert asked him (as if from a sudden thought of his own) which of the two he wished to have for his physician. The Nawaub in the most earnest terms exclaimed, that he wished for Mr. Law, and he reprobated the attempt of Major Baillie to force Mr. Wilson upon him. His Excellency then unfolded a long string of grievances against Major Baillie, professing that, as long as Major Baillie should remain at Lucknow, he (the Nawaub) could never have an hour's comfort. He urged this with great apparent earnestness and much repetition, confirming more than once the expression of his wish that Mr. Law should not be removed, and closing the conversation by saying, "I was very anxious to confide all this to you." His Excellency never adverted to the cheetas, or to any other subject than his own distresses, so that, as far as one can judge from appearances, he had desired the interview for the sole purpose of communicating his discontent. Captain Gilbert very properly waited upon me as soon as he was dismissed by the Nawaub Vizier, and imparted to me this extraordinary conversation.

On

On the morrow I was to review the subsidiary battalions at the cantonment, and the Nawaub Vizier was to accompany me. My horses being sent forward to the review ground, I went in my phaeton to the gate of the Nawaub's palace, which was in our road. His Excellency being a-foot at the gate, I invited him into the phaeton with me. On our way I told him that Captain Gilbert had informed me of his Excellency's wishes in favour of Mr. Law, and I said that Mr. Law should be appointed accordingly. Though I have not in the language that facility which is requisite for conversation, I possess it sufficiently not to err in the structure of a phrase when I have time to meditate it; therefore I am quite sensible that in my expressions to the Nawaub I did not leave room for miscomprehension. He immediately clasped my hands eagerly, and with more veracity of countenance than I had ever before witnessed in him, he said that he had no hope but in my kindness. That this statement may not be too prolix, I endeavoured to avoid advertence to any thing which may be recorded in other documents relative to this transaction; yet I cannot omit observing, that when Mr. Ricketts went by my desire to apprise the Nawaub that I should take him into a private room at the Resident's (where we were to meet at dinner), without allowing Major Baillie to be present, and to beg his Excellency to consider the speaking before Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Adam, and Mr. Swinton, exactly the same thing as if he spoke to me alone, his Excellency confirmed to Mr. Ricketts all that he had said to Captain Gilbert, and he closed with apparently an unpremeditated ebullition of, "cannot you get Major Baillie removed?"

Governor-General's Minute,
30 Nov. 1814.

The next conference took place at the Residency on the evening of the 31st October, in consequence of what passed at the visit paid to the Nawaub Vizier by Mr. Ricketts on the forenoon of that day, as above mentioned. There were present, besides the Vizier and myself, Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Adam, and Mr. Swinton. His Excellency was asked again to state, without reserve, what his real wishes were; and I assured him that I had no object but his honour and welfare. His Excellency presented a paper,* saying that it contained the points on which he was desirous of receiving my acquiescence; that it contained, also, those matters which were stated in detail in the paper delivered to Mr. Ricketts. Some of the subjects were then adverted to. The Vizier suddenly remarked, that he wished to have my order that the nobut, which had been prevented from beating at the gateway, might be allowed to beat: and on being questioned about it, and the reason why it did not beat, his Excellency observed that it did not beat because the sound disturbed the Resident. The Vizier seemed to have this point much at heart; for as the conference was breaking up he said with eagerness, "I hope your Lordship will order the nobut to beat: let it beat to-morrow morning." Another point, and which had been stated to Mr. Ricketts, was now discussed: the appointment of persons to fill the office of Paishcar to his son and his grandson, whom he proposed to appoint, the one to be Minister and the other chief judge. His Excellency stated his wish to be, that Hukeem Mehdee or Imām Bukhsh should be Paishcar; some uncertainty appearing as to whether he meant that one or the other should be appointed, or both, a conversation ensued on the subject, which was ended by his Excellency saying that "or" was written in the paper. I observed, that a necessity existed for the Paishcar being a person who had not only the confidence of his Excellency but that of the British Government; that the conduct and known disposition of Hukeem Mehdee were such as to make it impossible for the British Government to confide in him; and that his appointment, consequently, would not promote harmony and good understanding between the two States. The Vizier said that Hukeem Mehdee was a man of capacity and integrity, and had his confidence, but that he had enemies because he would not join with others (meaning the Resident), and that he hoped that he might be appointed: to which I replied, that the British Government had good information, and could not confide in Hukeem Mehdee as a Minister. That, however, it was not at all my wish that Hukeem Mehdee should be excluded from his Excellency's service: that, on the contrary, I thought his employment as a revenue officer was advantageous to his Excellency's interests. The Vizier did not urge the point further, but said that he hoped hoped there was no objection to Imām Bukhsh: to which I observed, that I knew of none, but would if he pleased enquire. His Excellency replied, that he would give in the names of several persons from amongst whom a Paishcar might be selected: to which I said, that I could make no selection, as the choice must be his own.

al's Minute,

At this conference the Vizier observed that he had complaints against Major Baillie, and that the paper contained them all. On leaving the room his Excellency spoke again about the nobut, as before stated. I remarked that some mistake must have occurred about it, but that enquiry should be made and an answer given before his Excellency left the house. I accordingly desired Mr. Adam to ask Major Baillie whether he had in any manner interfered about the nobut. Major Baillie declared that he never had, directly or indirectly, interfered; that the nobut had never been beaten at the new palace, but had remained at the old palace; that he concluded, that after the new nobut khana was built, the late Vizier observing its contiguity to the Residency, had, out of consideration for his (Major Baillie's) comfort, refrained from beating it. I in consequence requested the Nawaub Vizier to order the nobut to be beaten at the new palace whenever he pleased.

On the following day Agha Meer was sent with the message to Mr. Adam and Mr. Swinton, as detailed in their report; and on the day after those gentlemen waited on his Excellency, and received the communication, also detailed in their report, and in the letter from the Vizier, retracting the complaints against Major Baillie, and charging Captain McLeod, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Law, and Mr. De L'Etang, with having urged him to make them. On the 4th November Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Adam, and Mr. Swinton waited on the Nawaub Vizier, in pursuance of my written instructions to them. All that followed appears in the papers marked Nos. 10 et seq.: except that, although the Nawaub Vizier persisted to Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Adam, and Mr. Swinton, in the assertion that my name had not been used to influence his Excellency's sudden change of conduct, Captain McLeod maintained to me that Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, and two others whom he specified, were present when Agha Meer did use my name to frighten his master into compliance with the counsel which he then gave. The language supposed to have been used by Agha Meer to the Nawaub was, "that his Excellency had ruined himself; that the Governor-General was outrageous at his Excellency's complaints against Major Baillie, and even talked of removing the Nawaub from the musnud; and that there was no remedy but to declare he had been misled by the artifices of others to profess what was most opposite to the wishes or dictates of his heart." I have no doubt but that Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan asserted this to Captain McLeod. Whether it were true, or only a daring attempt of the Hukeem's to overbear the Nawaub by the testimony of himself and his colleagues, I cannot guess. The Hukeem, I apprehend, was anxious to be brought forward and examined, for Captain McLeod earnestly petitioned that those persons should be questioned on the point in presence of the Nawaub. I told Captain McLeod, that after the positive declaration of the Nawaub on the subject, I could not do any thing which would so distinctly impeach his veracity by implication, as the examining his servants on the point. Another solicitation made by Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke was rejected by me on the same ground of delicacy. His Excellency had charged them with having impressed him with the notion that I disliked Major Baillie, and that his Excellency could not gratify me more than by affording me ostensible ground for removing that gentleman from his situation. Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke severally denied having ever uttered any insinuation of that tenor, and they implored that I would sit as in council and receive their declaration on oath, in face of the Nawaub Vizier, as to the absolute non-existence of any colour for that charge against their probity. Awkward as the procedure would have been, I know not that I could have brought myself to refuse to those gentlemen the means of expurgation equitably due when their honour was so arraigned, had I not felt myself ready to record the most unwavering conviction of their entire innocence in that particular. The charge carries no probability on the face of it.

Those

Those gentlemen might have personal dislike to Major Baillie, but that they should indulge it at the extreme risk which they must be aware would attend a misrepresentation so likely to be brought to the test, is not credible. That any advantage to themselves, other than the gratification of spleen against the Resident, could arise out of this machination, has not been surmised, and is not readily conceivable: on the other hand, they were to hazard situations of considerable profit for an object which might prove unattainable, even after their fullest success, in influencing the Nawaub Vizier's mind. In this argument I put aside the weight due to their personal characters. At the same time I should remark, that could only be done for the purpose of exposing more distinctly the absence of likelihood in the imputation against them; because on any other principle, their untainted integrity would be forcibly pleadable against a loose accusation. Still this accusation has been made; therefore it is necessary to account for it.

Governor General's Minute,
30 Nov. 1814.

It is to me perfectly clear, that the Nawaub Vizier has had floating dissatisfactions against Major Baillie. I myself have witnessed in the latter towards the Nawaub Vizier little points of behaviour which could not but wound his Excellency. When the Resident, who had received checks from me by letter on that very head, could not avoid sliding into the error while I was present, it must be imagined that at other times he has been still less measured in his deportment. The being exhibited to by-standers as in a state of tutelage, has, I suspect, given the Nawaub Vizier a degree of irritation, which clouded the recollection of those essential services rendered to him by Major Baillie. With these feelings he has expressed his impatience to those around him, and probably declared his wish to get rid of the present Resident. It was the interest of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, who knew that Major Baillie regarded him hostilely, to inflame the Nawaub Vizier's discontent, and to advise his Excellency's endeavouring to secure the testimonies of Captain McLeod, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. Law, as to the validity of his grievances, in case his Excellency's representation should lead me to institute any inquiry: hence arose those spontaneous complaints of his Excellency to those gentlemen, which unavoidably implicated them, to a certain degree, in his views. It is very probable that the Hukeem, in order to excite his master to lay the case before me, represented those gentlemen as concurring more actively with his Excellency than it ever was in their contemplation to do; and I suspect that the Nawaub Vizier has confounded some statement of that sort, or some assurances of the Hukeem, in such a manner as to persuade himself he had received them directly from the gentlemen in question. I ground this belief on my observation of the conduct of the respective parties. In the procedure of Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke, I see nothing but their persuasion that they were fulfilling their duty, not to the Nawaub Vizier but to me, in facilitating the personal appeal of his Excellency to the Governor-General, in a case which could not pass through the Resident, because it was a charge against that individual. Not either of those gentlemen ever attempted an insinuation against Major Baillie, or endeavoured to uphold what they quoted as the Nawaub's language by any invidious construction. With Mr. Law or Mr. De L'Etang I never had the slightest communication on the subject: on the other hand, the assertion of the Nawaub Vizier, that he acted contrary to his own disposition at the instigation of the two first gentlemen is obviously incorrect. In the first place, had he believed that the criminating Major Baillie would be agreeable to me, he would have taken the step roundly: on the contrary, it was clear that there was something on his mind which he feared to bring out in his interviews with me, probably from his supposition that the Secretaries were favourable to Major Baillie; but beyond this there is presumptive evidence of no ordinary force. What could be his motive for seeking the conversation with Captain Gilbert, not improving a casual opportunity for it, but making it matter of appointment. Had he been acting contrary to his private inclination in bringing forward complaints against Major Baillie, he would have thought that he did enough to secure my good-will by the sort of demi-official representation which he had advanced. Captain Gilbert had been known to him of old; but it could not be either that degree of acquaintance, or his knowledge of Captain Gilbert's possession of the language, which should lead to make so peculiar a communication so deliberately. What could he have in view, but the speculation that Captain Gilbert, from his having married a near relation of Lady Loudon's, was a good channel to my ear: and he it remarked, that a private and indirect representation of that kind was not of a quality to answer my imagined wish of having ostensible ground for removing Major Baillie from his station. It is further observable, that on the night when we took our leave, the Nawaub Vizier went up to Captain Gilbert, and taking the hand of the latter placed it on his (the Nawaub's) breast, saying with a look of uncommon distress, "whatsoever has happened do not think I have cast off your friendship: I hope to prove it to you in happier times." Why was not the present moment happy, when he had obtained a security for his dignity, his internal independence, and his comfort, beyond what his fondest hope could have expected? It requires very little perspicacity to see that the intrigue of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan was overset by some other intrigue, in which a more efficacious influence was employed; that a branch of the practice on the mind of the Nawaub Vizier was the recalling him to a sense of the obligations under which he lay to Major Baillie, contrasting their magnitude with the frivolity of what his Excellency urged as grievances; and that his Excellency, to extricate himself from the embarrassment, threw upon the shoulders of others the burden which belonged only to his own. The reward of success in this intrigue was the raising to the situation of Minister Agha Meer, a low man who had waited behind the Nawaub's son at my table at Cawnpore, and whose name had never been mentioned in the list of persons eligible for such an appointment in any of the frequent previous discussions. The issue of the intrigue was none of my business. I had only to accept the Nawaub Vizier's own statements, and to concur in what he chose to say was his wish. It was solely incumbent on me not to let the European gentlemen labour under an imputation, which I conscientiously believe they have in no shape merited. The laxity with which the accusation was hazarded cannot be estimated better than by the following fact. Mr. De L'Etang was charged by the Nawaub Vizier with having acted in concert with Captain McLeod, Mr. Law, and Mr. Clarke, in this conspiracy. Each of those gentlemen has declared in the most solemn manner, that he never conversed with Mr. De L'Etang on the subject, or was aware that Mr. De L'Etang was privy to it. I mentioned this to Major Baillie, who answered that he believed their assertion to be strictly true; adding, "I believe the Nawaub has been sorry to have incurred the expense of inviting Mr. De L'Etang into his service, and lays hold of this excuse to get rid of him." The circumstance affords an impressive comment on the rest of the transaction.

Consultations,

The last conference which I had with the Vizier was on the evening of the 10th of November, and the substance of it is fully detailed in my answer dated 12th November to the Vizier's paper marked No. 32.

It will be perceived from some expressions in the above detail, that I was not altogether satisfied with Major Baillie. There certainly were particulars which I found reason to censure, and others on which I suspected disapprobation ought to rest. I had, however, in candour to make allowance for the position of estrangement with the late Nawaub Vizier into which Major Baillie had naturally slid, through his efforts to carry points unpalatable to the Nawaub under the injunction of Government, and I had to regard as almost unavoidable the little effusions of spleen which sometimes tinged their intercourse. Nor was it to be too rigidly condemned, if Major Baillie, on the accession of the new Nawaub, trespassed beyond due discretion on the gratitude which he supposed himself to have excited, and inconsiderately allowed some of his own special followers to accept service with his Excellency on excessive salaries. Major Baillie has solemnly denied that he in any manner influenced the Vizier in the choice of the sons of Mirza Jäfer for offices in his Excellency's household, and I of course give full credit to the assertion: but I feel persuaded that they were alone selected under a belief that their employment would gratify Major Baillie, and that they were subsequently retained under an apprehension that their discharge would excite his displeasure. Although I admit, therefore, that Major Baillie did not employ any active influence to prevail on the Vizier to provide for those persons, still adverting to the actual time and circumstances of the transaction and to the plain and obvious motive of the measure on the part of the the Vizier, the effects of it on his mind were the same as if Major Baillie had actually urged him to appoint them. On the other hand was to be set off the meritorious zeal of Major Baillie in prosecuting the objects of Government, and the consideration that his removal would imply an unlimited extent of dissatisfaction. Strict instructions barred his future aberrations, and the Nawaub Vizier had to be so gratified with the written answer to his requests, the purport of which I intimated to him on our parting interview, that I could then justly require he should support his professions in favour of Major Baillie by manifesting to that gentleman thorough reliance.

Minute,

From His Excellency the Nawaub Vizier. (Received 10th December 1814.)

Letter
from the Vizier.

After expressing to your Excellency my earnest desire for the happiness of a personal meeting, which is the chief wish of my heart, I proceed to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter, enclosing a paper of answers to my propositions under your seal and signature, the perusal of the gracious contents of which afforded me satisfaction and delight. May the Almighty ever preserve your Lordship with this kind disposition on the seat of dignity and power, for in that I contemplate the stability of my affairs. Your Lordship has written that I should either adopt the plan of reform suggested by the British Government, or communicate to your Lordship without delay any other plan which I may myself have to propose. Postponing my answers to the other points discussed in your Lordship's paper, together with the observations with which I consider it to be necessary to accompany them to a future opportunity, I shall content myself on the present occasion with stating to your Lordship that I accept the plan proposed by the British Government with pleasure and sincerity of heart. I have accordingly directed the respectable Moatumud-ood-Dowlah Syud Mohummud Khan (Agha Meer) and Rajah Dya-Krishen to carry the plan into effect, with the advice and assistance of Major Baillie, instructing them to inform themselves of all the details of the plan from him, and to introduce the new system without delay. Those Ministers will execute my orders, and your Lordship's plan will be carried into effect with the utmost practicable expedition. I request your Excellency to be perfectly at ease on this point. My answers to the other points, and the observations which I may have to make on the subject of them, will be communicated to your Lordship hereafter.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

Letter
from Secretary to Government.

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch No. 9 of the 6th instant,* and to communicate to you the following observations in reply.

2. The unqualified acquiescence of the Vizier in the plan of reform submitted to his father by the British Government, and his promise that it shall be carried into effect without delay, is highly gratifying to the Governor-General, and his Lordship concludes that you will have taken the proper steps, in concert with his Excellency's Government, to renew the measures which were formerly in progress. It is superfluous to repeat the injunctions which I have already had occasion to convey to you, by order of the Governor-General, on this subject.

3. The Governor-General purposes to reply in the terms of the enclosed draft to the letter from his Excellency the Vizier, announcing his acquiescence in the reform, and his Lordship's letter will be transmitted to you by the Persian Secretary.

4. The measure adopted by his Excellency, relative to the police of the Honourable Company's districts adjoining the frontiers of Oude, is also highly satisfactory to his Lordship, who approves entirely the tenor of the orders to the Vizier's officers, drawn by you at his Excellency's request, and trusts that the measure measure now adopted will be so effectual as to preclude the necessity of resorting to others.

5. The fifth and sixth paragraphs of your despatch require no particular remark.

6. His Lordship suspends any observations or instructions relative to the case of Rumzaun Alee Khan, until he shall receive the letter which his Excellency the Vizier states it to be his intention to address to him on the subject. The tenor of your discourse on this point to Agha Meer is approved by his Lordship.

7. Your report relative to the general conduct of the Ministers is very satisfactory, and you are at liberty to assure them that while they conduct themselves in a manner befitting their relation to their own Sovereign and to the British Government and its representatives, they will always receive the countenance and support of the Governor-General. His Excellency participates in the regret expressed by you that the Ministers are exposed to counteraction from the subordinate officers and Moonshes. His Lordship will approve of your taking every favourable opportunity of pointing out to the Vizier the importance of giving to the Ministers the requisite control and authority over all the subordinate officers of the Government, to enable them to execute the functions of their office to which they are responsible. His Lordship relies on your executing this task in a manner which shall not occasion dissatisfaction in the mind of the Vizier, and render his Ministers the objects of his jealousy and dislike.

8. It is considered by his Lordship to be very desirable that the salaries and appointments of the Ministers should be placed on a respectable and even liberal footing. The Governor-General is not prepared to state an opinion respecting the quantum of allowance which it may be proper to assign to the Paishcar and Dewan respectively, but his Lordship authorizes you to bring the subject generally under the consideration of the Vizier, as a question of some importance to the dignity and respectability of his Government.

9. The contents of paragraphs 10 to 13 inclusive do not require any particular observation. Your conduct with respect to the Nawab's brother Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, is prudent and judicious; and a similar proceeding in other cases of the kind must ultimately satisfy his Excellency, that no such disposition to support his brothers against his authority exists in the mind of the Governor-General, as he seems to infer from the tenor of the observations respecting them in his Lordship's reply to the Vizier's paper.

10. The Governor-General is happy to learn the cordiality which subsists between his Excellency the Vizier and you; and he trusts that, by a judicious improvement of that favourable temper, you will secure the confidence of his Excellency in such a manner, as to ensure his willing and unreserved resort to your advice and support on all occasions of difficulty and importance.

I have been gratified by the receipt of your Excellency's friendly letter, in which you are pleased to express your satisfaction at the tenor of my written reply to the paper delivered to me by your Excellency at Lucknow, and, postponing the discussion of the other subjects adverted to in my reply, are pleased to express your entire concurrence and acquiescence in the plan of reform recommended by the British Government, and your resolution to carry it into immediate effect with the advice and assistance of Major Baillie.

This information has afforded me a degree of pleasure proportioned to the firmness of my conviction of the eminent advantage to your Excellency's interests, which the plan in question is calculated to produce. You may rely on the zealous and earnest endeavours of Major Baillie to give effect to a plan, the adoption adoption of which is so worthy of your Excellency's wisdom, and of your enlightened regard for the welfare and happiness of your people.

1. The Governor-General deeming it to be proper that copies of all the documents relating to his Excellency's proceedings at the Court of Lucknow should be recorded in the office of the Resident, I am instructed to transmit to you the copies specified in the enclosed list, omitting only those of which copies are already in your possession.

2. The contents of the papers themselves are for the most part already known to you from the personal communications held with you at Lucknow, and together with the observations contained in the papers recorded by the Governor-General, render any additional remarks on the subject unnecessary in this place.

3. In communicating these documents, however, the Governor-General directs me to observe, that whatever view he took of those parts of your proceedings which have formed the subject of remark, he was always impressed with the fullest conviction of your zeal for the honour and interests of the Government and for the welfare of the Vizier, as well as of the talents and industry with which you pursued those objects. The Governor-General retains the firmest persuasion that your future conduct will be no less governed by those principles, while he trusts that a strict adherence to those rules which have been prescribed for the regulation of your intercourse with the Vizier, will effectually preclude the recurrence of such feelings as those in which the transactions adverted to in the accompanying papers originated.

My Lord :

1. Your Lordship's original letter to the address of his Excellency the Vizier, containing your Lordship's answers to the Vizier's paper of requests was received from the Persian Secretary on the 30th ultimo, and I had the honour of presenting it to the Vizier on the morning of the 3d instant.

2. His Excellency desired me to read and explain to him in their order the answers to his several requests, and he appeared to be perfectly satisfied with the tenor of all the answers.

3. With a reference to the second, third, and fourth articles, his Excellency assured me repeatedly that the plan of a reform of his administration in the departments of revenue and police, which had been recommended by the British Government to his father, was the best in his own estimation, had his cheerful and cordial concurrence, and should be carried into effect without delay. With regard to the police of the Honourable Company's districts which border on the territory of the Vizier, his Excellency repeated his offer to issue the most positive orders to all the officers of his Government to comply, without a reference to himself, with all applications from our Magistrates and from their subordinate officers, for the seizure of offenders finding refuge in any district of his dominions ; and his Excellency further desired me to prepare and submit to him a draft of the necessary instructions on this subject

4. I have

4. I have accordingly transmitted to his Excellency a draft of instructions to his officers, which his Excellency has been pleased to approve, and it has since been issued under his seal. A copy of the document in question is submitted for your Lordship's perusal; and in the case of its failure to accomplish the just purposes of our Government, I shall be prepared to submit to the Vizier the ultimate proposition which is suggested in the ninth paragraph of my instructions, and to which, in that case, I should hope that his Excellency will be induced to accede.

5. With the tenor of your Lordship's answers to the fifth, sixth, and seventh articles of requests on the part of his Excellency the Vizier, his Excellency appeared and expressed himself to be highly gratified and pleased. His Excellency added, that the terms of them fulfilled his highest expectations from your Lordship's friendship and regard.

6. The dismissal of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan from the presence and councils of the Vizier, and his departure to the district under his charge, were reported in my despatch of the 29th ultimo. His Excellency the Vizier has since frequently complained to me of the Hukeem's neglect and inattention, and seems now to be as much dissatisfied as he was formerly pleased with the services of this intriguing favourite of his father.

7. With respect to Rumzaun Alee Khan the Vizier did not conceal his disappointment at the extensive purport of the terms in which this person has been recommended to his favour. To the regular payment of the stipend of Rumzaun Alee Khan, at the rate which was formerly fixed for him, his Excellency had no hesitation in repeating his cheerful assent, and the provision which he had recently made for the payment of all the pensions of dependants on the British Government, including Ramzaun Alee Khan, was intended by his Excellency, he observed, to prevent discussions, in future, regarding claims of every description on the part of persons entitled, or who might consider themselves as entitled to the interference of our Government in their behalf: but your Lordship's recommendation of Rumzaun Alee Khan, in the article under discussion, was extended, his Excellency remarked, very far beyond the payment of his stipend, and involved the employment of that person in offices about his Excellency's person, or in his household, for which he could not but deem Rumzaun Alee Khan to be unfit, and in which, as he could never agree to employ him, he did not consider him as entitled to their emoluments, nor to any compensation for those emoluments, which indeed had never been fixed, and it was impossible now to ascertain. His Excellency further observed, that he did not consider the continuance of Rumzaun Alee Khan in employment to form a part of your Lordship's recommendation at the conference of the 10th ultimo; and, under this view of the case, he deemed it necessary, and expressed his resolution to address your Lordship on the subject, in the expectation, from your Lordship's friendship, that the interference of the British Government might be limited to the object of securing the payment of Rumzaun Alee Khan's established allowances.

8. I replied to his Excellency's observations on this article merely in general terms, and we passed on to the remaining points of discussion in the paper under your Lordship's signature and seal.

9. With reference to the conduct of the Ministers recently appointed in carrying on the details of the administration, and particularly the measures of reform, I took advantage of the opportunity afforded by his Excellency's expressing his approbation of those persons to suggest the propriety of their being vested with a greater degree of authority than they appeared to me to possess. The Ministers had frequently complained to me of the inattention of some subordinate officers to their orders, and particularly of an injurious delay in the application of the seals of the Government to the letters, mandates, and passports, which they were in the daily habit of preparing and submitting to his Excellency, and which his Excellency had generally approved in the first instance, though the issue of them had been afterwards prevented or delayed. The Vizier acquiesced in the necessity of supporting and establishing the authority of the Ministers over the Moonshees and all subordinate officers of his Government; but he either did not comprehend, or was not inclined to comply with my hint, that the seals of the Government should be committed to the charge of his Ministers, or that they should have authority for the application of their own. The salaries or emoluments ments of the Ministers have not yet been fixed by his Excellency, and as his Excellency has never mentioned the subject to me, I have hitherto thought it my duty to decline a compliance with the repeated solicitations of Agha Meer, that I should bring the question to his Excellency's notice. It is a question, however, of considerable importance in my opinion, and one on which I could wish to be favoured with a communication of your Lordship's sentiments and commands, at as early a period as may be practicable.

10. The Vizier, after hearing with attention your Lordship's observations and assurances on the paper of requests which he delivered to your Lordship at Cawnpore, and had subsequently recalled at this station, expressed and seemed to feel some regret, that a few of those remarks had been recorded. With a reference to the two first, he declared that they were highly gratifying to his mind, and demonstrative of the cordial friendship and regard which your Lordship had uniformly professed for him. With particular reference to your Lordship's remark on the subject of the dismissal of such of his Excellency's domestic servants as were obnoxious to him, I thought it my duty to enquire if his Excellency meant to dismiss the four sons of Mirza Jäfer, whose original introduction into his service, though a spontaneous act of his own, and totally uninfluenced by my suggestion, had, I understood, been ascribed to my advice, and whose allowances, as recently reported to me, were such as I could never have approved. His Excellency replied to my inquiry, that three of the sons of Mirza Jäfer were actually discharged from his service, but that he wished to retain Mirza Alee, on a salary inferior to that which had been formerly talked of among his servants, and probably reported to me.

11. On perusing the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth observations of your Lordship's paper of remarks on the retracted requests of the Vizier, which relate to the condition and allowances of his Excellency's younger brothers, I perceived, or thought that I perceived, some signs of disquiet in his mind; and his Excellency convinced me that I was right, by expressing his uneasiness on the subject. He observed, that your Lordship's remarks seemed to him to imply a desire on the part of your Lordship, tantamount to an obligation on his own part, for the continuance of all the provisions to his younger brothers on the scale which had been recently fixed by their father, and which his Excellency could not help considering as unnecessarily large. He did not, however, announce to me the resolution, nor do I infer from what passed that he entertains the design, of reducing the allowances of any of his brothers for the present. What appeared to disturb his Excellency was the idea of his being bound, or considered by your Lordship to be bound, to continue those allowances without deduction, and the consequent fear of the diminution of his power and authority over his brothers.

12. Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, in particular, I apprehend has become the object of his Excellency's displeasure; for I have had a number of letters and verbal applications from Nuseer-ood-Dowlah of late, and though I have taken every practicable step to discourage those applications in future, by referring them without remark to the Vizier, and informing the brother that I had done so, I have not yet succeeded to my wish in convincing Nuseer-ood-Dowlah of my determination to avoid interfering in his behalf, and of the necessity of his paying implicit submission to the will of his brother and Sovereign.

13. Shums-ood-Dowlah's departure to Benares has been already reported to your Lordship. The Vizier has promised to refund the arrears of his brother's allowance which were issued from my treasury. But his Excellency's conduct to Shums-ood-Dowlah in other respects, and particularly the measure of taking possession of his late dwelling-house on the morning after his departure, has not been such as I could approve. The question of calling Shums-ood-Dowlah to an account for the sums deposited with him by his father, is of course totally at rest by the departure of Shums-ood-Dowlah for Benares; but with a reference to Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, and the khass muhl, the Vizier seemed to me to regret the introduction of your Lordship's remarks on the inexpedience or impracticability of resuming from them the amount of the sums deposited by his father. At the same time, I do not apprehend that his Excellency will adopt any measures of rigour or harshness for the recovery of the monies in question. An apparently cordial reconciliation has been recently brought about by the Minister, Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, between the Vizier and his stepmother and her son.

14. On your Lordship's remaining observations the remarks of his Excellency the Vizier were demonstrative of entire satisfaction. He alluded to the observation respecting personal intercourse between himself and the Resident in terms of extraordinary friendship for me, and entreated most earnestly and repeatedly that I would not consider his former expressions on this subject as referring, in the remotest degree, to the frequency of my visits, which had ever been a source of the highest gratification, as well as of confidence to his mind, and which he begged might never suffer diminution. He then entered into a profusion of protestations of his innocence with a reference to the contents of a paper, which he trusted that I had not seen and would blot from my memory for ever. I replied in appropriate terms, and in a manner calculated to impress his Excellency with a belief that I had never seen, or had ceased entirely to think of, the paper to which he referred, and of all occurrences connected with it. Our conference of the 3d instant broke up with reciprocal assurances of friendship, and with a promise on the part of his Excellency that the reform should recommence without delay.

15. Towards the evening of the day of our conference I had a message from his Excellency by his Minister, descriptive of the increased uneasiness and concern which he had felt on a more attentive perusal of the observations in the paper delivered to him, having reference to Rumzaun Alee Khan and to the stipends of his younger brothers. The Minister was instructed to announce to me his Excellency's intention of preparing a letter to your Lordship's address on those subjects, and to solicit my advice and assistance in framing the letter to your Lordship, as well as my good offices to obtain for it your Lordship's favourable consideration and an early and satisfactory reply.

16. I explained to Agha Meer without reserve, and I desired him to state to his Excellency, the high sense which I entertained of the service rendered by Rumzaun Alee Khan to our Government, as well as to the Vizier, on the night of the demise of his father, in communicating that event immediately to me, and concealing it from every other person till my arrival at the palace. I added my conviction, that your Lordship's recommendation of Rumzaun Alee Khan, as conveyed by the terms of the paper under your Lordship's signature and seal, must have proceeded on a due consideration of the merits of the person recommended, and of the just claims which he possessed to his Excellency's favour and kindness. That if Rumzaun Alee Khan held no office of emolument, nor any allowance beyond his pension at the period of the Vizier's accession to the musnud, the terms of your Lordship's recommendation ought not to give uneasiness to his Excellency, since he might be assured that neither your Lordship nor I would ever be disposed to countenance or give encouragement to unreasonable pretensions on the part of any of his Excellency's servants, and far less to require their employment or continuance in office contrary to his Excellency's desire. Under all the circumstances of the case, I advised the minister to dissuade his Excellency, if possible, from addressing your Lordship on this subject, and at all events to exclude the discussion of this question from his Excellency's first letter to your Lordship, which it seemed indispensable to transmit without delay, for the purpose of satisfying your Lordship with a reference to the question of reform.

17. The Minister seemed to feel the propriety of my remarks, and promised to use his best endeavours to obtain from the Vizier, without delay, a distinct declaration of his acquiescence in the system of reform which had been recommended by our Government to his father, and had commenced on his accession to the musnud. The success of Agha Meer's representations was demonstrated yesterday, by my receipt of a letter from his Excellency to your Lordship, expressive of his unqualified assent to the reform, and his resolution to carry it into effect with my advice and concurrence.

18. I shall forward his Excellency's letter to your Lordship's Persian Secretary by the mail of this evening; and I have the honour to be, &c.

Instructions

Instructions to Zillahdars, Ameens, &c., on the Frontier.

Whereas the relations of friendship and amity between the Honourable Company's Government and this are established in such a degree, that the enemies of either Government, and all public offenders against either, are alike the enemies of both; and the seizure and punishment of such offenders alike the interest of both; and it being understood by the Presence, that notwithstanding repeated and most positive injunctions to the contrary, a number of fugitives and outlaws from the British territory, finding refuge and protection in this country, commit outrages and depredations in the Honourable Company's districts, and when pursued evade the punishment of their crimes by being protected by the Zemindars in my country, and notwithstanding the instructions which were issued on the 20th of February 1813, authorizing all commanding-officers of British troops stationed in the frontier districts of the territory of the Presence, on their receiving authentic intelligence from the Magistrates of contiguous districts in the British dominions of the concealment of a rebel, marauder, or other public offender, in any village or place in the vicinity of the station which they command, to march promptly and suddenly, without previous communication, with any one, to the place of the delinquent's concealment, and seize and secure his person, still none of the measures above specified have had hitherto the effect which was desired. Therefore, and in consideration of the firm friendship and unity subsisting between the two States, it is now determined and agreed to, and you are most strictly enjoined, that whenever a magistrate, collector, or subordinate officer of Police of any of the frontier districts in the Honourable Company's territory, shall hereafter make application to you for the seizure of any offender, or shall send a person or party to your Elaka to point out and seize a delinquent, you do, immediately on receiving such application from the magistrate, collector, or Thannadar, or on the arrival of a person or persons to point out and seize the offender, without awaiting the orders of the Government or making any reference to the Presence, seize and deliver over the offender to the magistrate or other officer who may require him, and that, on no account, you molest or impede the persons who may be sent, in their endeavours to apprehend offenders.

Considering these as the positive orders of the Presence, pay implicit obedience to the same.

2. The contents of a number of the papers which I have now had the honour of receiving were either totally unknown to me, or had been very cursorily perused during his Lordship's stay at this capital; and you are aware that the time which was afforded to me for the perusal of any of the documents having reference to my own proceedings, or to the retracted complaints of the Vizier, was by far too short to admit of my submitting those remarks on the subject of them, which their nature suggested to my mind.

EXTRACT BENGAL POLITICAL CONSULTATIONS,

Dated 3d November 1815.

To J. Adam, Esq., Secretary to Government in the Secret and Political Department.

Sir:

1. In pursuance of the intention announced to you by my letter of the 28th February last, I proceed to submit for consideration such remarks as appear to be calculated to exhibit in a correct point of view, the extraordinary transactions which took place during the Governor-General's personal intercourse with the Vizier at Cawnpore, and in his Excellency's capital. For this purpose, it is indispensable that I recall to particular notice some facts and circumstances, having reference to periods considerably more remote than any that are mentioned in the documents which relate to the recent transactions.

2. It is known to all the Members of the Government, and established by proofs upon record, that for a period of more than three years after my arrival at the Court of Lucknow, the greatest cordiality subsisted between the late Vizier and myself, and that his Excellency demonstrated his regard for me by a number of friendly observances, unprecedented with regard to any of my predecessors in office, more especially by a public entertainment, extensive illuminations and fireworks, and a liberal donation to my physician, on the occasion of my recovery from an illness in the beginning of the year 1808. His Excellency is known to have observed to several persons of his Court, with a reference to my language and deportment, that I was the only Englishman he had known, with the exception of one, now a member of the Supreme Council, who could address a native of rank, and could reason with or write to him on subjects on which they differed in opinion, without forgetting, or appearing to forget, those expressions and observances of respect, that inanner of kindness and conciliation, so peculiarly gratifying to natives, and which his Excellency felt and appreciated in a very remarkable degree.

3. This perfect cordialty, which had subsisted between the late Vizier and myself, began to suffer some interruption from discussions which I was instructed to hold with him on the subject of a reform in his Government towards the end of the year 1810. The reform was however agreed to, with seeming cordiality on his part, after a long and most arduous discussion, in the month of April 1811,† when his Excellency, attended by me, proceeded on a hunting excursion.

4. Shortly after our departure from the capital, and before any of the measures of reform which his Excellency had solemnly agreed to could be carried into effect as intended, his Excellency was unfortunately joined by his Aumil of Khyrabad and Mohumdie, Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, the undoubted and unquestionable source of every untoward occurrence that has since taken place at Lucknow. I shall not suspend my narration by describing the character of Hukeem Mehdee. I believe it to be intrinsically bad; and I have had reason to suspect the Hukeem of disaffection to the interests of our Government, not only from a retrospect of his proceedings, as recorded by my predecessor in office, but also from a number of circumstances that have fallen under my own observation, as well with a reference to the reform, as to other points of subordinate moment which have been agitated between the two States during the period of my residence at this Court. That the late Vizier was himself disinclined to a reform of his Government, more particularly in the revenue branch of it, as hostile to arbitrary taxation and destructive of his avaricious views, is in my opinion not to be questioned; but his Excellency was perfectly aware of the just and irrefragable nature of the grounds on which a reform of his administration was recommended to him by the British Government, in its legitimate character of his adviser, and his knowledge of general policy was too limited, his acquaintance with revenue matters too confined, to admit of his opposing with success, or even with specious objections, the arguments in favour of a reform which I was instructed to use to him.

Bengal Political
Consultations,

5. The versatile talents, intriguing disposition, and acknowledged ability as a revenue officer of Hukeem Mehdee, peculiarly qualified him for the situation of adviser and assistant to the Vizier, in his object of frustrating or impeding the just views of our Government by clandestine or underhand means, after he had failed in opposing them by argument. Among the first of Hukeem Mehdee's devices to frustrate the views of our Government was an attempt to excite personal enmity on the part of the Vizier towards me, by impressing his Excellency with a belief that the reform of his Government was an object exclusively my own, with the view of increasing my influence and establishing my reputation in Oude, to the prejudice of his Excellency's authority as well as to his personal loss; that the Government had supported my measures to a certain extent from the urgency of my representations, but would soon relax in its support if his Excellency persisted in his opposition; and that ultimately my removal from office, as the consequence either of my failure to accomplish the object in view, or of his Excellency's personal dislike to me, would relieve him entirely from the unpleasant discussion of reform, and establish his independent authority on a basis that could never be shaken by any future Resident at his Court, since the instance of my removal would deter future Residents from opposing him.

6. Of the means of success to this device, the most natural to be pursued by Hukeem Mehdee was that of opening, or attempting to open, an indirect communication with some of the members or officers of our Government, and of obtaining or fabricating intelligence from Calcutta which might facilitate his practices on the Vizier.* A relaxation on the part of the Government, in its pursuit of the objects of reform, during the absence of Lord Minto from the Presidency, afforded some facilities to Hukeem Mehdee in the successful prosecution of his design.

7. Captain McLeod arrived at Lucknow in the month of March or April 1811; and a fact occurs to me to be stated with a reference to that gentleman, which is doubtless in his perfect recollection. Hukeem Mehdee was reported to me to have opened a negotiation with Captain McLeod, through the medium of his Bengalee Sirkar, whom the Hukeem entertained, or proposed to entertain in his service, for the purpose of teaching him English, and some presents of inconsiderable value were brought to Captain McLeod by his Sirkar, as received through Hukeem Mehdee from the Vizier. I cannot with confidence assert, whether the first communication on this subject was made by me to Captain McLeod, or by that gentleman to me. An intimacy, almost fraternal, had subsisted between Captain McLeod and myself, from the period of his arrival in India. He was invited to come to my house at Lucknow on the footing of a member of my family, and appeared to consider himself as such. I should naturally have expected, and may have received from Captain McLeod the communication which is here referred to, or I may have made it to him in the first instance; but I recollect that the communication was followed by a great deal of friendly advice upon my part, which he professed to receive with gratitude and promised implicitly to follow. I warned him of the danger of even a seeming departure from the positive orders of the Government, which prohibit all intercourse or conversation of a political nature between Native Princes, or their dependants and the subjects of the British Government, Government, with the exception of the Resident alone. I particularly cautioned him against Hukeem Mehdee, as a person of an intriguing disposition and the established enemy of our Government, and I concluded with suggesting, as a friend, the immediate suspension of all intercourse between Captain McLeod or his Sirkar and the Hukeem. Captain McLeod, I have reason to believe, complied with my advice on that occasion, and his Sirkar was soon after discharged.

8. It is not my intention, at present, to draw any inference from the fact which is above correctly related to the best of my recollection and belief, with a reference to Captain McLeod: yet it seems, in some measure, to give a key to the subsequent proceedings of that gentleman as distinctly related by himself, and is therefore deserving of notice.

9. Some native agents in Calcutta, employed by the Vizier or Hukeem Mehdee, were detected by me about the time of the occurrence above noticed; and Lord Minto's return to Fort-William shortly after, induced a revival of the question of reform at this Court,* with increased support to my proceedings and to the influence of my representative character.

10. The progress of the discussion respecting reform, though revived and conducted with zeal shortly after the return of Lord Minto, continued to meet with opposition on the part of his Excellency the Vizier, under the influence of the counsels of Hukeem Mehdee, and to be interrupted by a number of vexatious minor discussions arising from his Excellency's disposition to oppress the dependants of our Government. Of these latter, the encroachments of his Excellency on the guaranteed rights of the Bhow Begum, his oppression of her Highness's dependants and the dependants of Almass Alee Khan, his unnatural conduct to the younger Begum who retired from his territory to Elahabad, his support of the elder son of Hyder Beg Khan in his violation of the rights of the younger, whose cause had been espoused by our Government originally, in compliance with his Excellency's requests, his manifest injustice to Alee Nuckee Khan, the head Moonshee of this Residency, and some other subordinate questions, had of necessity occasioned remonstrance on the part of the Government and its representative, which afforded a pretext to his Excellency for withholding his attention from the reform, and gave rise to a spirit of personal animosity towards me, manifested by indiscriminate and perverse opposition to every suggestion which I offered, and indulged with the view as I believe, under the pernicious counsels of Hukeem Mehdee, of provoking me to personal disrespect, which might be used as a handle for my removal.

11. My official despatches to Lord Minto, and my private and official letters to the Chief Secretary to Government and yourself, during the whole of the year 1812, and a part of the ensuing year, illustrate the remarks which I have offered, and served to establish the inference that I have drawn from them, to the satisfaction of the Governor-General in Council,† whose honourable confidence and support enabled me ultimately to triumph in the cause of justice and truth, in vindication of the Honourable Company's rights and of the honour and interests of the British nation in India, over his Excellency the Vizier and his advisers; nay, further, to satisfy the Vizier of the honour and integrity of my intentions, of my genuine regard for the true interests of his Government, and of my cordial friendship for himself, which he acknowledged in a manner the most solemn, before all the natives and English gentlemen of his Court, and confirmed by an affectionate embrace in the presence of all his courtiers, on the 2d of October 1813.‡

12. This apparent cordiality re-established between the late Vizier and myself, though unhappily but of short duration, was productive of some beneficial effects at the time, and bade fair for the happy accomplishment of a reform in the Government

Government of Oude, which would have transmitted the name of Saadut Alee, with the love and gratitude of his people, to many succeeding ages. Hukeem Mehdee, the enemy of reform, had been banished from his Excellency's councils, had been treated as an enemy and a traitor, had on several occasions suffered personal chastisement and disgrace, and his sentence of banishment from Lucknow had been passed as a natural and necessary consequence of his Excellency's reconciliation with me, and of the adjustment of all disputes between him and the British Government.

13. The arrival of a new Governor-General and retirement of Lord Minto from the Government took place about the date of these occurrences. The effect of an event of this nature on the minds of the natives of India, cannot require to be described to any person conversant with the history of this country or acquainted with the character of the people. No native of India was more disposed than the late Vizier, no person better qualified than Hukeem Mehdee, to take advantage of such an event as this for the promotion of personal interests, the success of sinister designs. I feared, while I recorded in my despatches the unqualified assent of the Vizier to all the propositions of our Government, while I witnessed or heard the disgrace of his Excellency's favourite Hukeem Mehdee, that the approaching change of the Government, though a change of names and not of measures, as I then fondly believed, would produce a retraction of the Vizier's acquiescence in our views, and a return to his Excellency's favour of his perfidious counsellor, Hukeem Mehdee.

14. For the manner in which my fears were realized, for the cause of the Vizier's retraction of all the assurances which he made to me, of the recall of Hukeem Mehdee to his councils, and of a conduct on the part of his Excellency more perverse than he had formerly pursued, I am enabled now to refer to a far more satisfactory explanation than any that I could formerly offer, in the narrative of Captain McLeod.

15. It would seem that this gentleman's first conference, or political conversation with the Vizier must have taken place before the adjustment of the depending questions between the British Government and his Excellency, including his consent to the reform. The state of his Excellency's councils had been fluctuating for a considerable time after his receipt of the last letter from Lord Minto,* in which his Lordship had hinted to the Vizier his intended departure for Europe, and cautioned his Excellency most solemnly against any attempt to take advantage of the contemplated change in the Government, for the purpose of frustrating views which could never be abandoned nor compromised. My illustration of this remark of Lord Minto's was naturally combated by Hukeem Mehdee, and his arguments were supported on the ground of a concession by Lord Cornwallis, in the year 1805, of a very important question relating to the police of the frontier, which had been strenuously urged by Marquess Wellesley; and the character of Lord Moira was represented as resembling that of Lord Cornwallis in a degree, which should inspire the Vizier with a hope of similar results from the accession of the former nobleman to the Government. The friendship and intimacy of Lady Loudon with Captain McLeod's relations at home was frequently talked of at this time, and Captain McLeod had obtained leave of absence from the Vizier to proceed to Calcutta with his children. These circumstances may have naturally led to the conversation which Captain McLeod has related, and the connection of Captain McLeod's deputation by the Vizier with that of a native named Mirza Jāfer by Hukeem Mehdee (which latter I knew and reported to Mr. Edmonstone), and the baneful effects of this combination, unsuspected by me at the time, are now rendered very apparent. Those effects were suspended, however, by the diffidence and timidity of the Vizier's disposition, and by my exertions on the spot, for a period of several months.

16. The reconciliation and adjustment of all differences between his Excellency the Vizier and myself, took place, as already described, on the 2d of October 1813; and his Excellency, when he discarded Hukeem Mehdee, seemed to have forgotten his conversation with Captain McLeod, and to have banished from his recollection for ever those vexatious and unhappy discussions, which his former perverseness had occasioned, and which his evil counsellors had encouraged. I have, now a most perfect recollection of his Excellency's having announced to me his intention to recall Mirza Jāfer from Calcutta, and to put an end to all the underhand practices which Hukeem Mehdee had induced him to adopt. That he meant, at the same time, to supersede the instructions which he had given to Captain McLeod, as detailed in that gentleman's narrative, there seems every reason to believe; and most fortunate it would have proved for the comfort of the remaining months of his life, for the interests of the British Government, and for the mental satisfaction of Captain McLeod, whose conduct I must ever deplore, if his Excellency's intention had been fulfilled, or Captain McLeod had relinquished those designs which his conscience must reproach him for entertaining, to the prejudice of the Government which he served, as well as of an individual who had treated him with affection almost fraternal.

17. My official and private despatches of the month of December 1813, and the ensuing January and February, detail the commencement and progress of the Vizier's renewed opposition to the just views of our Government, proceeding in my belief at the time, and as since established beyond a question, on encouragement received from the Presidency, by communications from Captain McLeod or from some native agents in Calcutta. Indeed, the circumstances narrated by Captain McLeod, combined with some extraordinary occurrences which were brought to my knowledge at that time, and are hereafter particularly referred to, and with the statement in one of the papers given in to the Governor-General at Cawnpore, afford so obvious and satisfactory an explanation of the cause of the suspension of the reform by his Excellency the late Vizier, and of his other untoward proceedings, while at the same time they so naturally tend to account for the conduct of the present Vizier, while subject to the influence of Hukeem Mehdee and of that person's European coadjutors, that a mere reference to the statements themselves seems sufficient to convince the most prejudiced of the existence of a diabolical intrigue, the object of which was to frustrate the just views of our Government, by removing from the situation of Resident the instrument of the accomplishment of those views.

18. Captain McLeod has stated, that his first communication with the late Vizier on matters touching his situation with the Resident, or connected with the affairs of his Government, took place in October 1813. I consider the assignment of this date to be unquestionably an error of forgetfulness. Captain McLeod had obtained his leave of absence early in September, and must, I think, have received his instructions, both commercial and diplomatic, from the Vizier, before the 1st of October, or at all events before the adjustment of disputes between his Excellency the Vizier and our Government, which took place on the 2d of that month. Indeed, it is manifestly inconsistent with the occurrences of the 2d of October in public durbar, as reported by my despatch of that date, that a communication of the nature detailed by Captain McLeod should have been made by his Excellency the Vizier immediately after those occurrences, more particularly to a spectator of them like Captain McLeod, whom the inconsistency of his Excellency's conduct must have necessarily deterred from undertaking the duties of a deputation like that described. It is evident, therefore, to my judgment, that Captain McLeod must have taken leave of the Vizier before the 2d of October, or could not have had an interview with his Excellency and received the communication which he describes subsequently to that day.

19. I find in my memorandum of letters despatched by post, a letter addressed to Captain McLeod at Sultanpore on the 8th of October, and another addressed to Jounpore on the 10th of that month; and this circumstance, with an anecdote related by Captain McLeod on his return, has a natural tendency to confirm the foregoing conviction in my mind. The anecdote is as follows: Captain McLeod mentioned at table his having paid his respects to Sir George Nugent on the day of his arrival in Calcutta, and Sir George's having

having told him, on that occasion, that all matters in dispute between the Vizier and the British Government had been happily adjusted by my exertions; to which Captain McLeod replied, that he was totally ignorant of there being any matters in dispute between the two Governments, adding, as a reason for this ignorance, that the negotiations and subjects of conference between the Vizier and the Resident were conducted with such secrecy and apparent cordiality on both sides, as to preclude their being known to those at Court. Captain McLeod will, I doubt not, on a reference, confirm the foregoing statement, which was heard by every member of my family; and yet it seems difficult to reconcile the anecdote, as above related, with the conference that took place between his Excellency the Vizier and Captain McLeod in the month of September preceding.

Letter
from Resident at

20. Captain McLeod returned to Lucknow in the beginning of March, if I mistake not; and he details, in his narrative above referred to, the communication which he made to the Vizier on his return, namely, "that he had ascertained from satisfactory sources (those sources Captain McLeod has not described), that the Governor-General's sentiments were favourable to his Excellency's wishes:" to which his Excellency replied, that the statement of Captain McLeod was corroborated by letters received from his Lordship through the channel of the Resident, and more particularly by his Lordship's abolition of a most obnoxious measure which the former Government had proposed, namely, the appointment of Ameens; in other words, the reform of his Excellency's administration.

21. As Captain McLeod does not in his narrative refer to any intermediate communication between his Excellency the Vizier and himself during the period of his absence from this capital, though when the important nature of the deputations is considered, it seems almost impossible to suppose that so long an interval should have passed in total silence on both sides, a chasm remains to be filled up, to account for the Vizier's untoward proceedings reported officially by me in my despatches of December and January. Captain McLeod arrived in Calcutta early in the month of November, and from that date till the 13th of December there was obviously abundance of time for communications to his Excellency the Vizier, of a nature to encourage his opposition to the measures which were formerly agreed on, and which I had been subsequently instructed to propose. That this encouragement was not afforded in any communications from the Governor-General to his Excellency, conveyed through the channel of the Resident, the records of the Government prove; and though Lord Moira did me the honour to mention at Cawnpore that his Lordship had received and had answered one letter from the Vizier, conveyed through an irregular channel and unknown to me at the time, yet it is quite incredible that the abolition, as the Vizier terms it, or abandonment of the objects of reform on the part of the British Government, should have formed the object of a direct communication from the Governor-General to the Vizier.

22. How, then, it may be asked, was the abolition of the reform of this Government communicated to his Excellency the Vizier? Hukeem Mehdee, it is very well known, returned to his Excellency's councils about the end of November 1813. Mirza Jāfer, the brother of Mirza Bāker, proceeded to Calcutta, we also know, notwithstanding his Excellency's declared resolution to recall him, and suspension of the monthly allowance which Hukeem Mehdee had paid to him for a time. This allowance, it is worthy to be remarked, with a number of other charges for secret services and presents to English gentlemen and ladies, appeared in Hukeem Mehdee's accounts submitted to the present Vizier for adjustment, in my presence, shortly after his Excellency's accession. A paper of intelligence, too, transmitted by me to Mr. Edmonstone, and of which I have still a copy, contains a detailed account of a negotiation carried on at Calcutta for my removal from the Residency, for which his Excellency the Vizier had made an offer of twenty-five lacs of rupees, and an English gentleman is noticed as an agent in this negotiation, though without any mention of his name. Another paper of intelligence received about the same time, a copy of which I transmitted to Mr. Edmonstone or Mr. Monckton, and the original of which which is in my possession, contains a direct assertion, on the part of Hukeem Mehdee, to the Vizier, that he, the Hukeem, had had a letter from his correspondent or agent in Calcutta, in which Lord Moira's declaration was quoted to this effect: "that his Excellency's authority in his dominions, and his adoption or rejection of the reform, were in future to be totally uncontrolled by the influence or advice of the Resident, and that a letter to the same effect might shortly be expected by his Excellency." The connection of the foregoing intelligence with the statement of the present Vizier in his paper prepared by Hukeem Mehdee and presented to Lord Moira at Cawnpore, namely, that the execution of the measures of reform had been suspended by his Excellency's father in consequence of a letter from Lord Moira, is too obvious to escape observation; and thus the fact, so satisfactorily established, of the late Vizier having two agents, a European and a native, in Calcutta, the one supposed to be connected with Lady Loudon and the other tutored by Hukeem Mehdee, combined with the previous negotiation between Captain McLeod and the Hukeem, seems to me to form proof the most convincing to the mind of every person conversant in the slightest degree with the character of the natives of India, that the late Vizier's retraction of his solemn and written assurances regarding the reform of his Government, and all his untoward proceedings from the month of December 1813 till his death, were connected with the deputation of Captain McLeod and with intrigues conducted by Hukeem Mehdee.

23. My official despatch to your address under date the 22d of January 1814, contains a paragraph so strikingly descriptive of the nature of those proceedings and intrigues, though but imperfectly known to me at the time, that I must here take the liberty of inserting it. "The Vizier has been manifestly led to believe, by the vague and unfounded reports of designing persons around him, that the sentiments of the present Government are favourable to his views of absolute independence, uncontrollable by the Resident's advice; and till this misconception be removed, I have no expectation of a change in those unhappy and pernicious counsels which have guided his recent proceedings."*

24. Had the measures of the Government at that time, or the tenor of its instructions to me, been of a nature to invalidate the reports and to defeat the insidious designs of the persons to whom I alluded, it is probable that the conduct of the Vizier would have resumed the character which it exhibited before Lord Minto's retirement from office. But matters were otherwise ordered, and it was my duty to submit, continuing in office as I did, to the wisdom and will of my superiors.

25. The same disposition to oppose or evade the just views of our Government continued to be manifested by the Vizier till the commencement of his Excellency's indisposition in the ensuing month of May, and indeed till the melancholy hour of his sudden and unexpected demise. My despatches, official and private, to your address, from February till the end of June, need not to be referred to on this occasion: they exhibit my unremitting endeavours, in compliance with Lord Moira's commands, to conciliate the confidence of the Vizier, and to reconcile him, by the means which were prescribed to me, to the adoption of those measures of reform which I was still permitted to urge to him, and which had no other motive, on my part, than the welfare and prosperity of his Government, combined with the honour and reputation of our own. The failure of those salutary objects during his Excellency's lifetime, can obviously now be ascribed to no other cause than the influence of the baneful advice and intrigues of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan and his coadjutors, whose influence naturally ceasing on the death of the late Vizier, gave room for the happy accomplishment of every object in view, and for the adjustment of all pending questions between the British Government and the State of Oude, without any exertion on my part, save a friendly explanation to the present Vizier of the grounds and purposes of the counsels which I was instructed to offer to his father, and which his Excellency not only accepted with the utmost cheerfulness and gratitude, but solicited with an earnestness

26. I now proceed to enquire, how the confidence of the present Vizier in my friendship, or rather his Excellency's belief of my possessing the confidence of the Government, was shaken unhappily for a time by the machinations of his enemies and mine, whose end was their personal advantage, at the expense of honour and truth, and of every laudable principle that can influence the conduct of man.

27. My official despatches to the Governor-General contain the details of my proceedings at this Court during the first month after his Excellency's accession; in which short period it will be observed, and is worthy of particular remark, that all the questions which depended between the two Governments, including the momentous question of reform, had been brought to a happy adjustment, to the perfect satisfaction of the Vizier, and in a manner which evinced his Excellency's entire confidence in the propriety of my suggestions regarding them. His Excellency's attachment to me, and his implicit reliance on my friendship, were described, as Lord Moira has observed, in colours the most animated and glowing. They appeared in those colours to me, and to all the population of this capital as well as to his Excellency's courtiers, and more particularly to those enemies of his Excellency's happiness and peace who have since been labouring to destroy them. I am ready to depose upon oath, and I refer for the confirmation of my assertion to those officers of the Vizier's Government who were present at our conferences on business, Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, Rajah Dya-Krishen, and Moonshee Bhola Nath, being the chief of them, that every suggestion which I offered to his Excellency was offered in the legitimate exercise of my duty as the British Resident at his Court, with the same deference and respect which I had formerly shewn to his father; that I repeatedly declined to interfere, and refused to offer my advice on a variety of points which he referred to me on the ground of their being personal or domestic; and that, on no occasion whatever, did I interfere, or attempt to interfere, in any of the concerns of his Government, save such as were unquestionably the common concerns of the two States, and as such required the interposition of my friendly counsel and advice, agreeably to the letter of my instructions.

28. As the appointment of Mr. Wilson to the office of personal surgeon to the Vizier forms a leading feature in the transactions which it is the object of this narrative to explain, it is indispensable that the true circumstances of this appointment be brought to particular notice.

29. Mr. Williams, the predecessor of Mr. Law as surgeon to his Excellency the late Vizier, resigned his situation in the year 1808 and proceeded to Europe, having previously, in conformity with an agreement, and as I afterwards understood, for a certain consideration in money, recommended Mr. Law to the Vizier as a proper person to succeed him. Mr. Law arrived at Lucknow towards the end of the year 1809; and during the interval between the departure of Mr. Williams and the appointment of Mr. Law, Mr. Wilson had frequently attended the late Vizier professionally, and had acquired his good opinion, to a degree which induced the general belief that his Excellency wished to secure Mr. Wilson's permanent attendance by appointing him to the vacant office of surgeon. Mr. Wilson, however, was of too independent a mind to seek for an office of this nature, into which certain observances had crept, and were then considered as indispensable, which he thought unsuitable to his age, and were certainly incompatible with his habits, and the appointment did therefore not take place.

30. His Excellency the present Vizier, whose unhappy estrangement from his father, and his father's dislike of him, have been known for a very long period, was subject to occasional illness from his youth, and in consequence of his estrangement from his father, had been frequently in the habit of applying for medical aid to the surgeon of the Residency instead of his father's surgeon. This practice, with a reference to Mr. Wilson, had commenced shortly after my arrival arrival at Lucknow, and Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, the present Minister of this Government, and the principal and only confidential servant of the Prince, was the medium of consultation with Mr. Wilson regarding the state of his master's health, and the channel of conveying medicine for his use.

31. On one particular occasion, during a hunting excursion in 1809, after Mr. Williams's departure from Lucknow and before Mr. Law's appointment, the Prince, then in favour with his father, was seized with an alarming and dangerous illness, during which Mr. Wilson attended and prescribed for him, by the particular desire of his father, whose gratitude, as well as the Prince's, for Mr. Wilson's attentions on that occasion, was frequently mentioned to me in the highest possible terms; and since that period it is known to a number of respectable persons, that the present Vizier has constantly had recourse to Mr. Wilson on every occasion of his illness. Nay, on one or two occasions I have heard, when Mr. Law was directed by the father to attend and prescribe for the Prince, that the latter, in apparent compliance with the command of his father, admitted the visits of Mr. Law and received medicines from his hand, which he afterwards destroyed instead of using them, and sent secretly for medicine to Mr. Wilson. These circumstances were all distinctly related to me, as I have now stated them, by his Excellency the present Vizier, during the night of his father's demise, when Mr. Wilson was the only surgeon in attendance, Mr. Law being confined to his house; and they were subsequently repeated by his Excellency on many occasions, as the natural and necessary cause of his continuing to employ Mr. Wilson as his personal Surgeon after his accession to the musnud, accompanied, however, as I was happy to observe, by the expression of a humane and liberal intention to retain Mr. Law in his service with the same allowances as before.

32. This arrangement of his Excellency the Vizier's I considered as purely domestic, and as one in which I could not interfere, on any pretext, with propriety; and I do now most solemnly declare, that I did not interfere in any other manner than by communicating the will of the Vizier, by his Excellency's express desire, to the parties immediately concerned in it. And further, I most conscientiously believe, that the arrangement was exclusively the dictate of his Excellency's own inclination, unsolicited, if even wished for, by Mr. Wilson, who did not certainly convey a wish on the subject, directly or indirectly, to the Vizier. The effect which it produced on the feelings of Mr. Law at the time has been described in that gentleman's statement, and was natural enough, I admit: but it certainly ought to have subsided, on his receiving the candid and friendly communication which I made to him of the cause of it, by desire of his Excellency the Vizier, as well as from motives of personal kindness; and the subsequent conduct of Mr. Law and his friends, more particularly of Captain McLeod, in propagating a most groundless report, that my influence over the mind of the Vizier had deprived him of his appointment in the household for the purpose of serving my friend, and that the story of Mr. Wilson's having formerly prescribed for the Vizier was a mere pretence and unfounded, is a conduct on which it seems unnecessary that I should offer any remarks. I must, however, be permitted to refer to a letter which was addressed to Mr. Law by the Vizier on the 25th July last, shortly after his accession to the musnud, in which his Excellency's sentiments on this subject are most fully and explicitly conveyed, and which it is remarkable that Mr. Law should have suppressed in his statement of the 10th of November. I have recently procured a copy of this letter from his Excellency, and insert a translation of it in this place. "I have received your arzee, expressive of your

The loss of character and reputation, which you seem to apprehend, could obviously only have arisen to you if you had been my ancient physician, and Dr. Wilson had been recently appointed; whereas the state of the case is directly the reverse, for Dr. Wilson is my ancient physician, and you were the physician of my father: and consequently it follows, that all the injury which you represent would, of necessity, fall on Dr. Wilson (which God avert) were I now to displace him and take you, whereas to you there can be no injury whatever. It is true you have committed no fault, and I entertain no sentiments but those of kindness and benevolence towards you: nay, from a recollection of my father’s regard for you, I wish you to remain in my service, and as the Resident informed you by my desire, to prescribe for the members of my household.”

33. The conduct of Captain McLeod with a reference to the appointment of Mr. Wilson to the office of surgeon to the Vizier, which was brought to my notice at this time, and even the sentiments which he expressed to myself, were such as to excite my surprise in a very extraordinary degree. The Vizier told me repeatedly that Captain McLeod had interceded for Mr. Law, and had represented in extraordinary terms the distress of the latter’s mind at the appointment of Mr. Wilson; that Mr. Law himself had also annoyed his Excellency, on one occasion, by crying most bitterly in his presence, and that his Excellency found it necessary to console him by assurances of a continuance of his friendship, and by sending some presents to his child. “ You know,” said his Excellency to me, “ that I have no wish whatever to injure Mr. Law, and that Mr. Wilson is the only physician whom I have ever consulted with my free will, or in whom I repose any confidence.” This circumstance, to the best of my recollection, I stated particularly to Captain McLeod, in explanation of the purport of my letter to Mr. Law, which that gentleman has produced with his statement, and which Captain McLeod had perused. I pointed out in strong terms to Captain McLeod the gross impropriety of his interference, as well as the absurdity of supposing that I could interfere in any such arrangement as that in question, and I hinted, in friendly terms, at the strange return which Captain McLeod was thus making to Mr. Wilson for his medical attendance on that gentleman’s family, which, to my knowledge, had been long most troublesome and gratuitous, and which Mr. Wilson would have been induced to decline but for my repeated and earnest entreaties, with a view to preserve harmony in my family, as well as from motives of friendship for Captain and Mrs. McLeod. Their manners and conduct towards Mr. Wilson had never appeared to me so cordial as his kindness to them had deserved, and more particularly on their return from Calcutta the asperity of their manners and discourse to Mr. Wilson had been frequently noticed by me, and had given rise to repeated altercation which I had interfered to appease; yet, notwithstanding this apparent reconciliation, it was evident to me and all my family, that both Captain and Mrs. McLeod entertained a dislike to Mr. Wilson, and indeed they occasionally avowed it, by stating their disagreement with him as the cause of their secession from the Residency, which began to be remarked at this time. Upon the whole, I do not hesitate to ascribe the extraordinary and intemperate zeal of Captain McLeod in advocating the cause of Mr. Law, both with the Vizier and in other situations, to a personal dislike of Mr. Wilson, as groundless and unnatural almost (if, indeed, a parallel could be found for it) as his peculiar ingratitude to me.

34. Having thus, in a satisfactory manner, explained the whole of the circumstances attending the appointment of Mr. Wilson to the office of Surgeon to the Vizier, and accounted for the feelings of dissatisfaction which this appointment created in the mind of Captain McLeod and Mr. Law, I proceed to offer a few remarks on the nature and character of Mr. Clarke’s connection with the two other gentlemen, as tending to develope the designs with which he became a party to their measures.

35. Mr. Clarke is a much older resident at Lucknow than any of the former gentlemen. I found him here on my arrival to take charge of the Residency, and received a favourable impression of his character from two or three of my intimate acquaintances; more particularly from the recommendation of Mr. Wilson, who described him as honourable and upright in his principles, modest and unoffending in his manners, and an object of humane consideration from a series of misfortunes that had assailed him. Mr. Clarke was, in consequence, received at my house with hospitality, and continued till very lately to be uniformly treated by me with every degree of attention that our relative situations admitted of. Shortly after the arrival of Mr. Law, I perceived, and was informed by Mr. Clarke, that he and Mr. Law had had a quarrel which suspended all intercourse between them, and seemed, by the statement of Mr. Clarke, to preclude the possibility of a reconciliation. Mr. Clarke preferred a complaint to me, through the medium of Dr. Wilson, against Mr. Law, for a breach of an engagement between them, and between the latter and Mr. Williams, having reference to the appointment of Mr. Law, through the good offices of Messrs. Williams and Clarke, to his situation of surgeon to the Vizier. I observed, on perusing the papers, that the complaint of Mr. Clarke was of such a nature as to preclude my deciding on the merits of it without a reference to my official character, and I desired Mr. Clarke to reconsider the propriety of making such a reference. The matter in that form was in consequence dropped; but the quarrel between Mr. Clarke and Mr. Law continued with increasing virulence on both sides, till the Vizier's departure to Cawnpore to meet the Governor-General, when I was astonished, but happy to hear, that they were cordially reconciled to each other. Captain McLeod had originally taken up the cause of Mr. Law against Mr. Clarke with extraordinary warmth, and had ceased for a considerable time to hold any intercourse with the latter: but I had observed a reconciliation and growing intimacy between Mr. Clarke and Captain McLeod before the latter's departure to the Presidency in September 1813; and it was understood in October last, that Captain McLeod had been the sole instrument of the reconciliation between the two other gentlemen. The motives and objects of the reconciliation and association of the three are now sufficiently apparent.

36. The appointment of the sons of Mirza Jāfer to situations in the service of the Vizier is a circumstance particularly noticed in the Right Honourable the Governor-General's remarks; and as it appears to be the only occurrence from which his Lordship has been pleased to deduce the grounds of his censure of my proceedings, I deem it my duty to add to the solemn declarations already recorded on this subject the following simple detail.

37. My opinion of the character of Mirza Jāfer, founded on my own experience of his integrity and zeal in the service of the British Government during a period of twelve years, and on the sound and unerring judgment of my worthy predecessor, Colonel Scott, needs not to be reported on this occasion. On the death of Maha-Rajah Ticket Roy in the year 1800, Colonel Scott had recommended Mirza Jāfer for the office of subordinate Minister to his Excellency the late Vizier; and on the occasion of his Excellency's last illness, as well as immediately after his decease, I had submitted to the Right Honourable the Governor-General my sentiments regarding the necessity for the nomination of a Minister to conduct the details of this Government, conveying at the same time to Mr. Edmonstone and to you, the unbiassed conviction of my mind, that Mirza Jāfer was the only native of Oude entitled by his character and talents to aspire to the situation in question. My private letter of the 4th of August on this subject is doubtless still in your possession; and you can further relate, if it be necessary, the purport of our conversations at Cawnpore, and the sincere regret which I expressed to you, when informed that Lord Moira was averse to the appointment of Mirza Jāfer to the office of Minister. It may be proper in this place to state, with a reference to Captain McLeod's narrative of the late Vizier's complaints to him, when on the eve of his departure to the Presidency, that Mirza Jāfer, from bodily infirmity and a variety of other causes, had ceased for a number of years to hold any official situation under me, and consequently that the complaints of the Vizier with regard to this respectable person were not only utterly unfounded, but must have been known to Captain
McLeod

McLeod at the time to be totally inconsistent with the situation of Mirza Jāfer relatively to me, and with the character of my official proceedings, which gives less room for the operation of native influence on my mind than on that of most public officers in India.

38. My opinion of the sons of Mirza Jāfer is by no means so favourable as that which I have ever entertained of their father; though, with the exception of their natural haste to profit by the Vizier's liberality in acquiring situations and salaries which they knew that I must necessarily disapprove, I have really never had cause to form a judgment unfavourable to their characters. The eldest, Mirza Hajee, indeed is the only one of them who is thoroughly known to me, he having acted as my Dewan in Bundelcund and at this place for a period of eleven years, and his conduct in that situation having been generally satisfactory. The time and manner of this person's admission into the Vizier's service have been already distinctly related in my answers to the Vizier's papers; and while I repeat my readiness to confirm the former statement on oath, I am fortunately enabled to refer it to the additional testimony of the Vizier himself and of his Ministers, and of all those who were present in durbar on the day of his accession to the musnud. That I did not more decidedly refuse to comply with the Vizier's request upon that occasion, is now a cause of regret to me: chiefly, however, I must add, from the fickleness of his Excellency's disposition, which I could not have known at the time; for contemplating, as I then did, the future nomination of Mirza Jāfer to the office of Minister to the Vizier by his Excellency's voluntary choice, and with the ready concurrence of our Government, I saw no objection whatever to the more early admission of the son into the service and councils of his Excellency; and, on the contrary, I was pleased to observe so early a proof of regard for the family of a person, whose merits were so strongly impressed on my mind.

39. Mirza Hajee became the servant of the Vizier, and was succeeded in the office of my Dewan by Meer Ameer Hyder, the son-in-law of my head Moon-shee, on the day of his Excellency's accession; and from that day till the day of his dismissal by the Vizier, I saw less of Mirza Hajee than of any other of his Excellency's servants of equal rank; nor did I ever learn, or enquire into the amount of the salary fixed for him, though I frequently recommended to his Excellency to satisfy himself of Mirza Hajee's merits, and of the value of his services, before he admitted him to his confidence, and particularly to be cautious of receiving any communication from him, or from any other native, of my sentiments or wishes, which I should never impart to a native, but convey to his Excellency directly as circumstances might seem to require.

40. At the first public durbar which was holden by the Vizier after his accession, the other sons of Mirza Jāfer, in common with all the respectable inhabitants of Lucknow, were presented as a matter of course to his Excellency, and received the usual khillats. None of these young men were in any degree connected with me, nor did I ever recommend them to his Excellency.

Their admission into his Excellency's service was naturally brought about by their elder brother, whose connection with the Residency had ceased, and whose conduct I had no longer a right to control, nor to take cognizance in any manner of his proceedings. The Vizier frequently talked of his usefulness about the durbar, and announced to me, as he was then in the voluntary habit of doing, with a reference to every act of his life, his intention of employing the younger brothers. I answered, that they had formerly served under me as Tuhseeldars, or officers of revenue in Bundelcund, and that his Excellency might perhaps find them useful at some future period in that line; but I repeated, on this occasion, my caution against the employment of any person by his Excellency, from an idea that it might be gratifying to me; and I recommended particularly on this as on many other occasions, the propriety of his Excellency's delaying to fill up any vacant offices of importance under his Government, till the arrival of the Governor-General should give an opportunity of consulting his Lordship, in person, on the choice of a proper Minister and subordinate officers to conduct the whole of the details of the administration.

41. The foregoing detail of the circumstances of the admission of the sons of Mirza Jāfer into the service of his Excellency the Vizier, with the remarks that were formerly offered in my paper of the 9th of November, ought in justice, I humbly conceive, to obviate the censure which has been passed upon this part of my proceedings by his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, who would seem, I am sorry to think, to have hesitated about the propriety of removing me from the important station which I hold, and the duties of which I have conducted with uniform zeal and success, on no other ground that appears, than my declining to interfere in, and prevent a domestic arrangement of the Vizier's, by which his Excellency thought proper to provide for the four sons of Mirza Jāfer, a respectable and meritorious dependant of the Honourable Company's Government, no otherwise connected with me than by his faithful attachment to its interests. Yet it must be obvious on a moment's reflection, that such an interference on my part would not only have been contrary to my instructions, but to the spirit and nature of the alliance between our Government and the State of Oude.

42. Lord Moira has however declared, that there were other particulars in my conduct which his Lordship found reason to censure, and some on which he suspected that disapprobation should rest; but as these have not been explained to me, I am precluded from offering a vindication; and the same observation applies to those points of my behaviour to the Vizier in the presence of the Governor-General, which his Lordship considered as of a nature to wound his Excellency's feelings. I disavow on my honour and truth, and I am ready to do so on oath, my having ever, in word or deed, given cause of offence to the Vizier, or made use of any expression, far less committed an act, that could wound his Excellency's feelings, or detract from the dignity or independence of his station, and I entreat my Lord Moira to grant me an opportunity of removing the grounds of a suspicion so injurious to my character.

43. How then, it may naturally be asked, was his Excellency induced to lend his name, or rather the semblance of his authority (for his seal was cautiously withholden), to those false, frivolous, and most malicious charges, which though retracted with sorrow and shame within a few hours after their exhibition, and before his Excellency could go to rest, have been deposited among the archives of the British Government, as if substantial charges against its representative? This question can only be answered by unravelling a second intrigue, more base and more complicated than that which my narrative has already developed, in as far as the Vizier was the unwilling instrument of the latter, while his father had an obvious interest in directing and encouraging the former.

44. The conduct of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan during the first month after the sudden fall of his power on the demise of the late Vizier, is sufficiently described in my despatches to his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General. This fall, like that of Lucifer, might be expected to excite despair in the first instance, and afterwards to give rise to those designs which the recent transactions have developed, and which I detected and reported to you so early as the 8th of September last.

45. Hukeem Mehdee had been a farmer of revenue to the extent of nearly thirty lacs of rupees per annum under the Government of the late Vizier, and the loss of this lucrative farm was the first sacrifice which he found himself called upon to make to the new system of administration. His secret disinclination to the reform was therefore not to be doubted; but the ready acquiescence of his Sovereign in all my suggestions on this point leaving no hope of success to his design of suspending the reform, the versatility of his disposition suggested his cheerful acquiescence in the measures which I had recommended to the Vizier, as the means of regaining my confidence, and perhaps of paving his way to the latent object of his ambition—the situation of Minister of Oude.

46. He had penetration, however, at an early period, to find out that the judgment which I had formed of his character was hostile to his ambitious views, and that my influence, as far as it could be exerted with propriety, would be be favourable to the appointment of Mirza Jâfer. Hence naturally arose the resumption of his former devices and cabals, and in all probability his second recurrence to Captain McLeod and the subordinate instruments of intrigue, whom he had formerly used with success to practice on the mind of his Sovereign. Mirza Jâfer, as the supposed rival of the Hukeem, was of course represented to the Vizier as the enemy of his Excellency's independence as well as of that of his father, and an instrument in my hands for its subversion. His sons were described as my spies, employed to report to me the occurrences at his Excellency's durbar; and the imprudence of those young men themselves, as I now have some reason to believe, in boasting of their father's expectation of the office of Minister to the Vizier, had probably disgusted his Excellency, and given grounds to Hukeem Mehdee and others for exaggerated statements to their prejudice, which have ultimately been productive of their ruin.

47. With regard to the English coadjutors of Hukeem Mehdee, I was totally ignorant of their proceedings, and never even suspected their designs till after my arrival at Cawnpore in the suite of his Excellency the Vizier. Mr. Clarke had applied for my influence to obtain the repayment of a loan that he had made to an Aumil of this Government who died insolvent several years ago. I submitted his application to the Vizier, who received it graciously at first, and Mr. Clarke seemed grateful for my mediation. Captain McLeod had solicited my interference to procure from the Vizier's liberality a compensation for the loss which had arisen to him from his preference of the Vizier's service to the office of superintendent of roads. I considered it an act of duty and friendship to submit the circumstances of this case to the consideration of his Excellency the Vizier, and the result was a donation of 9,000 rupees to Captain McLeod, with an augmentation of his monthly salary from 1,500 to 2,000 rupees, as reported officially in my despatch of the 17th of August last, for which Captain McLeod was most profuse in his expressions of gratitude and attachment to me.

48. The circumstances which gave dissatisfaction to Mr. Law have been already narrated in detail, and Captain McLeod's participation in his feelings, as well as zealous exertions to reinstate him in a situation which he had naturally lost on the death of his only employer, have also been briefly explained. Captain McLeod's personal visits to the Vizier of an evening were observed to commence about this time, and appeared to me to be irregular and improper, but the idea of a conversation on political subjects between them had never entered into my thoughts; and as the Vizier had never exhibited the smallest symptoms of uneasiness, far less of dissatisfaction with me, nor had I ever given him cause to do so, the expression of his dissatisfaction to Captain McLeod could not have entered into my contemplation. His Excellency has since declared to his Minister, and the Minister has reported to me, that the uniform purport and tendency of Captain McLeod's discourse in the carriage was to excite a suspicion of my friendship, to impress his Excellency with a belief that his independence could never be maintained, that the concerns of his Government could not prosper, while I was Resident at his Court; that the circumstance of my having placed him on the musnud precluded, and must ever preclude, my feeling or evincing towards him that degree of deference and respect which was due to his exalted station; that, besides, I was the enemy of his father, who had complained against me frequently to the Governor-General, and that Lord Moira, who knew the justice of his complaints, had determined on this account, and from personal disinclination towards me, to take an opportunity of removing me from Lucknow.

49. While Captain McLeod was thus separately practising on the mind of his Excellency the Vizier during their drives of an evening in the carriage, it appears that Hukeem Mehdee and he were in the daily habit of meeting, to concert on the most effectual plan of conducting their joint operations. The scene of those meetings is described to have been the buildings of the old palace or dowlut-khana, which they were jointly employed in repairing, the one as designer and the other as superintendent of the works; and this circumstance, though occasionally brought to my notice at the time, like the drives of an evening with his Excellency, was not sufficient to create in my mind the slightest suspicion of the rectitude of Captain McLeod's conduct and principles, till developed by the maturation of the plot and by his own most explicit confession.

50. As Agha Meer, the present Minister of this Government, is a principal person referred to in the statement of Captain McLeod and also in the minute of Lord Moira, I am naturally led, in this place, to describe the character of Agha Meer, in as far as it has yet become known to me, and his condition, relatively to the Vizier and myself, before he was suddenly raised to the important station of Minister.

51. Agha Meer is by birth a seyyud of respectable parentage and connexions. His father's name was Meer Mohummud Tukee, and his own proper name is Seyyud Mohummud, reserved in the patent of nobility which has been conferred on him recently by the Vizier. The Governor-General's allusion to this person's standing in his Lordship's presence behind the Prince's chair is equally applicable to natives of the highest rank at Lucknow, save the nearest relations of the Sovereign. Hukeem Mehdee, for example, though the chief director of the late Vizier's councils and most confidential servant of his Government, exercising in fact all the functions of chief Minister, was never permitted to take a seat, and could never have expected that honour unless raised to the ostensible situation of Minister, which alone, and but in latter days, gave the distinction of a chair in the Vizier's presence to natives unconnected with him by blood.

52. Agha Meer, however, and his father before him, were the principal and only confidential servants of his Excellency the present Vizier for a period of nearly twenty years. The father, I have lately been informed, was his Excellency's tutor for a time, and the attachment of Agha Meer to his Excellency, while labouring under the displeasure of his father, resisted both the offers and threats of the late Vizier, and the intrigues and cajolements of Hukeem Mehdee, to detach him from the service of the Prince and engage him in the father's employment. These circumstances were stated to me by the Vizier in terms of affection and gratitude on the day of his accession to the musnud. His Excellency then introduced Agha Meer to my friendship, as a faithful adherent to his fortunes during the most unhappy periods of his life, and he urged me, shortly after his accession, to confer on this faithful servant a khillat of extraordinary distinction, including an embroidered palkee, and comprizing the greatest number of pieces that are ever bestowed on an officer of the highest rank and consideration; thus paving the way, as it would seem, to the honours which have since been conferred on him. With me, in every situation, save in the presence of his Sovereign, and with his present Sovereign before he became so, Agha Meer has been constantly seated; and his birth, education, and talents, though none of them certainly such as, independently of the confidence of his master, to have called him or entitled him to aspire to his present exalted situation, are still by no means inferior to those of any former Minister in Oude, excepting, and with a reference only to talents, the late Tufuzzool Hoosein Khan, who was called to this station by Lord Teignmouth.

53. My personal knowledge of Agha Meer commenced, as above stated, on the day of his master's accession to the musnud, and he has uniformly since been the medium of every communication of importance received by me from the Vizier. His attachment to his master under various trials and temptations, by which the fidelity of most natives would have been shaken, had been established to my perfect conviction before he was personally known to me. His conduct since I have had occasion to observe it, with a reference to his master and our Government, has been such as I could not but approve, and the share which I now believe him to have had, though I was totally ignorant of it at the time, in encouraging his master's repentance of the monstrous ingratitude and folly into which he was misled by Hukeem Mehdee and the English coadjutors of that person, on the 31st of October last, is in my mind more honourable to his character than a long line of ancestors ennobled, and must yield him more permanent permanent satisfaction than all the power and enjoyments of his station of Minister to the Vizier.

54. But to return to persons of less value in my estimation than Agha Meer, though of greater importance on the theatre of the recent extraordinary transactions. Among the various emissaries of Hukeem Mehdee, the person named Mirza Jäfer, brother, of Mirza Bäker, who is noticed in a former part of this narrative, was now on his way from Calcutta, and reported to have overtaken the fleet of his Excellency the Governor-General. Another, named Taj-ood-Deen Hoosein Khan, was engaged in the service at Cawnpore, and deputed on a mission to Benares; but of this person it is unnecessary to say much, as yourself, and more particularly Mr. Ricketts, can describe to the Government the opinion which you had reason to form of his views. He is now in the service of the Vizier, as the deputy Nazim of a district; and the account which I have had of his deputation by Hukeem Mehdee, in September last, is shortly as follows: The Hukeem having begun to suspect, from the apparent association of Captain McLeod with Mr. Clarke, and by their frequent consultations with the Vizier, from which the Hukeem was excluded, that the English gentlemen had a separate scheme of their own, deemed it also expedient for himself to set some separate engines to work; and with this view deputed Taj-ood-Deen to Benares, where he was known to several English gentlemen, from whom introductions to Mr. Ricketts were obtained; and with these introductions, and some valuable Persian swords which Mr. Ricketts rejected at Cawnpore, Taj-ood-Deen joined the suite of Lord Moira, and remained in attendance for some months. Gocul Chund Chobey, an ostensible agent of the Vizier's in occasional attendance on the Governor-General, was also coming up with the fleet. An intrigue of Gunaish Pershaud, the son of Gocul Chund Chobey, whether his own unassisted contrivance or directed by Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, was detected early in September, and reported to you, for his Lordship's information, in my private letter of the 8th of that month, to which, and to my further letters of the 26th and 27th of September, I would now particularly refer, as they exhibit the view which I took of the proceedings at this Court in September, and of the circumstances which gave rise to those proceedings. Gunaish Pershaud has since been convicted of intrigues with the Khass Muhl and the Nawab Nuseer-ood-Dowlah, and of having received sums of money from them in advance, to be given, as he basely pretended, to natives about the Government-house, for the accomplishment of the objects of those personages.

56. The reported statement of Gunaish Pershaud to the Vizier, with a reference to a reform of this Government, as conveyed by my private letter above-noticed, whether Gunaish's invention, or his father's, or that of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, was publicly talked of at this durbar, and naturally gave rise or encouragement to the intended deputation of Hukeem Mehdee to wait on the Governor-General at Elahabad, for the purpose of ascertaining his sentiments regarding the question of reform, as well as generally the degree of his Lordship's confidence which was reposed in his representative at the Court of Lucknow.

57. My objections to the deputation of Hukeem Mehdee, as expensive, unprofitable, and injurious, as well as inconsistent with the Vizier's formerly declared opinion of the character and views of the Hukeem, are stated in my letters to your address of the 26th and 27th of September, and they appeared to have made a proper impression on the mind of the Vizier at the time; for his Excellency departed from his intention, and a large sum of money, three lacs of rupees, exclusive of jewels, as reported, which the Hukeem was to have received from his Excellency, and would doubtless have embezzled, under the pretext of applying it as douceurs to the natives in the suite of the Governor-General, was thus saved to the Government of the Vizier.

58. The feelings of disappointment and mortification excited in the mind of Hukeem Mehdee by the failure of this deputation may very easily be conceived. He ascribed it, of course, to my influence, and represented it, as I understood, to the Vizier in the light of a subversion of his Excellency's authority, and of a measure adopted by me to lower him in the opinion of his subjects, since the preparations for the mission had been published, and the Hukeem had been boasting by anticipation of the triumph which his mission to Lord Moira, would give him over his rivals at this Court.

59. The Vizier commenced his journey to Cawnpore on the 7th of the month of October, and on our second march from Lucknow an untoward occurrence took place respecting a trooper in his Excellency's service, which would seem to have been reported to Lord Moira in false or exaggerated terms, with the base and malicious design of prejudicing his Lordship against me. It would, perhaps, have been fortunate for me, if his Lordship, as I might naturally have expected from consideration for the high office which I hold, had stated this report to myself, instead of noticing it to persons who were not present on the occasion, and could not be informed of the circumstances, even if totally disinterested in their statement. The whole of the circumstances as they happened are recorded in my paper of the 9th November, and may be referred to the testimony on oath of Captain Fortune and of several native spectators. Moonshee Alee Nuckee Khan, the head Moonshee of the Residency, who explained the circumstances exactly as they occurred to the Vizier, and brought about the friendly explanation between his Excellency and me, has ever since been distinguished by his Excellency's favour, and received from him the title of Moslehood-Dowlah, or conciliator, in consequence of his judicious conduct on that occasion.

60. On the morning of the 9th of October I quitted the Vizier's camp and proceeded to Cawnpore, for the purpose of paying my personal respects to Lord Moira. The circumstances of my reception at Cawnpore, as naturally influencing the opinions of the Court and courtiers of Lucknow, shall here be briefly referred to. Having had no previous intimation of the Governor General's desire of my immediate attendance on his Lordship, I proceeded to the house of General Stafford, commanding the troops at Cawnpore, and was informed by the General, on my arrival, that the customary honour of a salute to all foreign ambassadors was withholden from me by Lord Moira's command, on the ground that the presence of the Governor-General suspended the rank of the representative of the British Government for the time. To this I might have answered from recollection, that salutes are usual in Fort-William on the arrival of Residents at the Presidency, and that the general orders of Lord Cornwallis prescribe this compliment to the Resident at Lucknow at every station where there are guns, without any exception whatever.

61. The inferences which were drawn in the Vizier's camp from the omission of this common observance were natural and unanswerable on my part. They were aided by the casual circumstance of my having awaited the order of Lord Moira for the honour of admission into his presence till a late hour in the afternoon; and the personal kindness and affability of his Lordship's manner towards me during the whole period of my stay at Cawnpore, though they inspired me with gratitude and respect, could have no influence whatever to remove the original impression which the foregoing circumstances occasioned on the minds of the Court of Lucknow.

62. On the morning of the 10th of October I returned to the Vizier's encampment, accompanied by a deputation from the Governor-General, to congratulate his Excellency on his arrival, and arrange the ceremonies of his first interview with his Lordship at Cawnpore on the following day. This interview took place, as described in the Governor-General's minute, without any remarkable occurrence; but immediately after it I was instructed by his Lordship's Secretary, Mr. Ricketts, to open a negotiation with the Vizier for the loan of a crore of rupees to the Honourable Company, to appear as a voluntary offer to Lord Moira.

63. This negotiation was rendered peculiarly embarrassing to me, and of a nature likely to weaken the Vizier's belief of my possessing the confidence of the Governor-General, by the circumstance of my having rejected a similar offer from the Vizier at the date of his accession to the musnud, professing the most most perfect disinterestedness on my own part and that of the Government, with regard to every object save his Excellency's honour and advantage, and the welfare and reputation of his Government. Nevertheless, it was my duty to obey the instructions with which I was charged; and the result of my negotiation was successful with a reference to the public views, though applied by the malice of my enemies to weaken my influence at this Court.

64. I arranged with his Excellency the Vizier, that his offer of a crore of rupees should be made at a conference with Lord Moira on the morning of the 13th of October. At the close of this memorable conference, the only one to which I had the honour of admission till the night preceding Lord Moira's departure from Lucknow, I was mortified and surprised beyond measure, after hearing his Lordship declare his entire confidence in the Resident, to find that declaration superseded by an invitation of his Excellency the Vizier, distinctly translated by Mr. Swinton, to a conference with the Governor-General, from which Major Baillie should be excluded whenever the Vizier might desire it, for any purpose that he had in view.

65. The motive of this invitation it is not for me to explain; but the manifest inference to be drawn from it and its natural influence on the mind of a native, even untutored, cannot require explanation.

66. His Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General has omitted, from forgetfulness I conclude, to refer to his invitation of the Vizier at the first conference with his Excellency, and has described the subsequent invitation at their interview of the 15th October, to a previous application through Mr. Clarke; but the circumstance, as described, being of some importance to my narrative, I must be forgiven for recalling it to notice. It must be evident to his Lordship, on a recollection of his personal invitation to the Vizier at the first interview with his Excellency, that the subsequent application from Mr. Clarke was utterly superfluous and useless; and hence I see reason to infer, that Mr. Clarke's application to his Lordship could not have been suggested by the Vizier, but was devised by Hukeem Mehdee, or Mr. Clarke, for purposes sufficiently obvious, and the success of it afterwards used as a proof to his Excellency the Vizier of his Lordship's displeasure with me, which may naturally enough have induced the Vizier's supervenient avowal of the application, when questioned to that effect at the conference.

67. And here I may be allowed to lament, that an infraction so manifest and express, on the part of Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke, of the positive orders of Government, in presuming to be the channel of communication between the Vizier and the Governor-General, should not only have been tolerated but acted on, and the circumstance concealed from my knowledge till recorded in the minute of Lord Moira. Mr. Ricketts mentioned to me, I recollect, that a message had been received by his Lordship through an irregular channel, and that the bearer of the message had been reprimanded; but Mr. Ricketts repeatedly declined to inform me of the purport of the message, the name or condition of the messenger, and whether he was European or native. I particularly enquired if it was Taj-ood-Deen Hoosein Khan, a person noticed in this narrative as one of the emissaries of Hukeem Mehdee, who was known to have attended Mr. Ricketts. Mr. Ricketts did not answer my question, so as to throw any light on the subject.

68. The conference on Saturday at Lord Moira's, from which his Lordship was pleased to exclude me, at the suggestion of Mr. Clarke and Captain McLeod, passed over, like the former one in camp, without any remarkable occurrence. The plot could not have been brought to maturity at that time, or the Vizier's conscience must have hitherto resisted the practices of Hukeem Mehdee and his colleagues in intrigue. I had waited on his Excellency before dinner, for the purpose of attending him to the Government-House, and had accompanied him, as I usually did when indifferent persons were in waiting, to an inner apartment of his tents on the bank of the river, where we discussed the terms of the obligation to be given by the Governor-

General for the loan of a crore of rupees, and the probable time of the advance and re-payment of the several instalments of the loan,

69. The extraordinary insinuation of Captain McLeod in his second statement, with regard to the above-mentioned conference, affords a manifest and most impressive description of the state of his own mind at the time, but can obviously have no reference whatever to mine; for I have already declared, and am ready to repeat upon oath, that the most distant idea of a complaint against me by the Vizier could never have entered into my contemplation: and it is further worthy of remark, that the Vizier's paper of requests, prepared and given in to Lord Moira at the first conference with his Lordship, without my previous knowledge or concurrence, though containing objections to the reform, was descriptive of the most cordial friendship for me.

70. I returned with his Excellency in his carriage on Saturday night to the camp, and he favoured me with a partial description of what passed at the conference with Lord Moira, exemplifying his Lordship's assurance of friendship and regard for his Excellency, by the expression "Huzrut, toom khoosh rohu" in Hindoostanee, which his Excellency repeated several times, and seemed to be highly pleased with, as well as some other occurrences at the conference which his Excellency described to me during our drive, more particularly that of his having been desired to give in another paper of requests, which he had promised to do accordingly; but added, that he was at a loss how to frame it, and must require my advice on the subject.

71. During our stay in the neighbourhood of Cawnpore (I forget the particular day) I received a note from Captain Gilbert, to request my sanction of his visiting the Nawab Vizier in his camp. The application and the visit surprised me, because I knew that Captain Gilbert, though repeatedly my guest at Lucknow, could scarcely have any acquaintance with the present Vizier, who was rarely in attendance on his father, and as I could not be present on that day to introduce Captain Gilbert to his Excellency, the visit appeared to be irregular; yet, a consideration of Captain Gilbert's connexion with Lord Moira, and a natural belief that his Lordship's sanction to this visit must have been previously obtained, precluded all objection on my part, and I afterwards understood that Captain Gilbert had been introduced to the Vizier by Mr. Clarke, as Lord Moira's confidential friend, and that presents of some jewelry and shawls, inconsistent with established observances, since Captain Gilbert had no official character, had been sent by the Vizier to his house. Mr. Clarke was reported to be the medium of the transmission of those presents to Captain Gilbert, and also of a sword to Major Davidson; and this circumstance struck me in such a light as to open my eyes in some degree with regard to the conduct of Mr. Clarke, whom I requested Captain McLeod, as his friend, to admonish of the impropriety of such conduct. A conversation of some length took place between Captain McLeod and me on this subject at the house of Captain Maling at Cawnpore; and it has since frequently occurred to me, that Captain McLeod appeared to defend the conduct of Mr. Clarke on that occasion with a degree of warmth, irritation, and impatience, which ought to have opened my eyes, if I had not been totally unsuspecting, to the views and practices of the former as well as the latter, and to the encouragement (unintentional I am persuaded) which their joint views must have received from an authority paramount to my own.

72. His Excellency the Vizier took leave of the Governor-General at Cawnpore on Monday the 17th of October, and we commenced our journey towards Lucknow on the following day. During the journey, and after our return to the capital, the greatest possible cordiality subsisted between his Excellency and me, and he appeared to be even more than ordinarily kind and attentive. A dinner, by special invitation, at Julotra, where an illumination on the water took place, was an unusual mark of his attention; and he expressed a particular anxiety, on that occasion, to obtain my assistance in framing the second paper of requests which he had promised to submit to Lord Moira.

73. You must recollect the purport of my private correspondence with yourself about this time, in which I particularly stated my having declined to give any any opinion or advice on the subject of his Excellency's requests; observing, that they should be the genuine dictates of his own mind, uninfluenced by any adviser, since these, and these only, were desired by his Excellency's friend, the Governor-General. My letter of the 26th of October, of which I still have a copy, describes the circumstances that attended the final preparation and transmission of the second paper of requests, which, as containing nothing indicative in the remotest degree of his Excellency's dissatisfaction with me, must be received as a positive proof that even then, notwithstanding all the attempts of his Excellency's enemies and mine, his conscience, or innate sense of honour and rectitude, had hitherto resisted their endeavours to produce the false accusation which he was ultimately compelled to exhibit.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

74. His Excellency's meetings with the Governor-General during the first week after his Lordship's arrival at Lucknow were frequent, almost daily indeed; and during this period it is remarkable, that no symptom of dissatisfaction with me on the part of his Excellency should have appeared: that, on the contrary, the utmost cordiality on both sides should have been manifest, and that no disposition should have been indicated, either directly or through the medium of the secretaries, to obtain a conference with the Governor-General, or to make any communication to his Lordship, save through the constituted and regular channel.

75. A suspicion in the mind of the Governor-General, that I had misinterpreted a request of the Vizier's with regard to the appointment of Dr. Wilson, is indicated by a passage in the minute which his Lordship has been pleased to record, having reference to the elephant fight at Baroun: but as this suspicion has been obviated by the official report of his Lordship's three secretaries of their conference with his Excellency the Vizier, at which his former request on this subject is specifically referred to and confirmed, it seems totally unnecessary for me to comment on this unfortunate occurrence. Yet I entreat my Lord Moira to consider, and dispassionately to reflect on the inference which the Vizier must have necessarily drawn from his Lordship's suspicion of the veracity of his representative at the court of Lucknow, evinced by his deputation of Captain Gilbert to ascertain the correctness of my interpretation of a speech which was made by his Excellency in the presence of a hundred spectators.

76. To this deputation of Captain Gilbert, and his private conference, assisted by Mr. Clarke, with the Vizier, I ascribe the maturation of the plot: a conspiracy designed by Hukeem Mehdee, most readily entered into by Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke, and unintentionally encouraged by Lord Moira; the principal objects of which were the subversion of the reform of this Government, my removal from the office of Resident, and the elevation of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan to the station of Prime Minister to the Vizier. Some other subordinate objects, which have a natural tendency to explain, and were necessary, perhaps, to account for, the extraordinary association and views of the subordinate instruments of the intrigue, have been ascribed to it by general report, which the Vizier, as I understand, has authenticated, and which his Minister has frequently declared to me to consist with his personal knowledge. Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke are reported to have each had a promise from his Excellency of the sum of a lac of rupees,* as the reward of their labours in ascertaining the sentiments of the Governor-General with regard to the reform and the Resident; and his Excellency had further engaged to make good such other douceurs, to a very considerable amount, as Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke might recommend to be given to their friends who assisted the progress of their enquiries. Mr. Clarke was to be aide-de-camp and Major, with the salary annexed to

* This promise, if made as reported, was certainly never performed by his Excellency, who from the moment of the exposure of the intrigue shewed a marked dislike, and even an illiberal resentment towards Captain McLeod, Mr. Clarke, and Mr. Law, which I had some difficulty in restraining. The two former gentlemen, in particular, though I must ever deem their conduct to be culpable in a very extraordinary degree, both with a reference to the public and to myself, have suffered much more from the effects of it, than my feelings towards them at any time could have induced me to wish or desire.

to those offices when held in former times by Mr. Ouseley, and Mr. Law was to be appointed to the office of personal surgeon to the Vizier.

77. The conversation holden with his Excellency the Vizier by Captain Gilbert, on the occasion above referred to, has never been particularly explained to me. Its general purport and drift, as described by his Excellency to the Minister, and repeated by the latter to my Moonshee, were of a nature to force on his Excellency's mind a conviction of the Governor-General's displeasure with me, and his resolution to remove me from my station, if a pretext for doing so could be found. Captain Gilbert's manner must have indicated, if his language did not clearly express, the Governor-General's suspicion of my veracity in the case of Dr. Wilson and Mr. Law, and his Lordship's particular desire to place the latter in his Excellency's household, in the room of the former, who was disliked, and whom his Excellency, it was insinuated, should guard against as the confidential friend of the Resident. The natural effect of such a conversation, and of the comments which Mr. Clarke would have made on it, on the mind of his Excellency the Vizier, nay, the necessary inference which he must have drawn from a question that indicated a doubt in the mind of the Governor-General of the truth of my statement to his Lordship, needs not to be suggested by me, and may very naturally have produced, with a view to Lord Moira's gratification, the message which Captain Gilbert reported to have been given to him by his Excellency the Vizier. Mr. Clarke has thought proper to suppress any allusion, the most remote, to this conference in his answer to your official reference, and the reason for his doing so must be plain. This circumstance, of itself, supersedes the necessity for my offering any comments on the character, in other respects, of that gentleman's letter to your address.

78. It is further worthy of remark, with a reference to Captain Gilbert's deputation, that I received a note from this gentleman while on my way to Constantia, in the morning, requesting my permission to breakfast that day with his Excellency, but taking no notice whatever of his having received an invitation to do so, nor of the conference which was proposed to be holden, under the sanction and instruction of the Governor-General, which must obviously, in the mind of Captain Gilbert, have superseded his application to me; and therefore the motive of the application, unless intended as a blind to conceal from me the real design of the visit, would seem to require explanation.

79. Another circumstance, deserving perhaps of remark, with a reference to Captain Gilbert's deputation, occurs to be noticed in this place. While sitting with Lord Moira at breakfast, I received a message from the Vizier, to announce an unexpected visit from Captains Gilbert and McRa, and to enquire whether presents should be offered to them. I stated the message to Lord Moira, who observed that no presents must be taken, and wrote a note to that effect to one of the gentlemen. From this circumstance and the foregoing, I should infer that Captain Gilbert's visit to his Excellency was not only unexpected but unsought, and that Captain Gilbert must have misunderstood the intention of his Excellency's remark with regard to the carriage of the cheetas.

80. On the subject of Lord Moira's conversation with the Vizier during their drive to the review in cantonments, on the morning of the 31st of October, it seems unnecessary to make any remark. His Excellency subsequently mentioned to me the attempts of both in the carriage to make themselves mutually understood, and we breakfasted in a body at the Residency, where nothing but the utmost cordiality towards me appeared in the conduct of the Vizier, whom I invited to dine with me in the evening, totally unsuspecting, of course, of what the interview of the evening was to produce.

81. The particulars of Mr. Ricketts' conference with the Vizier about noon of the 31st of October are distinctly related by that gentleman; and regarding those I shall only remark, that Mr. Ricketts' deputation to the Vizier, as proceeding on Captain Gilbert's report, might be expected to produce a result which should tally exactly with the former, and that the conviction in his Excellency's mind of Lord Moira's displeasure against me must have been strengthened, instead of being impaired, by the nature of Mr. Ricketts' communication, as has indeed been established beyond a doubt by Mr. Ricketts's subsequent report, in conjunction with Mr. Swinton and yourself, of the genuine sentiments of the Vizier, declared at your conference with his Excellency, which took place on the 4th of November.

Letter
from Resident at
Lucknow.

82. This latter is a document, in my opinion, so convincing and so entirely conclusive in favour of every fact which I have stated, and of every inference which I have drawn with a reference to the recent transactions, that I might here conclude my narrative with safety, and with perfect reliance on the justice of every unprejudiced reader, for a complete vindication of my conduct in all the particulars that have been noticed by his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General, and in the papers to which his minute refers.

83. Before concluding, however, I shall state a few further particulars which were brought to my knowledge subsequently to the exhibition and retraction of the Vizier's most extraordinary charges, and since the Governor-General's departure from Lucknow.

84. It appears that his Excellency was induced to believe, by the repeated assurances of Hukeem Mehdee, supported by Mr. Clarke and Captain McLeod, and particularly by the inference which he drew from the deputation of Captain Gilbert and Mr. Ricketts, that the principal object of Lord Moira's visit to Lucknow was to establish the grounds of a prejudice which he had long entertained against me, connected with my proceedings at this Court in the time of his Excellency's father. That his Lordship was satisfied, further, of the fidelity and attachment of Hukeem Mehdee, and disposed to support his pretensions to the office of Minister of Oude; more particularly in opposition to Mirza Jāfer, whom his Lordship disliked very much in consequence of my recommendation. That Mr. Ricketts, his Lordship's confidential Secretary, was also favourable to Hukeem Mehdee, and particularly hostile to me and to the sons of Mirza Jāfer, and that I was an object of envy and aversion to all the principal persons in the suite of the Governor-General. That his Excellency had nothing to do but to exhibit some complaints against me, which his Lordship would gladly receive and act on without investigation, and that the appointment of Hukeem Mehdee, or any other person unconnected with me or with Mirza Jāfer, whom the Vizier might select for his Minister, would immediately follow his nomination. That the office of Resident should be filled by a gentleman to whom his Excellency might be partial, and who would consult his pleasure in all things; and that the beating of the nobut (a large drum) over the new gateway of the palace, which appears to have been an object of some importance to the Vizier, and which he had hesitated from delicacy to mention to me, should form a spontaneous suggestion of the Governor-General at the conference fixed for the 31st of October, when the charges against me should be given in. Those charges were accordingly prepared by Hukeem Mehdee, as I am disposed to believe, though unquestionably with the knowledge and advice of Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke, the latter of whom is asserted by the Vizier to have given them into his hands, while Hukeem Mehdee most positively ascribes the preparation of the papers to Mr. Clarke in concurrence with Captain McLeod, by whom some of the charges were suggested.

85. The manner of the exposure of the intrigue, and the circumstances which led the Vizier to so early a recantation of his absurdity, remain to be explained, and are as follow, related to me by the Minister, and confirmed by the statement of his Sovereign.

86. The result of the conference at the Residency on the evening of the 31st of October would appear to have greatly disappointed the expectations of his Excellency the Vizier, and to have utterly falsified the statements of Hukeem Mehdee and his English coadjutors. His Excellency saw no satisfaction evinced in the countenance of the Governor-General at receiving those charges against the Resident which were stated to form the principal object of his Lordship's visit to Lucknow. An immediate assurance of my removal, without any investigation of the charges, which his Excellency had been taught to expect, was alike incompatible with the public justice of the Governor-General and with the private virtue of Lord Moira. His Lordship's prejudice against me, the effect of the misrepresentation of my enemies and of his ignorance of the native character, could go no farther than to inspire him with a desire of ascertaining the truth, of correcting my errors if established, and doing justice to my motives if they were pure. He received the charges in silence, or with an assurance merely that they should be taken into consideration, and justice impartially rendered. The nomination of Hukeem Mehdee to be Minister instead of receiving the immediate confirmation of Lord Moira, was rejected in unqualified terms, on the just and obvious grounds of that person's known enmity to the British Government and the general unworthiness of his character. The trifling affair of the nobut, too, instead of being distinguished by his Lordship's particular notice, in anticipation of his Excellency's desire, was explained away in an instant by a personal reference to me; thus indicating, in one instance at least, that my veracity was a natural test for the Governor-General to recur to where his ear had not previously been abused, and establishing to his Excellency's conviction that the assurances of Hukeem Mehdee and his fellows were unauthorized by the Governor-General, and dictated by their personal views. His Excellency further, on quitting the scene of the conference, aware of what he had been doing and seeing me in conversation with you, paid particular attention to my countenance, and saw expressions in it which he supposed to proceed from my knowledge of the purport of his charges, my inward consciousness of their falsehood, my confidence in the result of their investigation, and from a mixed feeling of indignation and compassion towards himself for the ingratitude and absurdity of his conduct.

87. I confess that some portion of those feelings was passing in my mind at the time, though the foolish complaint about the nobut was all that had then been explained to me. You added, to the best of my recollection, that there were a number of other matters of complaint, which I should be informed of in due time; and this partial information from you, connected with the appearance of Mr. Clarke, who had attended his Excellency, self-invited to my house, and was then strutting up and down the room with an air of remarkable consequence, gave a feeling of indignation to my mind, which my face may very probably have portrayed.

88. On the Vizier's getting up to take leave, I was either out of the way or did not come forward to attend him; and Lord Moira, with his usual consideration in matters of personal etiquette, having called for me, as the master of the house, to attend my guest to his carriage, this circumstance, I have since understood, formed another disappointment and a source of remorse to the Vizier, who expected the Resident elect, or his Lordship's confidential Secretary, to assume my place on that occasion. His hand trembled while in mine, and he appeared to be generally agitated, but said nothing at parting with me, and I certainly said nothing to his Excellency, save the usual compliment at taking leave.

89. Agha Meer, who was perfectly acquainted with the origin and progress of the intrigue, and with all the parties concerned in it, but had neither power, nor perhaps inclination at that time to defeat it, and far less, I can confidently assert, any hope of advantage from its exposure, proceeded from the Residency, as he was always in the habit of doing, to the house of my head Moonshee, Alee Nuckee Khan, where the business of the evening was talked over, and my Moonshee became partially informed of the nature of the charges or complaints which the Vizier had presented to the Governor-General. The Moonshee very naturally observed to Agha Meer, that both his master and himself must be aware of their utter falsehood and absurdity, and the certainty of the exposure of both, when the matter should be properly investigated.

90. Agha Meer, after this conversation, took leave of my Moonshee for the night, and went home to his house in the city, whence next morning, at the usual hour, he attended his master for orders, and found him, as he reported to me, in a state of agitation and terror, occasioned, as his Excellency declared, by reflection on the occurrences of the evening. Agha Meer, although inwardly rejoiced at his Excellency's repentance of a conduct which he had reprobated as ungrateful and unworthy, yet aware of his master's disposition and of the proper method method of treating it, endeavoured at first to encourage him by assurances of Lord Moira's support. "What signifies the displeasure of Major Baillie," said Agha Meer, "since he can no longer remain at Lucknow. We can tell our own story when he departs; and, by the blessing of God, your Excellency is an independent and powerful prince, supported by the Governor-General, the king of kings, whom no person can resist nor oppose."—"But whence this support," said his Excellency; "Lord Moira gave me no such assurance. He did not appear pleased by my complaints; he rejected expressly my proposal for the appointment of Hukeem Mehdee to be Minister; and with regard to the nobut he observed that a reference should be made to Major Baillie. When we came out, too, I observed Major Baillie, to whom Mr. Adam had been speaking, as confident and as totally unconcerned as if nothing had passed to displease him: and yet it is obvious that he was displeased, for he would not come to hand me down stairs till Lord Moira desired him to do so, when he must have seen my regret and confusion. I can never look him in the face, far less can I repeat in his presence the contents of that horrible paper."

Lucknow.

91. Agha Meer was now satisfied, as he states, of his Sovereign's cordial contrition for the gross impropriety of his conduct, and his desire of a reconciliation with me. He naturally, therefore, changed his ground, and applauded and encouraged the disposition which he would in vain have attempted to excite in a mind like his Excellency the Vizier's, till his own reflections had led to it. He regretted that his Excellency had been misled by the false and interested representations of his ancient enemy, Hukeem Mehdee, and those fawning Feringees (as he called them) who had brought his Excellency into trouble. He painted in lively colours the tried friendship of the Resident on a number of former occasions as well as since his Excellency's accession; my good name among the English gentlemen as well as the natives of India, which might have prevented the Governor-General from removing me, notwithstanding his personal dislike; and finally, the benevolence of my disposition, as he termed it, which had always led me to forgive the offences of my bitterest enemies, instancing particularly Hukeem Mehdee, whom I had taken into favour myself on the death of the late Vizier, though his former practices were known to me, and had even interceded with his Excellency in his behalf. "Be assured," said Agha Meer to his Excellency, "that you have no reason to doubt the ready forgiveness of Major Baillie for any thing you may have done to displease him; more particularly when informed of the circumstances which induced you to act as you have done. Besides, it is possible," he added, "that Major Baillie may still be ignorant of the contents of the paper which you gave in; and, if you please, I will go to him now with the usual message of friendly enquiry from your Excellency, and endeavour to find out what he knows and thinks of the proceedings of the evening."—"Go immediately," said his Excellency to Agha Meer, "and tell the Resident the whole of the truth. Tell him how I was misled by Clarke and McLeod, that they were the sole instigators of my conduct, that they forced these papers into my hands and insisted on my giving them to Lord Moira, that they had been practising upon me with this view before I left Lucknow, and on my way to Cawnpore, and while there, and that I constantly resisted their attempts, till they brought Captain Gilbert to me with a message from the Governor-General, which at length induced me to listen to their false and malicious assurances, and to give in the papers which they prepared. Tell the Resident, further, that he has long been my uncle and friend, that I repent with sorrow and shame my ungrateful conduct towards him, and am ready to make every reparation. Go, then, with the Resident to Lord Moira, or to his Lordship's secretaries, and tell them the whole of the truth, and bring me back those horrible papers that the Resident may be prevented from seeing them."

92. Agha Meer came accordingly to my house, but found that I was out riding, and heard that I was to breakfast at Constantia. He therefore went to my Moonshee, and explained to him the nature of the message with which he was charged by the Vizier. My Moonshee very properly observed, that the matter was too important to be delayed, and suggested Agha Meer's following me to Constantia to deliver the message from his master. With what follows you you are as well acquainted as I am. I was sitting with you and Mr. Swinton when Agha Meer was announced to be in waiting. I came out to the door to receive him, but refused to listen to his conversation the moment the drift of it was perceived. He then begged to be conducted to you and Mr. Swinton, to whom, as well as to me, the message of his master was to be conveyed. I conducted him into your presence accordingly, took my leave, and returned to the Residency, where shortly after I was followed by Agha Meer, and again refused to receive the communication which he offered to me from his master, desiring that it should be brought to me in writing. The letter of the 1st of November was accordingly brought to me in the evening, and the contents of it, with the feelings of horror which they naturally excited in my mind, were communicated to you for Lord Moira's information immediately.

93. Next morning I carried the letter to Constantia, and had an audience of the Governor-General on the subject of it. His Lordship must doubtless recollect the purport of our conversation on that occasion and on the following day, at Constantia. I lamented in forcible terms the association of English gentlemen, my acquaintances and friends as I supposed them, in the designs and intrigues of Hukeem Mehdee, for the purpose of subverting my influence and of frustrating the views of the Government, the sole and legitimate objects to which my influence had ever been applied. I regretted the encouragement which had been afforded to the base designs of my enemies by his Lordship's ignorance of the native character, and of the intrigues, which had now been developed, to weaken his confidence in me, and which had occasioned so much trouble and vexation. On his Lordship's evincing a disposition to vindicate the conduct of Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke, which I described as in direct opposition to the positive orders of Government, I went so far as to state with submission, that agreeably to the view which his Lordship had taken of their proceedings, I must consider them as authorized spies on the conduct of his Lordship's representative, a mortification to which I humbly presumed that his Lordship could never mean to subject me. When his Lordship expressed a desire to confront those gentlemen with the Nawaub, I most readily concurred in the suggestion, and instead of throwing obstacles in the way of an investigation of the matter of complaint against myself, I encouraged it by every argument in my power. With reference to Mr. Law and Mr. De L'Etang, I entirely concurred with his Lordship in acquitting them of any active share in the intrigue, though I considered Mr. Law as apprized of it; and with regard to Mr. De L'Etang, in particular, I stated what his Lordship has recorded. I must, however, be permitted to remark, with all due deference to his Lordship, that I am not aware of any inference to be drawn from this circumstance, which could militate against the positive proof that has appeared of the association of Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke, from the commencement of the intrigue until its exposure.

94. The nomination by his Excellency the Vizier of his old and confidential servant, Agha Meer, to the office of his Minister, is the only circumstance that remains to be noticed in this narrative; and I am induced to advert to it solely by the allusion in the Governor-General's minute to an intrigue, more efficacious than the first, to set aside the complaints against the Resident, the reward of which was the elevation of Agha Meer to a station of which he was unworthy.

95. I beg of you to recollect the substance of your letter to me, conveying the commands of the Governor-General, that in compliance with the desire of the Vizier I should assist him in the choice of a Minister. This letter was written and received on the 6th of November, some days after the exposure of the intrigue, and when all discussions regarding it had ceased; my answer is probably in your possession. I stated the greatest reluctance to advise the Vizier on this point, and the natural ground of that reluctance, my conviction that the only person worthy of the trust was a person whom his Lordship rejected by reason of his connexion with me. I further entreated, in my answer, that yourself, or some other of the secretaries, should be joined in the mission with me. This request was declined by Lord Moira, in terms the most gratifying to my feelings, as expressive of a renewal of his confidence, and in obedience to his Lordship's command, I promised to wait on his Excellency and report the result of our conference.

96. That

96. That result was announced to the Governor-General in a direct address from his Excellency, and it was the only result to be expected. Mirza Jafer, the most respectable person from talents and birth, and the most desirable from attachment to our interests, that was then to be found in this capital, was proscribed, or supposed to be proscribed, by the Governor-General's displeasure. Hukeem Mehdee had been rejected by his Lordship. Rajah Bhurwanee Pershaud, and Rāee Dya-Krishen, were the only two revenue officers of note who were known to his Excellency or to me. The first had been a fugitive for many years, in balance to the State, and had just been recalled from his exile; he was known to be indebted many lacs of rupees to the bankers of Lucknow, and to have lost his credit with them, and with all descriptions of the people, by his flight while in the service of Government. These circumstances were mentioned by me, and immediately acknowledged by his Excellency as substantial reasons for rejecting him. Dya-Krishen, the next on the roll, was unexceptionable in every respect for the office of Dewan, and the Vizier's nomination of him to that office had my ready and cordial concurrence. For the situation of Naib there was no one. The person named Skeikh Imām Bukhsh, who is referred to in Lord Moira's minute, is a man who had served the late Almass Alec Khan for many years as a Vakeel, in attendance first on the commanding-officer at Cawnpore, and afterwards associated with a Hindoo of greater respectability than himself in attendance at the Resident's durbar. The mention of his name by his Excellency was suggested, as I understand, by Mr. Clarke, between whom and Imām Bukhsh there was a friendship. But the office intended for Imām Bukhsh was merely that of deputy to Hukeem Mehdee in the management of some subordinate department, when the latter should be called to the station of Minister; and it is remarkable, that Imām Bukhsh now actually holds the same office under the present Minister, Agha Meer.

97. There was obviously, therefore, no person of any distinction or note under the former Government of Oude whom the present Vizier could select for the office of his principal Minister; and on my calling his Excellency's attention to the three essential qualities which appeared to me indispensable in the person to be selected for this office, namely, first, attachment to his Excellency's person, established to such a degree as should merit his entire confidence; secondly, that innate principle of justice and benevolence, which should lead the Minister to restrain oppression and promote the happiness of the people; and thirdly, that conviction of the unity and identity of the interests of his Excellency's Government and ours, which would ensure his unremitting endeavours to preserve harmony and cordiality between them, his Excellency immediately observed to me, that the first of the qualities which I mentioned could only be found in Agha Meer, whom he had known and brought up from his infancy, and that he believed him to possess the other two. I replied, that I saw no objection to Agha Meer, if such were his Excellency's sentiments, except the want of former influence and consideration among his subjects, and of experience in matters of state. "The first," said his Excellency, "I can give him; and as to the second, he may gradually acquire it, and will profit in the meantime by your advice, and by the knowledge and experience of Dya-Krishen." I then suggested to his Excellency, that the name of Agha Meer should be noticed among others in his letter to the Governor-General, and that the decision should be left to his Lordship.

98. The foregoing is all that occurred, to the best of my recollection and belief, at my conference with his Excellency the Vizier, which was sought, as I understood, by his Excellency, and prescribed to me by Lord Moira's command, on the subject of the appointment of Ministers. If I have erred in any part of the statement, a reference to his Excellency will correct me: and with this statement I conclude the narrative and vindication of my proceedings as Resident at the Court of Lucknow, during the eventful and memorable period, which has first served to call in question the merits of my political services to the Honourable East-India Company, at a time when I naturally expected the most gratifying marks of approbation for the upright discharge of my duties and successful termination of my labours to improve the Government of Oude.

P. S. With a reference to the date of this letter, it seems proper to offer an explanation of the causes of my delay to transmit it.

The chief of those causes I must avow to have been the return of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General to this neighbourhood, and a natural apprehension in my mind of that event's giving rise to some new intrigues and conspiracies of a nature similar to the former, which have actually arisen from it as I foresaw, and have occasioned a great deal of trouble and vexation to me as well as detriment to the public interests.

Those intrigues, however, have hitherto had an obvious tendency to corroborate, rather than weaken, the conclusions which are drawn in my narrative, and which manifestly flow from the facts and circumstances that are stated in it. The Minister of the Vizier's Government, whom Lord Moira supposed to be the origin of an intrigue more efficacious than that which gave rise to the complaints against the Resident, is no longer in power at this Court, is an object of his Sovereign's aversion, and has been so for several months, in consequence of the intrigues of his enemies, encouraged by the fickleness of his master's disposition, and supported, as I have reason to believe, by native emissaries, as formerly, in the suite of the Governor-General, who have been enabled by fortuitous circumstances to impress the Vizier with a belief that the Minister is disliked by his Lordship, and that a number of his Excellency's measures shortly after his accession to the musnud, which are ascribed to my influence over his mind, although prescribed to me by the orders of the Government, have been disapproved by the Governor-General. Yet, under all these unfavourable circumstances, no surmise of any thing like the intrigue which was ascribed to the unfortunate Agha Meer has hitherto come to my knowledge, and his Excellency the Vizier, though we have actually degraded his Minister, placed his person under rigorous restraint, and disclaimed a number of measures which the Minister adopted by his command, has never yet been prevailed on to disavow the sincerity of his repentance and recantation of his absurd complaints against me, nor his original exposure of the authors of them. On the other hand, his recall of Mirza Hajee to favor, the earnestness with which he solicited the continuance of Mr. Wilson in his household, and the tenor of his letters on those subjects, have a manifest tendency to demonstrate the truth of my solemn declaration, that his original employment of Mirza Hajee, and his ostensible appointment of Mr. Wilson to the office of his personal surgeon, were the acts of his free will, uninfluenced by any suggestion on my part or even by a wish for my gratification.

Another cause of the delay, which candour impels me to acknowledge, has proceeded from a natural desire, that the final decision in this country, on a question of such importance to my character, should involve the collective opinion of all the members of the Government, as well as its illustrious head, whose perfect confidence and good opinion, though I have laboured assiduously to acquire them by the strictest obedience to his commands, have hitherto, I am sorry to think, been refused to my ardent wishes, in consequence of some unhappy prepossessions which it is the object of this narrative to remove.

It occurs to me, on the present occasion, to submit my humble request, that in the case of the failure of this narrative to produce in the minds of the Government that conviction which it seems calculated to inspire, the narrative and all the documents which it refers to be transmitted to the Honourable the Court of Directors, for the purpose of enabling that Court to form a judgment on the merits of my conduct in the arduous and important situation in which the Court was pleased to confirm me as a reward for my former services, and the duties of which I have discharged, during a period of eight years and upwards, to the best of my judgment and ability, with integrity, zeal, and success.

Minute of
Governor-General,
31 Oct. 1815.

The statement which I verbally made in Council to my colleagues, that my feelings could never allow me to hold confidential intercourse with Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie after perusing the document which has just been circulated, will have prepared them to expect from me a proposition for his removal from the Residency of Lucknow. Indeed I think my colleagues must be sensible that the general tone of the paper, even without considering the incorrectness of narration, is so offensive, as to render it wholly unfit for me to continue him as my representative at the Court of Oude. I therefore propose that the powers of Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie as Resident be withdrawn, that he be ordered to leave the dominions of the Nawaub Vizier as soon as the necessary preparations for his departure can be completed, and that Richard Strachey, Esq., be transferred from the situation of Resident at the Court of Dowlut Rao Scindiah to that of Resident at Lucknow. Should the health of Mr. Strachey not permit him to take immediate charge of his destined office, I move that the Honourable Edward Gardner be summoned from Kemaon to conduct temporarily the business of Oude.

Minute,
31 Oct. 1815.

The Governor-General having been pleased to propose the removal of Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie from the office of Resident at Lucknow, on the grounds distinctly stated in his Lordship's minute, we beg leave to express our unqualified concurrence in that measure. It is impossible, indeed, to refuse our assent to the expediency of Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie's relinquishment of the situation of Resident at Lucknow. Residents at foreign Courts are considered by those Courts as the representatives of the Governor-General; and such, in fact, they are, since by the nature of his office, the Governor-General takes the lead in the conduct of political affairs, corresponds individually with the princes and chiefs to whom the Residents are accredited, and is the ostensible authority with which foreign States are connected. It is therefore indispensably requisite, that the Residents at foreign Courts should possess the entire confidence of the Governor-General, and it is impossible not to admit that the mere existence of a state of circumstances such as is most unhappily exhibited in the narrative of Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie independently of any consideration whatever connected with the character of his conduct, or the tone and language of his narrative, renders it impracticable to continue, through his agency, the transaction of affairs between the Government and the Court of Lucknow.

On the grounds stated by Mr. Edmonstone and Mr. Dowdeswell, I perfectly agree in opinion with those gentlemen, that the office of Political Resident can neither be held with propriety, nor the functions thereof be discharged with efficiency or with benefit to the public interests, by a person who does not possess the full confidence of the Governor-General; and as it is evident from the Right Honourable the Governor-General's minute of this date, that Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie, whose letter of the 29th of April I have been unable to peruse without a feeling of astonishment and of painful regret, has lost that confidence, I beg leave to express my entire concurrence in the expediency of the arrangement proposed by his Lordship.

Sir :

1. I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 29th April.

2. You will hereafter receive a communication on the subject of your despatch. For the present, I am instructed to state, that the tone and spirit which pervade that document, render it impracticable for the Governor-General to maintain with you that confidential intercourse, which the good of the public service requires should subsist between the head of the Government and his representative at the Court of a foreign prince. The Governor-General in Council has therefore thought proper to remove you from the office of Resident at Lucknow, and to desire that you will withdraw from that Court as soon after you shall be relieved from the duties of the office as may be consistent with your personal accommodation.

3. His Lordship in Council has been pleased to appoint Mr. Richard Strachey to be Resident at Lucknow, and you will deliver over charge of the office to Mr. Strachey on his arrival.

4. You will receive from the Persian Secretary a letter addressed to his Excellency the Vizier by the Governor-General, announcing the arrangement above stated, and you will be pleased to convey it to his Excellency, either personally, or in such other mode as you may deem advisable. An English copy of that letter is enclosed for your information.

To His Excellency the Vizier. (Written the 31st October 1815.)

A necessity having arisen for relieving Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie from the office of Resident at your Excellency's Court on the part of the British Government, I have the honour to inform your Excellency that I have appointed Mr. Richard Strachey, a gentleman of rank and distinguished reputation in the civil service of the Honourable Company, to succeed Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie.

Mr. Strachey has represented the British Government at the Court of Dowlat Rao Scindiah for some years past, and has given me entire satisfaction in that capacity; and my selection of him for the honourable and confidential office of Resident at your Excellency's Court is founded on my experience of his ability, judgment, and personal disposition, which warrants a firm expectation that his ministry will conduce equally to the personal satisfaction of your Excellency, to the advantage of your Government in all points on which you may be pleased to consult him, and to the consolidation and improvement of the combined interests of the two States. Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie will have the honour of taking leave of your Excellency as soon after Mr. Strachey's arrival at Lucknow as may be consistent with his personal convenience.

Letter from Acting Resident at Lucknow.

Sir :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 31st ultimo, announcing my removal from the station of Resident at the Court of Lucknow, and containing an English copy of a letter addressed by his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General to his Excellency the Vizier on that occasion. The original Persian letter, under his Lordship's signature and seal, was received from the Persian department on the 11th instant, and I had the honour of presenting it to the Vizier at the Residency on the morning of the 14th instant.

2. I have this day received from his Excellency, and transmitted to the Persian Secretary, an answer to the Governor-General's letter, conceived in terms that are gratifying to my feelings, because I am satisfied, and indeed it must be obvious, that the Vizer's expressions with a reference to me, on this occasion, are genuine, and convey the real sentiments of his Excellency's mind. He has my best wishes for the honour and prosperity of his Government, and for his personal welfare and happiness.

3. I await with considerable anxiety the arrival of my successor at this Court, and I propose proceeding to the Presidency by water immediately on my being relieved. It is my intention, with the sanction of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, to embark for England, on furlough, by the first opportunity that may offer after my arrival at the Presidency.

Letter
from the Vizier.

I have had the honour to receive your Lordship's letter of the 31st October, announcing to me the recall of Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie from the office of Resident at my Court, and the appointment of Mr Richard Strachey to that situation, and stating that your Lordship's selection of Mr. Strachey was founded on your experience of that gentleman's ability, judgment, and disposition, which lead you confidently to expect that he will discharge the duties of his office in such a manner as will conduce to my personal satisfaction, to the benefit of my Government in all matters, and to the advancement of the interests of the two States.

Ever since the day of my accession to the musnud of this Government and to the hereditary Vezārut, Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie has, in obedience to your Lordship's commands, and in consonance with your sincere kindness and regard, exerted himself to the utmost to promote my personal satisfaction. He has, at the same time, been active and sedulous in affording me his aid in important affairs, and has benefited my interests by his judicious advice, whenever I have had occasion to consult him; his departure is therefore a source of concern and regret to me. I am consoled, however, by the assurance which I feel of your Lordship's sincere regard, at all times and under all circumstances; and by the conviction that Mr. Strachey, both from a consideration of the ties which, as is well known to the whole world, have from of old united the two States so firmly as to occasion an absolute identity, and also in conformity with the extreme kind-

This will always tend to strengthen the foundation of the friendship and alliance between the two States and to raise your Lordship's reputation.

(Enclosure No. 1. in Bengal Political Letter, dated 30th March 1816.)

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S MINUTE.

1. I now proceed to lay before the Board the review of the affairs of Oude, which I expressed an intention of submitting in the minute I recorded on the 3d November last. The more imperious urgency of many of the questions we have lately had before us has alone occasioned the delay which has occurred in digesting my sentiments in this form.

2. I shall premise what may be necessary to the full explanation of the course I have all along pursued towards the Court of his Excellency the Nawab Vizier and towards our representative there, in order to guard the Honourable Court of Directors against admitting the impressions which the late Resident's letter of the 28th of April last is calculated to excite.

3. It is very irksome (because it is the task of unravelling the most singular tissue of perversions I have ever had the surprise of scrutinizing) to undertake following Major Baillie through the windings of his invariably incorrect representation. The duty is, however, incumbent on me; because, notwithstanding the shallow and exploded artifice of disclaiming the imputation which the narrative is framed to convey, the object of Major Baillie is visibly to fix upon me the charge of having endeavoured to defeat, by my countenance of underhand intrigues, those measures which I had publicly commissioned him to carry through. That course would have been a whimsical procedure for a person who had only to make the Political Secretary abrogate former instructions, or intimate to Major Baillie his exchange to another Court, or announce to him his removal from the diplomatic line altogether, had any inclination existed to stop what was in progress.

4. It was in the beginning of October 1813 that I arrived in Bengal and took upon myself the charge of this Government. The differences which had for the three preceding years subsisted between Major Baillie and his Excellency the late Vizier, and which had at times been productive of a discreditable acrimony during that period, seemed to have subsided in a reconciliation effected shortly before my arrival, and the harmony was at the time held forth to Government as affording the promise of being lasting. The hope was however delusive. The first occasion of my being called upon to take a part in the affairs of Lucknow was upon Major Baillie's representing that the good understanding he thought had been established between himself and the late Vizier was again interrupted, and that the latter had evinced a disposition to retract the concessions on his part, by which chiefly it had been brought about. The concessions were said principally to have related to the scheme of reform in his Excellency's administration, the introduction of which our Government had long endeavoured to obtain, and to which, on the occasion of the reconciliation, his Excellency was said to have consented. This reference imposed on me the labour of perusing the records of all the discussions which had antecedently taken place on the subject; and I was, of course, led to consider the whole case with peculiar attention. The Board will recollect the proceeding I adopted in consequence, and cannot but have been sensible of the motives which influenced me at the time. Major Baillie was in the situation of Minister of the British Government, and even more immediately in that of my personal representative at the Court of Oudg.

Oude. I naturally felt disposed to afford him that high degree of confidence which the finding him in such a position was calculated to inspire, and was inclined therefore to receive my impressions with respect to the Vizier's conduct implicitly from his representation. Of the expediency, or otherwise, of the specific scheme of reform in question, I was at the time no competent judge: I knew nothing of it, except that it had been apparently an object of earnest solicitude with my predecessor in the Supreme Government to procure its introduction. I thence entered warmly into the same feelings, and in deference to the correctness of that judgment, for which I have always entertained the highest respect, conceived the measure must be one of obvious wisdom, offering a certain promise of the most solid benefits to his Excellency's dominions. I was, therefore, disposed to regard the evasive opposition which the late Vizier was said to have evinced as indicative of a perverse disposition to resist systematically the salutary counsels of the British Government, and to play loose with its agent, in a manner requiring to be repressed by a strong exertion of our authority. I accordingly drafted, with my own hand, a letter to his Excellency,* couched in terms of all the strength which such sentiments could be expected to demand, and warning him with peculiar solemnity of the destruction he might entail upon himself, by continuing to depart so contumaciously from his engagements.

5. The apparently candid answer of the late Vizier to this letter, and the nature of some of the discussions which took place upon it between his Excellency and the Resident, did, I must confess, occasion a slight revolution in my sentiments. I began to feel that I could not, in justice to his Excellency, abide implicitly by what Major Baillie, under evident impression of pique, might represent, but that, in the differences which might occur between them, it would be requisite I should consider myself placed as it were in the situation of arbiter, regarding Major Baillie only as a party. The Board will recollect, that even then I did not find reason to be fully satisfied of the uniform delicacy and propriety of Major Baillie's conduct towards his Excellency. His behaviour did not appear to me to be of that mild conciliatory cast, which would have left his Excellency without excuse for the animosity he seemed to entertain. On the contrary, I thought I observed, even in Major Baillie's own reports of what passed between his Excellency and himself, a captious disposition and a domineering tone, of themselves highly calculated to excite irritation in a prince, whose situation would naturally render him acutely jealous of his independence.

6. On my professing this sentiment, it received powerful confirmation from an assertion made to me by a person of high authority, as to what he had witnessed on the spot of the reciprocal bitterness existing between the Nawaub Vizier and the Resident.

7. Feeling, therefore, that his Excellency's ill temper towards Major Baillie was not entirely without provocation, and being sensible that the British interests at his Excellency's Court must suffer from this mutual animosity, I even at that moment entered into communication with Mr. Edmonstone upon the propriety of endeavouring to obviate the inconvenience resulting from the existing state of things by removing Major Baillie to some other Residency of equally high consideration, and thus, by an exchange honourable and not disadvantageous to him in any point of view, seeking to introduce to his Excellency's councils a representative of our interests, in whose intercourse with his Excellency a good understanding, if not a personal friendship, might prevail. I was dissuaded from the immediate adoption of this course, not by any arguments affecting its propriety, but from a consideration that the period of my departure for the Upper Provinces was not far distant, and that I should then have an opportunity of satisfying myself more fully, by personal observation, of the state of the differences between the parties, so that, in the event of my finding them entirely irreconcilable, I might take such measures as at the moment I should conceive most advisable.

8. Influenced by the above conviction, I directed the Resident to refrain, in the interim from further pressing upon his Excellency those irritating topics of discussion which seemed sure to inflame the existing differences; and I addressed a letter to his Excellency in a strain more conciliatory than the former. The letter alluded to was that of the 25th of March, sent through the ordinary channel of the Resident. In this I signified to his Excellency that our Government never wished to impose any requisitions inconsistent with his dignity; that we had recommended a specific system of management, because its efficacy had been proved in the Honourable Company's territories, but that we could not desire to enforce on his Excellency the precise plan in question, if he thought it injurious to his credit, as all that was required was an essential, practical reform. His Excellency was requested to fashion a plan accordingly, in concert with the Resident.

9. Things were in this state when I left the Presidency, in the prosecution of my intention of making a tour through the Western Provinces. His Excellency the late Vizier died while I was on the river between Moorshedabad and Patna, an event which seemed to supersede the necessity of any particular interference in the affairs of Oude, since whatever discord existed was thought by me to have been only personal with the late Vizier and extinguished by his demise.

10. Major Baillie, in his letter of the 28th April last, attempts to account for the animosity towards himself evinced by the late Vizier, by tracing both the original differences, and the rupture subsequent to the reconciliation of the 2d October 1813, to the intrigues of men, enemies to him individually as well as hostile to the British interests in general. He naturally throws out of the account the possibility that his own conduct and behaviour should ever have given cause of offence, or that any opposition to his suggestions and propositions should have proceeded from his Excellency's conceiving them objectionable on public grounds. If the Vizier ceased to exhibit marks of personal confidence towards Major Baillie, it is because Hukeem Mehdee and his coadjutors had succeeded in exciting in his Excellency's breast suspicions with regard to Major Baillie's motives. If a measure recommended by him was opposed by his Excellency, though even one so speculative and so open to a difference of opinion as the change of a system of Government, it is held impossible the opposition should have originated in the Vizier's having really entertained contrary sentiments, or in his not being convinced by the arguments adduced. The whole is traced to some one's having poisoned his Excellency's mind, and made him suspect the object of the measure to be different from what was represented. There is, indeed, apparent in the whole of Major Baillie's reasoning, an obliquity of mind which makes him overlook the most natural mode of accounting for every thing in search of a hidden cause, frequently grounded on nothing but the most vague and inconclusive surmise. Where it is possible to assign a perverse motive, a justifiable one, though much more obvious, is passed over as wholly inapplicable.

11. This disposition has led him into many inconsistencies, which, in order to my placing before the Council my own view of the events he relates, it will be necessary to expose in part.

12. Great parade is made by Major Baillie of his perfect acquaintance with the language and forms of conversation and writing in use amongst the higher classes of natives. He would leave it to be inferred from this, that his manners were necessarily conciliatory; and would have us suppose, that by means of such personal advantages, he had succeeded in exciting in his Excellency's breast an unusual degree of attachment towards himself. It may have been so; but the same colloquial and epistolary facility by which he supposes he may have been enabled to excite this attachment, might also have been the source of offence. Every communication between Major Baillie and the late Vizier would seem to have been direct, and generally to have been conducted in an interview from which others were excluded; each conference must therefore have made its own impression. The reliance of Major Baillie on his correct possession of a polished idiom was likely to betray him beyond the exact line of established usage, usage, and it is ridiculous to trace to any subsequent suggestions of other feelings of his Excellency's mind, which so much more probably resulted from the manner or matter of these direct communications. Indeed, from the nature of the late Vizier's character, there is reason to believe that in the conduct of business, and especially of affairs having relation to his connection with the British Government, he acted almost entirely upon his own judgment, and lent his confidence to no one so implicitly, as the supposition that the disagreement with the Resident arose from the under-hand influence of his advisers would imply. Unless, therefore, some very satisfactory reasons should be adduced, I confess I should not readily entertain the supposition of such secret influence, or abandon the suspicion I formed, even before leaving the Presidency, with respect to the cause of these differences, viz. that there must have been in the communications of Major Baillie something of style or matter to have given grounds for his Excellency's personal dislike.

13. Let us, however, examine the nature of the arguments adduced in support of Major Baillie's assertion, that the late Vizier's disagreement with him originated in intrigue. The principal one is, the high degree of confidence, he alleges he experienced from his Excellency, prior to the introduction to his councils of those whom he suspects to have undermined it. If this were the case, it would undoubtedly be a very strong circumstance. I have been induced to look back a little into the proceedings of the time, in order to see if the assertion be borne out by them. I confess I am not satisfied upon this point.

14. I have not found that Major Baillie's influence was paramount with his Excellency before the introduction to his councils of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, the supposed author and head of the intrigue, any more than subsequently to that event. This person is admitted to have had no influence before the latter end of 1810; but long before that period, indeed even from so early a date as 1808, many questions had arisen between the Resident and his Excellency, in which, notwithstanding the frequent exertion of the most earnest solicitation, the acquiescence of the latter could never be obtained. The claims preferred by Major Baillie in behalf of his own Moonshee were of this description; so also were those in behalf of Hoosein Alee Khan and some of his Excellency's defaulting Aumils. Indeed, many similar cases of disregard to the Resident's entreaties might be adduced, which occurred long before Hukeem Mehdee was called to the Presence.

15. I do not wish, however, to go beyond the question of reform, to which, in his letter of the 28th of April, Major Baillie appears studiously to have confined his remarks; as if desirous to show that his efforts in favour of this measure had been the sole cause of his Excellency's froward opposition, because it was the one most immediately of a public nature, and in which Government had the dearest interest.

16. It would appear, that the specific plan of reform respecting which there was so much altercation, was proposed to his Excellency at the beginning of 1810. Very long and warm discussions took place even at that time, although Hukeem Mehdee did not obtain influence till some time after.* Indeed, at the period of those discussions he would appear to have been in high favour with the Resident; insomuch that, besides having recently obtained, by his recommendation, an important revenue situation, he was specially recommended for further promotion; nay, even in the course of the discussions in question, his exemplary conduct was quoted as an argument in favour of the Resident's having a voice in future appointments. If, therefore, the discussions on his Excellency's part were then conducted in the same spirit as those from which the personal enmity and perversely hostile disposition are inferred; if his Excellency shewed himself impressed with the same sentiments at that time as are said to have occasioned his subsequent breach with the Resident, Hukeem Mehdee, or any intrigues he could have formed, may fairly be acquitted of having having inspired his Excellency with such propensities, this person's imputed influence being acknowledged to have commenced subsequently.

17. I have referred with particular care to the former proceedings,* in which the Resident's report of what passed on that occasion is recorded, in order to satisfy myself on this point.

18. In Major Baillie's letter of the 28th of April last, the Vizier's invincible opposition to the plan of reform, and his personal animosity against himself, are attributed to a suspicion Hukeem Mehdee Khan is said to have instilled into his Excellency's mind, that Major Baillie was seeking personal objects in urging the immediate introduction of the reform, and was endeavouring by its means to establish his own authority in the affairs of Oude, and to increase his own patronage and reputation. The question therefore is, whether in the discussions prior to the establishment of Hukeem Mehdee's influence, did his Excellency shew that he entertained a similar suspicion; for if there be reason to suppose he did, such an instance can be in no way attributable to this man's influence, but must have been the offspring of his Excellency's own mind, resulting from the impressions left by the manner or nature of the Resident's own communications.

19. In order to determine this, let us look to the ground on which his Excellency then opposed what was suggested. The scheme of reform enjoined to his Excellency in a letter direct from the Governor-General was shortly this: Instead of farming districts to Aumils, as had been the practice heretofore, it was recommended to his Excellency to appoint officers of Government to ascertain the actual assets and resources of the country, and to conclude mofussil settlements on the part of Government directly with the Zemindars. The salaries of the officers were to be placed on a scale proportionate with their responsibility. This was all our Government recommended for the detail. His Excellency was referred to the Resident. The Vizier objected generally to the plan, that he knew of no satisfactory mode of ascertaining the assets of every estate in his territories; nor was there any class of men whom he could trust with the responsibility of making mofussil settlements, for that he was without the means of ascertaining precisely the characters and qualities of men. At all events, his Excellency urged, the new system could not be commenced upon until the periods of his existing engagements with the farmers might expire.

20. The Resident undertook to rebut these objections, stating that the mofussil assets were to be ascertained by a sufficient number of officers established so as to check one another. For this purpose he recommended Ameens for Zillahs with Tuhseeldars under them for portions of territory yielding a lac of rupees. With respect to the want of persons to fill such offices, he said he was ready to furnish them. "Many able and upright men are to be found, and I will cheerfully take it upon myself to procure as many as may be necessary."

21. The Resident remonstrated against delaying the introduction of the reform until the existing engagements might expire, in the following words: "Having originally remonstrated against these engagements with the farmers, having repeatedly and earnestly represented to your Excellency the ruinous consequences they would produce, and the failure of my representations having occasioned the Governor-General's remonstrance on the subject, it follows, that your Excellency's ~~consignment~~ ^{commitment} of those muhals, under the engagements now referred to, was in direct opposition to my advice and to the counsels of the British Government; and consequently, that your Excellency's adherence to those engagements, or refusal to comply with my suggestions of reform on the grounds of them, would imply, which God forbid, a departure from your engagements with our Government. I leave it to

22. To such a supersession of his existing engagements, as well as to allowing the Resident to have a voice in the appointment of his Ameens (a privilege which he distinctly claimed),† the Vizier, as may well be surmised objected strongly; and notwithstanding that Major Baillie, in order to subdue the repugnance testified by the Vizier, proceeded to the adoption of a tone of remonstrance bordering on absolute rudeness, still his Excellency's acquiescence was not to be obtained. Both these points were therefore made the subject of a reference to the Supreme Government. The Resident writing to his Excellency: “ With reference to the selection and appointment of Ameens with my previous knowledge and concurrence, as your Excellency has been pleased to resist my earnest and repeated suggestions of the propriety and eminent advantages of this truly salutary measure, it only remains for me to suggest, that your Excellency will detail the grounds of your dissent to this important proposition, in the answer to the Governor-General's letter or in a letter to myself.”

23. Here we see a direct struggle on the part of the Resident for a share of the patronage. We see his Excellency resisting it, obviously because he considered it in that light. Indeed, his argument was, that the allowing a voice to the Resident would tend to the ruin of his own authority and character in the eyes of his subjects, while officers not exclusively indebted to himself for their appointments would not exclusively obey or look up to himself. It must be evident from the Vizier's assuming such a ground of argument, that he then entertained suspicions that it was Major Baillie's wish to interfere with his authority, and establish a more direct influence in the administration of the affairs of Oude than had yet been effected by any British representative at his Court. The opinion that it was a personal object of Major Baillie's, must necessarily have been confirmed by the result of the reference to our Government of the two subjects of difference above noticed. Such a conclusion must have been the natural result of his Excellency's observing, that on neither point did Major Baillie meet the support of the Government he represented.

24. On the above grounds I think it may very safely be assumed, that his Excellency's suspicion of the interested nature of Major Baillie's views, in pressing upon him with such eagerness the immediate introduction of the plan of reform, was antecedent to the establishment of Hukeem Mehdee's influence, and consequently not attributable to any intrigues he could have set on foot. A reference to the same proceedings which have afforded the grounds of this conclusion will exhibit, even in the Resident's own report of the nature of his communications, much which is calculated to excite offence; and further, will afford good reason to believe that his Excellency the late Vizier was, even at that period, not free from the unfavourable impression. I cannot, therefore, but consider the causes to which Major Baillie has, in his letter of the 28th of April, endeavoured to trace his disagreement with the Vizier, to be in direct contradiction to what the past proceedings exhibit, consequently destitute of any satisfactory presumption. The more full consideration of the question which has now been forced upon me by the nature of the assertions advanced in the narrative in question,

* The Vizier returned the paper from which this is an extract, with an earnest request that the imputation here conveyed, of a breach of engagements with our Government, might be withdrawn. It was sent back with this word “ and ” changed into “ or in other words.” After the Vizier had replied to the paper a conference followed, the opening of which is thus reported: “ I commenced the discussions of his replies to my observations with an expression of my sincere regret for having consented, at his earnest request, to withdraw the imputation of a breach of engagements conveyed on most obvious grounds.” (These surely were not the conciliatory manners which produced the personal attachment to Major Baillie.)

† In a note delivered in the course of these discussions, Major Baillie writes: “ Be pleased to inform me of the names and characters, as far as known to you, of the persons thus to be employed (as Ameens) in offices of so high importance, that I also may endeavour to investigate their character, and submit my opinion for your consideration, after which let them be ordered to their districts, under written instructions for their guidance, a draft of which I shall have the honour of submitting for your approval.”

question, has only confirmed me in the opinion I originally and have all along entertained, viz. that his Excellency's animosity against Major Baillie was attributable entirely to the latter's manners and conduct, and was the spontaneous impulse of his Excellency's own mind.

25. I have conceived it of importance to dwell so long upon this point, because the existence of this intrigue of Hukeem Mehdee is the keystone of Major Baillie's exposition. The late Vizier's original disagreement is not the only effect which is traced to it. The rupture subsequent to the reconciliation is attributed chiefly to the same cause; so also is the disposition his Excellency the present Vizier testified to complain that his situation was attended with circumstances of humiliation heaped upon him by Major Baillie.

26. The truth probably is, that Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan had the sagacity to see that the distaste of the late Nawaub Vizier to Major Baillie was vehement and unalterable; that he thence calculated his chances, under the patronage of the Resident, to be unpromising; that he consequently deserted Major Baillie to connect himself with the Vizier; and that he endeavoured to expiate his former attachments, as well as to ingratiate himself with the Nawaub Vizier, by echoing his Excellency's complaints and whetting his jealousies, in which sense I believe him to have been mischievous. It will be easily conceived, that Major Baillie would be inveterate against an individual who had so changed sides, and would soon urge the man into active virulence.

27. Nothing further need be said respecting the original disagreement. As far, also, as the rupture subsequent to the reconciliation was only a revival in his Excellency's mind of the same sentiments he had before entertained, it palpably must be attributable to the same causes, and his Excellency may fairly be acquitted of having received the impression from the private whisperings of malicious counsellors. This rupture, however, dates its commencement from the period of my arrival in the country; and there are other circumstances represented to have contributed to produce it, in which I am myself more personally concerned. The first to be noticed is, his Excellency's having speculated on the probability of a change of measures in consequence of a change in the head of the Government.

28. There is a peculiar inconsistency in the mode in which this circumstance is adduced. On the occasion of reconciliation, his Excellency is represented to have been brought to consent to a trial of the reform suggested. He receded from the concession because he hoped I should not press it, conceiving it probable that I might have different views with respect to Oude from those of my predecessors in the Supreme Government. This, I presume, is what Major Baillie would say.

29. My appointment to succeed the Earl of Minto was notified to the Nawaub Vizier in a letter dated the 2d July: the reconciliation took place on the 2d of October. By that time my coming was universally known, as my approach was notified from the Isle of France and I was daily expected. Indeed, my being actually at Madras could not well have failed to be then public at Lucknow. I arrived on the 4th of the month. There was thus ample time for every enquiry to have been made, and for speculations to have been conceived and brought to a maturity of influence on the mind, long before the day of reconciliation. The late Vizier is said to have been remarkably prone to entertain such speculations. They are said to have had weight enough to have produced a retraction of what had been unwillingly conceded on his part; but they do not appear to have had sufficient weight to prevent the concessions being made. How is it they were not then entertained? For three successive years his Excellency had resisted the utmost earnestness of solicitation and remonstrance, not only from the Resident but even from the Governor-General direct, and had obstinately refused to adopt the measure recommended. Had his Excellency calculated that the solicitation and remonstrances would cease with the authority of the Governor-General under whom the measure had originated, it is not probable that he would have made choice of the very eve of the arrival of a new Governor-General, and of the expected accomplishment of his hopes, to relax in his opposition and to make unwilling concessions. On the contrary, if his Excellency entertained such speculations as are ascribed to him, they must have afforded encouragement to continue the resistance, at least until he could ascertain whether the hopes of change were well-founded or not.* I myself, however, can see no reason to suppose speculations were entertained at all, or had any influence on his Excellency's conduct. A reference to the Resident's report of the conference which ended in the reconciliation, will sufficiently shew in what manner it was brought about. The concessions were on the part of the Resident, who lowered his tone, and explained away the obnoxious features of his former propositions, which were all that had occasioned the resistance. The subsequent rupture was obviously the consequence of the revival, on his part, of pretensions similar to those he before abandoned. The Vizier was consistent in his opposition to every thing he thought calculated to lower his dignity, lessen his authority, or affect his character in the eyes of his subjects.

30. There is, however, another cause assigned in the letter of the 28th April for the renewed opposition of the late Vizier, and deduced from a series of inferences and circumstances, in some of which Major Baillie endeavours to implicate me, in a manner which it behoves me to repel with peculiar distinctness. Captain McLeod is represented as having become a party to Hukeem Mehdee's intrigues, and as having come down to the Presidency shortly after my arrival in the country, with the view of forwarding their object. A separate native branch of the same intrigue is further represented as being at work in Calcutta, and it is said to have been in consequence of assurances of my views conveyed to the late Vizier directly from myself, through such channels, that his Excellency was encouraged to renew his opposition to Major Baillie's suggestion, from a conviction that he would eventually meet support from the Supreme Authority.

31. I shall first remark the singular inconsistency of the whole of this assumption before I proceed to expose the distortion of fact, and the false reasoning from which it is deduced.

32. The rupture took place almost immediately after my arrival in the country. These intrigues could scarcely have been in being at its commencement, much less could they have arrived at a maturity sufficient to have been the cause of it. It is evidently absurd to attribute the renewed disagreement to the effects of their success, in ascertaining my real sentiments on a subject completely novel to me, and not to be comprehended without the perusal of voluminous documents wholly out of the compass of my time, while I was to put myself in possession of so many more urgent informations; and it is still more extravagant to suppose the machinations so advanced, as that they had succeeded in procuring a communication or assurance of those sentiments to his Excellency. My first act of interference with respect to Oude was, as I said before, on the occasion of a representation on the subject of this very rupture after its occurrence. The Council will recollect the spirit in which the letter and orders I then myself drafted were conceived. Those, at least, were not calculated to offer any encouragement to opposition on the part of his Excellency, for the special object of my letter was to overcome and bear down by my personal weight the repugnance which had been testified, as will appear from the very natural and convincing explanation of the Nawaub Vizier in answer to that letter. The fresh dissensions arose from Major Baillie's insisting upon a construction of the agreement different from the understanding in which his Excellency had contracted it, the former maintaining that the Nawaub Vizier was pledged to introduce the new system through every part of his dominions at once, the latter asserting that he had only engaged to extend it gradually. Major Baillie's inference, however, is, that this demur was resorted to because his Excellency was receiving, through other channels, encouraging assurances of my having no wish to carry the measure. In other words, that I myself was secretly fostering opposition to what I was publicly enforcing with the whole weight of my authority, a species of duplicity which would have been, in my situation, no less childishly unnecessary, than it would have been despicable.

33. If,

33. If, however, this subject be viewed dispassionately, the natural conclusion is, that the intrigues, if they had existence, owed their origin to the Nawab Vizier's preconceived jealousy of Major Baillie's grasping disposition, and his Excellency's natural wish to ascertain if what he objected to was a personal object of Major Baillie's own, or one in the eagerness to carry which his Government participated. There must have been a previous dissatisfaction in his Excellency's mind before he could have countenanced the intrigues; for the intrigues themselves, though they might have been the effect, could not have been the cause of this discontent.

34. Let us, however, examine the circumstances from which Major Baillie draws the inference, that an assurance of my disposition to abandon the reform must have been communicated to his Excellency through one of two channels; either through Major McLeod, or through the native agent of Hukeem Mehdee.

35. Captain McLeod left Lucknow for the purpose of bringing his children to the Presidency, very soon, indeed almost immediately, after the reconciliation of the 2d of October. He arrived at the Presidency early in November. The late Vizier had availed himself of this occasion (perhaps from an idea that Captain McLeod possessed an introduction and consequently the means of conversation with myself) to open his mind a little with respect to his situation with Major Baillie, and to request Captain McLeod to make known his distresses to me, and to endeavour to ascertain what were the real objects of the British Government, which he had reason to suspect did not go so far as Major Baillie was pushing them in his communications. Captain McLeod, influenced, as I firmly believe, by the mere impression that the kindness and attention he had uniformly experienced from his Excellency required of him not to disoblige him by the refusal of such a request, undertook generally to endeavour to ascertain my sentiments if any opportunity should offer.

36. Such was the nature of what Major Baillie calls the deputation of Captain McLeod. He endeavours to prove, that the conversation with which it commenced must have occurred before the reconciliation; because he wishes to represent this as complete, and presumes that as Hukeem Mehdee was banished the Presence on its occurrence, his Excellency could not have had an inducement to pursue such a course, when not instigated by his counsels. The inference, however, is entirely without grounds, and is contradicted by the fact of Captain McLeod's having been present at the reconciliation, whereas the conversation occurred as he was taking his final leave, which it can only be presumed was the last occasion of his seeing his Excellency. Its being subsequent, in this manner, is only a further proof, that his Excellency's suspicions of the Resident were not entirely removed by the reconciliation, and that they were the feelings of his own mind, and not dictated by any advisers.

37. There is another inference drawn by Major Baillie, in this part of his narrative, from equally insufficient grounds, and which is equally at variance with the time and circumstances of the conversation alluded to. It is assumed that Captain McLeod was a party to the intrigues which Hukeem Mehdee was then said to be carrying on, and that he was a coadjutor and emissary of the Hukeem's while at Calcutta. I sincerely believe the inference to be without a particle of foundation, and cannot discover, even in the circumstances adduced by Major Baillie, the slightest reason to entertain most distantly a conception so injurious to that officer's character. We must dismiss it as one of those vague and unjustifiable imputations abounding in the narrative in question, but from which we can only extract cause to lament the strange proneness of Major Baillie to miserable suspicions.

38. But to proceed. The following are the grounds for Major Baillie's inference: that his Excellency's renewed opposition must have been occasioned by some communication from Captain McLeod, conveying an assurance of his Excellency's being eventually supported by myself. Considering the important nature of the deputation, Major Baillie argues, it is impossible to suppose that no communication took place. Now Captain McLeod reached Calcutta early in November, Hukeem Mehdee was recalled about the end of the month, and the renewed renewed opposition began to shew itself about the 13th December, between which period and the date of Captain McLeod's arrival there was abundance of time for such a communication to have taken place. This is really the only argument in favour of the inference I can discover in the whole narrative. On this frivolous ground, which resolves itself into Major Baillie's gratuitous idea of the importance of the mission, has this individual ventured to assume that there was a communication, and to accuse Captain McLeod of dissimulation, in suppressing the mention of it from the narrative of the same transactions he presented to me at Lucknow.

39. Still it might be asserted, that though not through Captain McLeod, the communication of my sentiments may have been conveyed through other channels, so as to produce the same effect. I never myself heard any mention of Hukeem Mehdee's native emissary, and consider the idle stories of Major Baillie's news-writers much too ridiculous to deserve notice. The most conclusive evidence of the impossibility of there having been any communication of the nature imagined, which could have instigated his Excellency to renew the opposition he began to shew about the middle of December, is the certainty that I at that moment entertained and proclaimed sentiments exactly contrary to those attributed to me. It was on the 7th of January that I drafted, with my own hand, a letter direct to his Excellency,* dictated in as high a spirit of confidence towards the Resident, and with as strong a wish to enforce the reform, as it was possible for a person in my situation to exhibit. How, then, could the contrary have been conveyed to his Excellency in December, with an assurance of its being my ascertained opinion on the subject? The whole idea of this communication may be dismissed as having been an indecent indulgence of fancy on the part of Major Baillie.

40. There is one circumstance relative to this period, on which it is necessary for me to make a remark; though I profess that I do so with reluctance, as let me be ever so measured in terms, the exposition must bear harder on Major Baillie than I could wish. I mentioned cursorily to Major Baillie at Cawnpore, that I had received one letter from the Nawaub Vizier through a private channel without its having been previously communicated to him. When I told him the circumstance, I am positive I did so in such a manner that he could not misapprehend the individual, if I did not actually state the person. The letter was one from the late Vizier, which Lady Hood transmitted to me. Though it was stated to be only a complimentary profession of the satisfaction which the Vizier had experienced in an opportunity of showing attention to a lady for whom he thought me interested, I nevertheless remonstrated with Lady Hood, by letter, for having forwarded even such a paper in breach of the regulation, which requires all communications from foreign Princes to go through the Residents at the respective Courts.

41. The circumstance was mentioned by me to Major Baillie, that he might be confident no indirect correspondence would ever be allowed by me; and he was at the same time pointedly informed of the insignificant purport of the letter in question.

42. To this letter, so explained to him, Major Baillie endeavours to attach an air of deep importance. He is gracious enough to say, that "although Lord Moira did me the honour to mention at Cawnpore that his Lordship had received and answered one letter from the Vizier conveyed through an irregular channel, and unknown to me at the time, yet it is quite incredible that the abolition (as the Vizier terms it) or the abandonment of the objects of reform on the part of the British Government should have formed the subject of a direct communication from the Governor-General to the Vizier." The quality of that attempt at suggesting a suspicion that the communication was political, when he (Major Baillie) knew its real purport, shall not be more minutely observed upon by me. All comment is superfluous.

43. Relatively to this circumstance, I misled Major Baillie in one respect. In telling him that I had received a letter from Snadut Alee I necessarily gave him to conclude that the letter was addressed to myself; and I really believed it had been so, till a refusal of a letter from Lady Hood on the subject has undeceived undeceived me. It was a letter from the Nawaub Vizier to her Ladyship. She understood that it referred to me; and not having immediate means of getting it translated, she forwarded it to me, with an explanation of her reason for doing so. I sent it back to her, not only untranslated, but so completely unexamined as that I had not even looked at the superscription, and thence remained impressed with the notion of its having been meant for me. It will, of course, appear that Major Baillie is in error, when he conceives I told him I had answered the Vizier's letter, as it would be difficult to answer a letter the contents of which were totally unknown. There was in this no intentional or conscious inaccuracy on the part of Major Baillie. It was natural for him to imagine that I must have answered a letter received from the Nawaub Vizier; but his persuasion of my having told him I had done so, proves how easily his mind converted loose suppositions into fixed belief.

44. Great stress is affectedly laid by Major Baillie upon the late Vizier's having told Captain McLeod, on his return, that I had abandoned the enforcing a most obnoxious measure, alluding to the question of reform, and upon the expressions in the paper delivered to me by the present Vizier, implying that the reform had been suspended by his Excellency's father in consequence of a letter from myself. These two circumstances are adduced as strong corroborations of the inference, that there must have been a communication, if not a letter from myself, conveying such assurances to the late Vizier. Both, however, obviously alluded to the public letter I addressed to the late Vizier on the 25th of March, which went through the Resident himself.

45. As irrefragable proof that the Nawaub Vizier had not before conceived me to have abandoned the plan of reform, let his answer to my former letter be examined. What is its purport? An anxious vindication of himself against the charge of having flown off from his engagement. He says that, so far from having resisted the wishes of the Government, he has actually made progress in carrying the reform into execution, and he quotes the steps taken by him. He avers that he never did engage to carry it into effect through the whole of his dominions at once, because the attempt would have produced ruinous confusion. The explanation was to me quite satisfactory: and Major Baillie sinks the tenor of this letter, which passed through his hands!

46. The conciliatory tone of this letter may have contributed, as was intended, to inspire his Excellency with a confidence that I would not insist upon any requisitions involving humiliation to himself; and from this, probably, he deduced his opinion of the course of policy I had adopted towards him. The Resident's having also refrained from further pressing him upon the subject of the reform, which his Excellency must of course have presumed was under orders from Government, formed another circumstance in support of his notion that I had abandoned the measure in question. Now what was it that the Nawaub Vizier understood me to have abandoned? A reform in his financial administration? Not so; for the condition on which the system obnoxious to him had been suspended was, declaredly, that a reform in some other shape, which would be practically effectual, should be adopted. His joy was a rational one, that I had consented not to urge a particular plan, the fitness of which with regard to his dominion I had begun seriously to doubt, and which I have since been satisfied was injudicious: a plan calculated to lower him in the eyes of his subjects, by forcing into power a number of individuals marshalled against his authority. More of this hereafter.

47. The grounds on which I adopted this line of conduct have been above explained, and are fully known to the Board; so that it is unnecessary to recapitulate them in this place. But, for the further satisfaction of the Council, I here declare, that except the public letter in question, which was addressed to his Excellency and sent through the Resident, and which closed the disagreement, instead of being the occasion of it, I never, whether by verbal or written communication, conveyed to the late Vizier the slightest assurance of my sentiments on the question of reform through any secret channel whatever, either European or native. With Captain McLeod I never discoursed upon the subject, that I can recollect; nor indeed with any gentleman whatever, not officially in my confidence.
can

48. Let us, however, pursue the course of the late Resident's narrative into the events which occurred when I was myself at Lucknow.

49. My orders of the 25th of March to the Resident, together with the letter above alluded to, though it left the subjects of difference unadjusted, put a stop for the time to those discreditable altercations and disputes which had for so long been carried on, until they had excited ultimately a degree of personal animosity on both sides. I intended things should have remained in that state until my meeting with his Excellency, when I proposed to enquire into and finally adjust them. The sudden demise of Saadut Alee Khan before I could reach Cawnpore, and the accession of his son, who was reported to be actuated by very different principles of conduct, cut short my intentions with respect to Major Baillie. Within a month after his accession, the present Vizier was reported by Major Baillie to have conceded every point which had been at issue between his father and the Resident; and it was so represented, that I could only believe it was his Excellency's voluntary act, through conviction of the propriety of what had been proposed to him, and of the futility of the grounds on which it had been resisted by his father. At the same time, the confidence he seemed to be giving to Major Baillie was said to be the result of pure attachment to him personally.

50. On the first receipt of the report of these circumstances, though I saw in his Excellency's relative situation towards Major Baillie much calculated to impress the former with a high sense of obligation, and though I had not the least doubt that the attachment existed in the manner, and to the height represented, I yet thought I perceived in Major Baillie a disposition to overstrain influence in the position he had thus assumed. Thence, at the same time that I congratulated Major Baillie the public expression of my gratification at his having so happily accomplished objects on which Government had heretofore shewn itself interested, I further directed the Political Secretary to hint privately at some parts of his conduct which I thought indiscreet. I desired he might be warned particularly against obtruding, in matters not essential, an advice which, under the circumstances of the two Governments, could not but savour of dictation; not that I suspected the Nawaub Vizier of being impatient under the counsel, or of imagining it to have other object than his welfare, but I dreaded lest it should seem to the world that we were making his Excellency pay a new price for that elevation, which the obligations of our good faith bound us to secure to him, and lest he himself should at length feel us to be practising extortion upon his gratitude, through the multitude of acquiescences which we demanded in the guise of advice.

51. The letter addressed to Major Baillie by Mr. Adam, at my desire, I take this opportunity of placing on record. It is, for several reasons of importance, desirable that the Council should be well acquainted with the sentiments I then entertained. I carried the same with me to Cawnpore, and as the circumstances which had originally shaken the entire confidence I was otherwise disposed to yield to Major Baillie, had ceased to exist in consequence of the demise of Saadut Alee Khan, and the apparent attachment of his successor to the Resident, my favourable disposition towards Major Baillie was renewed. Of course, I thought no more of inquiring how far he might have been justified, or otherwise, in the course of his altercations with the late Vizier: all that had been in my contemplation on this subject had lost its object on the decease of his Excellency, and on the extinction of those dissensions which I had only been anxious to set to rest in a satisfactory manner.

52. This confidence in Major Baillie, and my favourable disposition towards him, I took the occasion of the first conference with the Vizier to express. I shall not, however, recapitulate all that passed between myself and his Excellency at Cawnpore and Lucknow, as the whole is fully detailed in the note I recorded on the 30th of November 1814, to which it will be sufficient to refer the Board. The view I then took has the advantage of having been committed to waiting while the impressions were strong in my mind and the facts fresh in my recollection. My sentiments upon the subject have not been changed by any thing which has now been urged; I shall, therefore, merely notice slightly the most material points of variance in the exposition now given by Major Baillie, and shall then hasten to the circumstances attending the issue of the transactions in question, which I then but imperfectly understood.

53. Major Baillie would lead us to the conclusion that his Excellency was driven against his will to express to me a dissatisfaction he did not feel at certain circumstances of his situation with respect to the Resident, while, in fact, Refaut-ood-Dowlah had the warmest attachment to him. The springs of so extraordinary a procedure are asserted to have been a continuance of the intrigues of Hukeem Mehdee, with the participation in them of Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke, to persuade his Excellency that I was myself desirous of finding ground for the removal of Major Baillie from his situation. Certain parts of my conduct are also quoted, as having had a tendency to strengthen this notion in his Excellency, and to produce the declaration with which he at last came forward.

54. As far as relates to Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke, the issue between them and Major Baillie is, whether they pushed themselves into his Excellency's confidence, and sought by active intrigue to instil into his mind sentiments he did not already possess, or whether his Excellency threw himself upon their confidence, and requested their assistance to forward his own views.

55. It is totally unnecessary to go into the respective arguments in support of these assertions. We have as evidence, on one side,* the candid acknowledgment of the individuals of all that they were themselves concerned in, which they declare their readiness to confirm by oath, and this statement corresponds with collateral circumstances. On the other, there are only advanced vague surmises, from facts and circumstances sometimes obviously misrepresented, frequently totally irrelevant, seldom warranting any inference to the prejudice of the gentlemen in question, and never capable of the full interpretation to which they have been strained.

56. His Excellency the present Vizier is a man of too doubtful a character for any one to be able to say whether the jealousy of the Resident's encroaching disposition was the offspring of his Excellency's own mind or the suggestion of others. Obviously, however, it must have taken root there before he threw himself upon the English gentlemen in the manner represented. For my part, I have thought there was more timidity of disposition in him than deficiency of head, and I never deemed him so destitute of sense or so devoid of pride, as not to have felt irritation at finding himself in a continual state of subjection to the Resident and exhibited to his own subjects as in tutelage. Whether the sentiment originated with himself or was instilled into his mind is immaterial; it could not have been entertained, unless it had been warranted by some part of Major Baillie's conduct. That this was the case I found early cause to believe. Indeed, surveying the subject at this distance of time, and with the lights I now possess, I think it may be safely assumed that even the influence by which Major Baillie was enabled to carry the several measures he proposed on his Excellency's first accession to the musnud, was an influence derived from practising on his Excellency's fears, not arising from favour or from a sense of obligation, as I had at first imagined. If his Excellency's personal favour was with either party, it must have been with that of which Hukeem Mehdee was the head; for knowing the Resident's hostility against this man, unless there was an invincible leaning towards him and his counsels, he would not have been suffered by his Excellency to approach the Presence while the parade of attachment to Major Baillie was in full display, and the consequent wish to oblige him was complete. So little weight did Major Baillie really possess, when it was to be tried in the balance against that of Hukeem Mehdee Alee, that he (Major Baillie) was forced to solicit my personal representation to the Nawab Vizier on the inconvenience of permitting the Hukeem to remain at Lucknow. With respect to what may have been been the views of Hukeem Mehdee and his party, and what the means by which they may have expected to accomplish their purposes, I cannot, of course, be possessed of any information. Major Baillie, however, is fond of dwelling upon their intrigues about myself or with natives in my suite, his imaginations on which head I believe to be totally without foundation.

57. It is here necessary to remark a skilful laxity of expression, apparently conceived by Major Baillie to be licit, in order to lead the suspicion of others to a conclusion which he has reasons for not distinctly advancing.

Paragraph 22: "Charges for secret services and presents to English gentlemen and ladies appeared in Hukeem Mehdee's accounts submitted to the present Vizier for adjustment in my presence." When officially required to specify who the ladies and gentlemen were, he answered that he understood Lady Hood to be the lady; but he could not recollect whether Major-General Gillespie, or some other general, was the gentleman. From subsequent passages one cannot doubt but that he must have believed these items to have been a fraudulent attempt to account for money never disbursed: yet he leaves this indirect accusation to stick or not, as it may, on the dignified persons in question, because the existence of a supposition that bribes could be given was useful to his purpose.

58. "Taj-ood-Deen (a supposed emissary of Hukeem Mehdee's) joined the suite of Lord Moira, and remained in attendance for some months." The words "suite" and "attendance" are here employed, to convey the notion that this man was permitted to accompany me and was in the habits of communication; whereas, his attaching himself (probably to evade custom dues) to a fleet so numerous as to afford little risk that the intrusion of a strange vessel should be perceived, was unauthorized. His person is to this instant absolutely unknown to me, and I do not comprehend the possibility of his gaining a tittle of information on any subject beyond the rate of our progress.

59. "Gocul Chund Chobey, an ostensible agent of the Vizier's, in occasional attendance on the Governor-General." My first acquaintance with this name was produced by Major Baillie's letter of the 8th of September 1814, wherein the person in question is reported to have quoted my sentiments with respect to the reform. On that letter's being forwarded to me by Mr. Adam, I addressed a confidential note to him, expressing my disbelief of the whole story. The impression made upon me at the moment may be worth recording. The following is an extract from the note:—

"Till I read the letter from Major Baillie transmitted by you, the existence of such a man as Gocul Chund was unknown to me. Little as I could imagine that any officer in my military suite could have intercourse with a person of that description, I still thought it necessary to question the gentlemen, who all disavow their knowledge not only of him but of any other attendant in the fleet not actually attached to the boats. Such of the civil service as I am in the habits of seeing frequently have similarly been questioned by me and make the same answer: but had the case been that any of these individuals had been intimate with Gocul Chund, no suspicion could have rested on any one of them, because to no person whatever, now with the fleet, except Mr. Ricketts and yourself, have I ever in the remotest manner mentioned the affairs of Oude. At Calcutta the Members of Council alone knew my opinion. It is a subject which I should not have the most distant notion of discussing in any other way than officially; the quotation, therefore, of my sentiments imputed to Gocul Chund is sheer extravagance. My opinions on the head of reform are on record in the letters addressed by me to the late Nawaub Vizier; and they are so explicitly stated, that the copies of those letters transmitted to the Resident can leave nothing doubtful on the subject."

60. Again: "Mr. Clarke was reported to be the medium of the transmission of those presents to Captain Gilbert, and also of a sword to Major Davison; and this circumstance struck me in such a light, as to open my eyes in some degree on the conduct of Mr. Clarke." Had not this observation been intended to excite an unfounded conception it never could have been made by Major Baillie. If Mr. Clarke had any thing to do in the case, he, in the actual service of the Nawaub Vizier and in constant attendance on his Excellency, was the person the most natural of all others to be so employed. The evidence of Captain Gilbert explains the presents to him. The mention of the sword to my Aide-de-camp, Major Davison, I suppose is to furnish a presumption that it was an attempt to purchase the influence with me against the Resident. Major Baillie was the person who informed me that seven trays of presents were prepared for each of my Aides-de-camp. On my saying that I should not allow them to be accepted, Major Baillie observed that the Nawaub Vizier would be wounded, if on the occasion of his recent accession to the musnud a compliment of that kind from him were wholly declined; on which account he recommended that I would permit something to be taken. As it was my peculiar wish to conciliate the Nawaub Vizier, I agreed that each Aide-de-camp should accept a sword of the ordinary Lucknow fashion. The kind of sword is so well known, that I need hardly mention their being, though neat, of no intrinsic value. It was so settled. Major Davison happening to be the Aide-de-camp sent to meet the Nawaub Vizier, with the established compliment of my enquiries after his health on his Excellency's arrival at his camp on the other side of the river, the sword was then given to him singly; and this was a circumstance which Major Baillie represents as having opened his eyes!

61. Further: "His Lordship's doubts of the veracity of his representative "at the Court of Lucknow evinced by his deputation of Captain Gilbert." To impress a belief of his "deputation" is a considerable object with Major Baillie. No colour of deputation from me existed. He uses the word again and again. It is impossible to speak of any man's internal conviction, therefore I can only say Major Baillie had peculiar reason to think his employment of the word incorrect. I refer to the public manner in which the Nawaub Vizier gave the invitation to Captain Gilbert, as that officer has confirmed on oath. The testimony utterly rebuts Major Baillie's conclusions. With regard to the question of the Resident's veracity which I am accused of entertaining, I admit that the indulging a gratuitous suspicion derogatory to any one standing in the light of a gentleman would have been unworthy. But here, again, Major Baillie wrests the nature of the fact, in order to saddle me with the having groundlessly regarded him as capable of advancing an untruth. My doubt was not as to the Vizier's having authorized Major Baillie to request my assent to Mr. Wilson's being his physician, but as to his Excellency's having done it at the moment when Major Baillie spoke to me. The intimation to Mr. Law that application would be made for my permission towards Mr. Wilson's being appointed physician was present enough to my mind; therefore I could not but be aware that Major Baillie had powers to make that entreaty: my doubt was, as to the entreaty's being made to me in consequence of a fresh suggestion of his Excellency's at that instant. An application originating with himself on that occasion must have dispelled all the hesitation which I had before felt on the subject. I did not catch any phrase of the Nawaub Vizier's that connected itself with the appointment; and I was thence uncertain whether Major Baillie, grounding himself on the former authorization of the Nawaub Vizier (represented as having been extorted from his Excellency) had not taken that opportunity of urging a request which I had been apprized was to be made. Major Baillie's appeal to the circumstance, that a hundred persons present must have been able to check him had he made the application without having been then desired to do so by the Nawaub Vizier, is sad sophistry. Who ever was in the company of a Native Prince, without having learned that all conversation is carried on in so low a tone, as that none but the persons on each side of him, and immediately engaged in the discourse, have a possibility of hearing what passed?

62. In another place he talks of the intrigues "encouraged by native emissaries as formerly in the suite of the Governor-General." The word "suite" is here again pressed into the service, that it may be inferred the individuals were somehow connected with me, or at least had some facilities of communication. There is no excuse open to Major Baillie on the score of misapprehension sion on this head. He perfectly knew my situation at the period to which this refers. He was aware that I had been constrained to wait at Futtygurh till the season of the hot winds should have passed, and that I had no natives in my suite; and that those on whom he bestows the description were persons in no shape attached to any department attendant on me, but merely petitioners who repaired thither, as was the case from all quarters, to have memorials on alleged grievances laid before the Governor-General.

63. I have reserved for the last the exposure of an attempt which well deserves to hold that place in the climax:

64. In paragraph 15, speaking of my expected arrival, Major Baillie says, "The friendship and intimacy of Lady Loudon with Captain McLeod's relations at home was frequently talked of at this time, and Captain McLeod had obtained leave of absence from the Vizier to proceed to Calcutta with his children." He then, in paragraph 22, proceeds: "thus the fact, so satisfactorily established, of the late Vizier having two agents, an European and a native, in Calcutta, the one supposed to be connected with Lady Loudon and the other tutored by Hukeem Mehdee, combined with the previous negotiations between Captain McLeod and the Hukeem, seems to me to form proof the most convincing to the mind of every person conversant in the slightest degree with the character of the natives of India, that the late Vizier's retractation of his solemn and written assurances regarding the reform of his Government, and all his untoward proceedings from the month of December 1813 till his death, was connected with the deputation of Captain McLeod, and with intrigues conducted by Hukeem Mehdee." It is quite unnecessary for me to expatiate on the quality of that hazarded insinuation directed against Lady Loudon; the object of it, as will be clear to every body, is to have it inferred that Lady Loudon, prejudiced against Major Baillie by Captain McLeod, swayed me to extend to Captain McLeod and Hukeem Mehdee a countenance which Major Baillie describes thus: "the encouragement, unintentional I am persuaded, which their joint views must have received from an authority paramount to my own." I fear the candour of Major Baillie in leaving the loophole of unconsciousness by which the Governor-General may escape from the charge of turpitude in undermining his own representative, will not pass current, when he has assumed the existence of the encouragement in question on such indecent surmises. I thought it fitting to declare, upon my honour, to the Council, and I repeat the declaration with the same solemnity of asseveration, that I or Lady Loudon could recollect but one conversation (if conversation it could be called) relative to Major Baillie, before the period when the present Vizier's supposed dissatisfaction was communicated to me at Cawnpore. Major Baillie had been earnestly recommended to me and to Lady Loudon in England by a relative very dear to us both shortly before her death, and we were thence solicitous to shew him attention. One day, after perusing an extraordinarily acrimonious despatch of his respecting Saadut Alee, I mentioned to Lady Loudon the regret I felt at perceiving such a spirit of rancour in Major Baillie's statement. She met the observation with an expression of concern; and nothing further passed relative to Major Baillie, either on that occasion or on any other, till we met him in the Upper Provinces. Major Baillie, I am aware, would contend that he had not made a charge on any one of these subjects; and I would subscribe to his assertion. It was not his policy to make charges; he has only indulged himself in little disfigurements of circumstances. Petty distortions might have the chance of being thought not worth the trouble of a comment, while the multiplicity and repetition of them would mislead others into the false conclusions which it was an object to establish, but which it would have been unwise to bring forward in a shape that could be grasped. There is undoubtedly much dexterity in this; but it is a dexterity which Major Baillie's cooler reflection would have condemned. I ought to add the distinct assurance of Lady Loudon, that she never had the slightest conversation with Captain McLeod respecting Major Baillie during the former's residence in Calcutta.

65. I have connected these instances, in order to show that the distortion of circumstances was systematic, and practised with the hope that, by means of such colouring, Major Baillie's loss of influence might be accounted for in a manner less mortifying than should it appear to have been entailed through his own want of judgment. Hence arise his identification of himself with the interests of the State, his lamentations over the injury sustained by the British Government through the interruption of his plans, and his reference of these mischiefs to the unhappy prejudice against him instilled into me either by Captain McLeod, or by native agents who beset me on the river. With regard to the latter, it is difficult to persuade oneself Major Baillie ever should have believed that any such persons could possibly have had the slightest influence on my counsels, directly or indirectly, or that they could have had access to information with respect to what was passing in my mind.

66. I had no native near my person. From a caution, the entire value of which I did not till now appreciate, I had resolved that there should not be a channel for communications to me through any native; therefore, though I was anxious to make progress in the Hindoostanee language, I would not suffer my own Moonshee, under whom I was studying it, to attend me on the tour, and throughout the fleet there was not, within my knowledge, a single native who could have thought of addressing conversation to me. I believe there was not an individual in my suite at all connected with, or who gave his confidence to persons of the description alluded to by Major Baillie, in any such manner as to admit of their having been, even unconsciously, instrumental to such intrigues. On the same ground of prudence, I was careful to select an individual* to be entrusted with the charge of reading the petitions I might receive, who needed the assistance of no Moonshee or other native, on purpose to prevent the possibility of mischief from such intervention. The whole story of these intrigues may therefore be dismissed, as having been the result of a suspicion altogether loose and groundless.

67. Major Baillie next asserts, that there were some features of my conduct and behaviour towards himself, which had a tendency to strengthen in his Excellency the notion that I was anxious to discover some plausible excuse for removing him from the Residency at Lucknow.

68. The first circumstance adduced is the want of a salute of artillery on his arrival at my quarters at Cawnpore and some delay in his introduction. When Major Baillie shows how far he could miscomprehend his position relative to me, he affords too ready an inference as to his not measuring his situation in regard to the Nawaub Vizier with all the accuracy which he ascribes to himself. I cannot but think that Major Baillie is the very first representative who ever expected to be received with distinguished military honours when he waited on his principal. The Resident at Delhi, or the Resident with Scindiah, never looked for so incongruous a compliment. None of the Generals on the Staff, none of the Political Agents to the Governor-General, ever received it, and to no representative of an independant Native Sovereign was it on any occasion paid, unless that representative happened to be the heir apparent.

69. I am said, again, in the conference in which his Excellency made the tender of a crore of rupees in loan to the Company, to have conveyed a distinct invitation to his Excellency to conferences from which the Resident should be excluded. I confess I do not recollect this point: it may have been so; but certainly the manner, or the expression in which the proposed exclusion of Major Baillie was hinted, must have been professedly addressed to Major Baillie's own delicacy, and have been couched in terms that rendered the matter equally incapable of unfavourable construction, or of wounding the feelings of Major Baillie who was present at the time. I trust no one could be more careful on this point than myself; and, at any rate, it appears to me singular that I should take such a step, when I had not at the moment a suspicion that the Vizier could wish to say any thing to me unheard by Major Baillie. Indeed, had the Vizier understood it to be my intention, that whenever his Excellency requested requested a private audience the Resident should be excluded, the subsequent note of Mr. Clarke, intreating me to see the Vizier without Major Baillie's being present, would have been unnecessary. It is admitted that had an invitation been conveyed by me this note would have been superfluous; yet from this Major Baillie can discern but one inference, which is, that the note was a fabrication of Mr. Clarke's, unauthorized by his Excellency. This is, however, an imputation to the prejudice of that gentleman, absolutely refuted by his Excellency's distinct avowal, when I put the question as to Mr. Clarke's authority, in the presence of Messrs. Ricketts, Adam, and Swinton.

* Mr. Prinsep. See Minute dated the 20th May 1814.

70. I shall close my advertence to this part of the late Resident's narrative, with endeavouring to explain shortly the degree in which my conduct may probably have influenced his Excellency to come forward with the declaration of his grievances and to have subsequently retracted it.

71. I arrived at Cawnpore with a firm conviction in my mind that his Excellency entertained towards Major Baillie sentiments of warm attachment and implicit confidence. Indeed, my own doubts of the delicacy of some parts of Major Baillie's conduct towards his Excellency's father having become matter no longer to be acted upon, my confidence in Major Baillie was renewed, as I have before explained. I, of course, felt no hesitation in testifying to his Excellency my perfect reliance on Major Baillie, with a view to strengthen the attachment and mutual good understanding I conceived to exist between them. As soon, however, as the possibility of the non-existence of this harmony was hinted to me, I naturally felt anxious to ascertain the actual state of things as well as to learn his Excellency's real sentiments; and I was, therefore, rather more guarded as to any studied display of what might have a tendency to deter his Excellency from unbosoming himself. At the same time, however, I was careful, even with nice observance, not to withhold from the Resident those public marks of trust and attention which his situation entitled him to expect. I was thus in a position of some difficulty. I was solicitous to gain his Excellency's confidence, even so far as in matters affecting his relation with the British Resident; but I did not wish him to suppose that the Resident had lost mine, or that I harboured a desire to subvert him.

72. Satisfied, as I am at this moment, as well from subsequent events as from reflection on what then occurred, that dissatisfaction towards Major Baillie was, from various causes, the genuine sentiment of his Excellency's heart, my behaviour clearly had a tendency rather to repress his avowal of this sentiment. The profession and the display of confidence towards the Resident which the Nawaub Vizier daily witnessed from me, must have much more than counter-balanced any floating imaginations which his mind could have received from any intrigues as to my dislike of that person.

73. Major Baillie's own account of what passed between his Excellency and myself on my hearing these complaints when they were at last brought forward, as well as of my behaviour towards himself immediately afterwards, when I called him to hand his Excellency to his carriage, furnishes sufficient evidence of the uniform courtesy and consideration with which I was careful to treat him; and the statement will clearly prove, that instead of having met with encouragement from me, his Excellency laboured under the greatest apprehension lest he might have incurred my displeasure by uttering his complaints.

74. With respect to the circumstances of my behaviour towards the English gentlemen at the Court of Oude, against which Major Baillie complains so strongly, I have already fully explained, in my note of the 30th November 1814, the light in which I regarded their conduct and the feelings which influenced mine towards them. In the ninety-third paragraph of his letter, Major Baillie professes to give the purport of a conversation which passed in an audience he had with me on the subject. If Major Baillie be convinced of his having narrated accurately what passed, it is a very remarkable instance how far the power of fancy is capable of confusing recollection. The tenor of an interview to which there were no witnesses, and in which the parties contradict one another so decidedly as I do Major Baillie, can only be judged by probability. When Major Baillie

Baillie states that he told me he could only consider Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke as "authorized spies upon him," I have only to ask a moment's reflection on the likelihood of his venturing to hold such language to me, who certainly (by his own shewing) did not indulge him in any intimacy of discourse. It is true, indeed, that he arraigned Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke of gross impropriety, for their having given to me the information which I had demanded from them. He then remarks, that I "evinced a disposition to vindicate those gentlemen." The disposition was, in truth, evinced pretty unequivocally; for I checked Major Baillie with great austerity, observing that if I did not ascribe his proposition to the intemperate agitation of his mind, and thence regard it as an argument which he would not seriously maintain, I should feel it incumbent on me to remove him directly from his station. I explained, that it was the duty of every English gentleman to apprize the Governor-General of any incorrect conduct in the Resident, who might otherwise continue in a course of behaviour deeply injurious to the State, without the Governor-General's obtaining knowledge of so serious a mischief. The accuracy of Major Baillie's memory with regard to other parts of the conversation, may be judged by one point of his representations, to which there happens to be collateral evidence. He advances, that I expressed a desire to confront those two gentlemen with the Nawaub Vizier. Now those gentlemen did make a formal claim upon my justice to be confronted with the Nawaub Vizier, asserting that they would produce three of his Excellency's servants who would maintain on oath, to his face, his having repeatedly uttered before them the complaints which Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke had disclosed. My answer to each of the gentlemen was, that no consideration could justify me in subjecting an independent Sovereign to such humiliation: his word must be taken implicitly. Let it be judged what is the degree of probability in the statement, that I had expressed a desire to confront the Vizier with those gentlemen.

75. I now proceed to consider the circumstances of Agha Meer's elevation to the Ministry, the causes of his present disgrace, and the question whether or not our interference on his account would be expedient.

76. In my note of the 30th November 1814, I expressed it as my firm conviction that the retraction of the complaints, whether well or ill-founded, against Major Baillie, had been effected by an intrigue, the reward of success in which was Agha Meer's nomination to the ncābut. The issue of the intrigue, and the means by which it had been effected, I conceived to be nothing to me. Attention had been paid to the testimonies of Captain McLeod and Mr. Clarke, only as they elucidated the Nawaub Vizier's wishes; and when he thought fit to say that those representations did not convey his real sentiments, the question dropped. With regard to his Excellency's nomination of a Minister, I was bound by my own declaration to leave his choice uninfluenced, unless in the case of his selecting some individual of such known hostility to the British Government as would be likely to subvert the alliance. There was, of course, no motive for my intervention. I had not, at the time, any clear conception of these strangely-perplexed transactions. Major Baillie's own account has thrown considerable light on the subject; and, certainly, had I then possessed the clue which he has furnished in his report, he would not have been left in the situation of Resident at the Court of Oude.

77. In the consideration of a fit person to be minister, it seems that my prejudices intervened to the injury of public concerns. "My conviction that the "only person worthy of the trust was a person whom his Lordship had rejected "on account of his connexion with me," is the preliminary statement of Major Baillie. He afterwards enlarges thus: "Mirza Jāfer, the most respectable person from talents and birth, and the most desirable from attachment to our "interests that was then to be found in the capital, was proscribed, or supposed "to be proscribed, by the Governor-General's displeasure." It would then appear that my distaste to the Resident, extended to Mirza Jāfer on account of his connexion with Major Baillie, prevented the person the most respectable, the most capable, and the most devoted to the British Government, from being invested with the office of Minister. What ought to be thought of this representation when there never had been a motive or a circumstance, on which the surmise surmise of any displeasure of mine against Mirza Jāfer could be grounded? No shadow of any such displeasure existed. Major Baillie, indeed, did not venture to bring forward that person as a candidate, because when his views in that respect had been removed, it had been hinted to him that I could not fail to think the choice objectionable. It was obvious, that the naming for Minister a Moonshee who had been the Resident's confidential agent for a long term of years, would have been to hold up the Vizier to all India as more strongly shackled than ever in those trammels from which I had professed the determination to liberate him. The example of Saadut Aleë's mortifications had been, in my judgment, of great injury to our interests, by disinclining other Princes to put themselves under British protection. I sought to counteract this impression; and my object would have been thoroughly defeated, had a fresh proof been exhibited how little the Nawaub Vizier was allowed to be independent in the internal government of his country. Either from a sense of this obstacle, or from a desire to make it the excuse for giving to Agha Meer the preference on this occasion, the latter was the person brought forward. The appointment of Mirza Jāfer would have been felt by the Nawaub Vizier as the most mortifying proclamation of his Excellency's insignificance that could have been devised. The expression of joy on the part of his Excellency (witnessed by Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Adam, and Mr. Swinton) when he was told that the retention or dismissal of Mirza Hajee, and the other sons of Mirza Jāfer, depended entirely on his own pleasure, sufficiently manifested his acute sense and jealousy of impending thralldom. Wretched, indeed, was the subjugation, when he could not think himself at liberty to remove one of his own household servants! This point should not be passed over without noticing the terms "proscribed" and "dis-pleasure" more particularly. It is the same attempt which I have before exposed, of exciting by an irrelevant word the supposition of a non-existent circumstance.

78. It seems that Agha Meer, by whose personal influence the retractation was effected, was only the tool of Ulee Nuckee, the Resident's own Moonshee; that it was from him Agha Meer took his lessons and went armed with instructions to work upon the fears and passions of the Vizier. Where was the inducement for Agha Meer to take so active and so hazardous a step? Are we to believe that the neābut was the proffered reward? What hope could he have of such an elevation, but through that recommendation of the Resident's which was sure to operate as a command? When the counsels of Ulee Nuckee to Agha Meer are avowed, suspicion must fix itself strongly on the Resident as having been a party to the project. Let us see how further circumstances bear out the supposition.

79. Agha Meer was, in his inferior station, the ostensible favourite of his Excellency at the time; but there seems good reason to believe that, before this retractation, he had been gained over to Major Baillie's party. He was in the habits of attending constantly at the Residency; and from Major Baillie's account* it would appear to have been his usual practice to retire home in the evening with Ulee Nuckee, Major Baillie's confidential Moonshee. There, at the house of the latter, was the plan conceived which was to produce a recantation of the complaint preferred by his Excellency. There, as is acknowledged, was the favourite spirited up to undertake the part assigned to him. Now let any man ask himself, would Major Baillie's confidential Moonshee have risked his master's displeasure, the loss of situation, and every thing he possessed in the world, had he not known he was doing what was agreeable to his patron, even if it had not been preconcerted between them? But the question is superfluous. Major Baillie makes open profession of the merit he conceives to attach to the services of Agha Meer for the part he had in the transaction.†

80. The merit rests upon the assumption, that Agha Meer undeceived the Nawaub Vizier, and gave him courage to emancipate himself from the danger of supporting a falsehood into which he had been betrayed: a service which could not but secure to him the confidence and warm gratitude of his Excellency in a higher degree than he had before possessed them. This is another point of the internal evidence of the case which shall be discussed in its place. Whencesoever the sudden turn had proceeded, and whatsoever my observation of a degree of stage trick might be, it was my business to be satisfied, as soon as I had ascertained from his Excellency's own mouth what was the construction which he wished should be received. Immediately afterwards, his Excellency was called upon to name a Minister: I had, at the instance of Major Baillie, previously objected to the man on whom the Nawaub Vizier's choice had rested. This was Hukeem Mehdee, the adviser of his father, whom I was taught to think hostile to the interests of our nation; and I declined advising further. Major Baillie was solicited by his Excellency to assist him in the selection of another man to be placed in nomination in the Hukeem's stead. Major Baillie's report of the conference which followed cannot be read, without its leaving the impression that he sought to lead his Excellency to the conviction that the nomination of no one would be so wise, so acceptable, or so proper, as that of Agha Meer. No one else appears to have been named on the occasion. Every trifling circumstance in favour of this individual seems to have been exaggerated and earnestly pressed upon his Excellency, while every thing of a disqualifying nature, however gross and palpable, was put out of sight. It is obvious, as well from what preceded as from what followed the conference, that the nomination of Agha Meer was the act of Major Baillie. Amidst all the candidates that had presented themselves, his Excellency seems never to have thought of Agha Meer before this conference. Though the latter was said to be his Excellency's personal favourite, he had been placed in no high situation, and never had been employed in the transaction of important business. He was reported to be of low origin; and were there any certainty of his being a Syud by descent, the fact would not militate against the supposition of his having been nurtured among the dregs of the people. His birth, however, would have been of little consequence, had his personal qualities recommended him to distinction. Unfortunately this was not the case: his figure was coarse, his manners unpolished, and his intellect generally estimated below mediocrity. He had not had the opportunities of drawing, either from study or from active employment, any tolerable degree of the information requisite in his position. Of course, the appointment occasioned general surprise, and I believe was very unfavourably regarded at Lucknow. Major Baillie ascribes the elevation of this person to the Nawaub Vizier's sense of the service just rendered to him by Agha Meer, as well as to his Excellency's partiality for this servant. The Vizier's contemplation of the service, as well as the strength of his attachment to Agha Meer, will appear from subsequent events; but the service might have its merit elsewhere, and thence have received its reward. The efforts Major Baillie has since made to maintain Agha Meer in power in opposition to his Excellency's wishes, are strongly corroborative of this view, and shew a decided identification of interest between them. Still gratitude for the immediate aid was not, I am disposed to conceive, the only reason assignable for this nomination. Major Baillie must have known Agha Meer's incapacity: he knew also the unbounded influence possessed over this man by his own Moonshee; so that by bringing forward a creature of his own of such character and qualifications, he secured to himself an uncontrolled authority in the affairs of Oude. This, I have no doubt, was considered as genuine policy with regard to public objects by Major Baillie, and the establishing such an influence would have been expedient, had it not been inevitably liable to abuse by the natives connected with the Resident. Events fully justified the apprehension of that consequence; for there can now be no doubt, that as long as Agha Meer continued in power, the result was as Major Baillie must have foreseen, expected, and sought, the ministry having been virtually in the hands of his own Moonshee, Ulee Nuckee.

81. Agha Meer's disgrace so soon after his elevation is easily accounted for. Granting even that his nomination was not entirely forced upon the Vizier, but that he was at the time viewed with sentiments of predilection, his Excellency must have very soon discovered that he had been won over to the opposite interest, and was engaged in schemes and guided by advisers regarded by his Excellency to be hostile to his independence. His Excellency's partiality was thus changed to that sort of vindictive hatred which usually pursues the detected falsity falsity of a favourite. For a time we may suppose the fear of offending Major Baillie to have had a predominant influence in his Excellency's mind, and to have restrained the expression of this antipathy or an immediate resort to the measures it might suggest. His Excellency had already once been defeated in his attempts to shake off the trammels of thralldom, and it was only gradually, that he could recover sufficient confidence to renew the struggle. Indeed, we may observe in the caution with which each step was taken, and in the mode by which his Excellency proceeded from one asperity to another, until at last the supposed favourite was disgraced and imprisoned, that though the enmity was deep and irreconcilable, there was something which forbade its full disclosure in the instant. This we can only imagine to have been an apprehension of the consequences from Major Baillie's resentment, while there was no hope of its being checked by myself. The only remaining question with respect to Agha Meer is, whether or not he is to meet with the support of our Government now that he has irrevocably fallen under his master's displeasure. This must turn on a decision of the question, What ought to be our policy with regard to the State of Oude?

82. The system of attracting the Native Sovereigns into subsidiary engagements, the work of a truly able statesman, had its inherent defect. Lord Wellesley was amply sensible of it; though, with that judgment which perceives that in human affairs you are not to stand still on account of an objection, but must be satisfied with a course where benefit far preponderates against inconvenience, he wisely compounded for the eventual embarrassment. He predicted the difficulty which would at length occur as to the nature of our interferences with the States which had paid for our protection; but he could only say, that the remedy must be devised when the exigency should happen, as its quality would have to depend on the circumstances of the moment. What has taken place in Oude, however, has not been altogether the effect of the causes embraced by his foresight. Some management, which I cannot but consider as having been erroneous, produced the evil in a degree beyond any natural tendency in the contract. To judge of this accurately, the ground whence all reasoning on the subject ought to proceed must be first established.

83. When the heavily reluctant assent of Saadut Alee was obtained for the cession of a large portion of his dominions, in commutation of the pecuniary contribution which he was bound to pay for the subsidiary force, the most distinct assurance was pledged to him, by treaty, for his independent exercise of authority within the remainder of his territories. A right of counselling him on matters which might affect the joint interests of the two contracting powers was indeed stipulated in the treaty. The construction of this article, however, cannot, with any show of justice, be extended beyond that right of remonstrance, and of ultimate interference in extreme cases, which of necessity belongs to a protecting power relatively to the State protected. A provision for it would have been superfluous, had not there probably existed some apprehension, that should the right not be specifically reserved, it might be understood as barred by the direct acknowledgment of the Nawaub Vizier's independence. An attempt to fix upon this article a more comprehensive sense, would convert into an act of lawless oppression the acquisition of the territory in question; since it could not have been honestly obtained but by the granting an equivalent, which equivalent was the recognition and guarantee of the Nawaub Vizier's rights of sovereignty. The punctual observance of this contract was imperiously binding on our honour, our probity, and our interests. I have specified the last consideration, because I conceive that an unfortunate mistake on that head made our Government think its intervention legitimate on matters not really attended with the justification of any necessity.

84. On accepting, or rather on insisting upon the provinces in question as an extinction of the annual money payment secured to us, it is indisputable that we renounced all pretension to intermeddle with the administration of the remaining territories of Saadut Alee, unless in cases where the evident peril of the common cause should sanction remonstrance. This line was not well understood in practice. The supremacy of the British power was thought to be relinquished, if it was not rendered visible in every transaction. The representations representations of the Nawaub Vizier against what he thought a breach of faith, and which he attributed more to the dictatorial temper of the Resident than to the plan of Government, occasioned perpetual contestation. The spirits became acrimonious on both sides. Statements from the Resident, naturally more favourable to his side than strict equity would have borne out, betrayed Government into steps whence it could not recede, and which established pretensions never in its cool contemplation. The matter had been gradually getting worse and worse till the time of Major Baillie. He adopted the system which he found fashioned to his hand, and from its nature the dissensions with the Nawaub Vizier could not but become virulent. The Resident, backed by an authority against which resistance must be fruitless, had no terms to keep with his Excellency beyond the screening himself from having direct indecorum proved against him. A similar policy was incumbent on the Nawaub, so that, under the display of every civility and the observance of every etiquette, reciprocal malevolence was indulged by the practice of every covert artifice that could be irritating and offensive. To sustain himself in this warfare, Major Baillie was under the necessity of embodying round his standard such natives as could by influence, dexterity, and boldness, best aid him in riveting the fetters which he thought it necessary to impose on the Sovereign of the country. They were essentially recognized depositaries of his power, and that power was understood to be undistinguishable from the authority of the Governor-General. Confident in this irresistible support, those natives had no restraint on the ostentatious parade of their influence. Prosecuting their private gain by means of this trust, they contumeliously disregarded the Nawaub Vizier, thwarted his measures with impunity, and treated with undisguised contempt the legitimate functionaries employed by him. It was impossible that this behaviour, and the abuses which accompanied it, should not outrage the feelings of the Nawaub Vizier. The Resident could not sacrifice those dependants to his Excellency's indignation, without giving up all hope of keeping together a party. He was, therefore, constrained to uphold them in confessed opposition to their Sovereign: nay more, he was obliged to pay their services by extorting for them advantages from that Sovereign; and to maintain his own power in this ruinous contest, he was (however unintentionally) forced to assume, by the identification of himself with the British Government, an appearance of sway over the Nawaub Vizier that carried with it the most poignant insult.

85. Soon after I had occasion to advert to our position relative to Saudut Alee I became aware of impending consequences which filled me with the utmost alarm. That Prince was driven to actual desperation: he had even openly declared it in full durbar. The mischief had proceeded so far, that if we continued to assert the principle advanced for us, there was no avoiding a decisive struggle. I saw that we were on the brink of being forced, in self-defence, to possess ourselves of Saadut Alee's dominions and riches, to prevent his throwing himself with all his treasures into the hands of any power that would take the field against us. Whatsoever might have been the exigency that impelled the procedure, it would have entailed eternal stain on the British name; for the case was in no manner capable of explanation sufficient to do away the presumption of our having forced a quarrel on the defenceless, as a colour for atrocious plunder. Under the impression of the first informations received by me on the subject, I had urged the Nawaub Vizier to the enforcement of the plan of reform which it was said he had agreed to undertake. His explanation of its having been his conception that the measure was to be carried into execution gradually, as success should encourage its extension, came to me at a moment when I had obtained from different unprejudiced and unquestionable authorities, a tolerable notion of the state of society in Oude. I was thoroughly satisfied, that there were not to be found there enough functionaries, uniting sufficient capacity with honesty, to conduct the plan at once on the wide scale demanded by us; since it was evident to me that nothing but the unremitting vigilance of European superintendence in each of our Zillahs, prevented the grossest abuses under that system in the Company's possessions. From this conviction sprang the modification expressed in my letter of the 25th March 1814: but I should have thought that I had contemplated the evil very imperfectly imperfectly had I stopped there. I meditated a more radical assuagement of the Vizier's ulcerated mind, the nature of which I explained to my colleagues in Council, namely, the defining the duties of the Resident, in such a manner as should preclude the affectation of control so inevitably irritating to that Prince.

86. The policy which appeared to me recommended no less by our convenience than by our good faith, was to observe strictly the true and obvious spirit of our engagements with the Sovereign of Oude, by leaving him a free agent in the internal government of his own dominions, interfering with that advice which to him must be injunction only in cases where the real importance of our mutual interests required it. By the adoption of this principle, I obtained from Refaut-ood-Dowlah, in an hour of exigency, an assistance for the Company which never could have been procured during the miserable bickerings of former management. The counsels of Major Baillie appeared no deviation from the plan, because they were understood to be solicited by the new Sovereign; and I had only desired Major Baillie should be reminded of the wisdom of letting them be invited.

87. The first symptom of misunderstanding between Refaut-ood-Dowlah and the Resident was a delay, on the part of the Nawaub, to carry into effect the original plan of reform to which he had subscribed implicitly. I am persuaded the demur with regard to the districts into which the reform was not introduced, arose from the difficulty of finding persons fit to be trusted with such large powers; and it is an important fact, that Lieutenant-Colonel Fraser, charged with the care of suppressing the insurrections which broke out in different parts of Oude during last year, reported as the cause uniformly assigned by the inhabitants for those convulsions, that the extortions practised by the Ameens under the new system had driven the country into madness. The offer of the Resident to provide competent persons did not remove the embarrassment. The proposal touched an acute string of the Vizier's jealousy. Compliant as he had been on other points, he seems to have been cautiously on his guard against strengthening a combination of his subjects, from which he had seen his father suffer so much; and he probably dreaded the putting into situations of great influence individuals whom he regarded as devoted to the Resident. The proposition was inconsiderate. Sincere gratitude was, I doubt not, felt towards Major Baillie by the present Nawaub Vizier as long as the latter believed that many plots against his succession and life had been defeated by the Resident's energy. When his Excellency, from a more distinct view of matters, began to doubt that those dangers had existed in the degree represented, it was natural for him to imagine that an exaggerated claim of merit had some interested aim, and he probably scrutinized with undue severity the measures which Major Baillie had pressed upon him at the moment of his accession. I have mentioned that, while yet I could not suspect any thing of this disposition in the present Vizier, I had thought it expedient to have a hint communicated to Major Baillie against such urgency. The Nawaub Vizier could not fail to have it indicated to him, that almost all the points requested of him by the Resident (though they had been chiefly sanctioned by the late Governor-General) tended to enrich individuals who had acted under the Resident against Saadut Alee. Major Baillie has noticed the unfortunate estrangement which existed between Saadut Alee and the present Vizier. That the late Nawaub preferred for the active station of Minister and commandant of the troops his second son, on account of his superior talents, is certain; but that he had the project of setting his elder son aside from the succession (a design which he must have known this Government would never allow), or that he treated him in any manner that revolted the present Nawaub, is to me highly questionable. I never heard Refaut-ood-Dowlah speak of his father but with tenderness and veneration. Many things were mentioned by him to me that tended to throw a grace on his father's memory, and I know that he was singularly gratified by my having visited the grave of Saadut Alee. I thence infer, that he looked with an evil eye on those who had been banded against his father, and that he was soured with Major Baillie by his importunacy with him (Refaut-ood-Dowlah) in furtherance of their views. I suspect that the first symptoms of this dissatisfaction were manifested as both ungrateful and contumacious by Major Baillie, Baillie, who possibly imagined the Vizier to be more weak in capacity than I believe is really the case, and thence deemed such a tone likely to be effectual. The Nawaub Vizer, if I conceive his character rightly, is singularly timid, and has perhaps bowed himself before an assuming control; but I could never in his manners, his conversation, or his procedures, discover any thing which justified a supposition of his being deficient in intellect. I suspect that he had sagacity enough to comprehend the advantage taken of his nervousness, to carry points on the sudden which he would not have conceded in the ordinary course of business, and that his reflection was indignant at the management. If I am right in this conjecture, the violence of his Excellency's resentment against Agha Meer, when the latter had associated himself to the counsels of Major Baillie, is readily accounted for. It is certain the dislike, without any cause assigned, was visible very early after Agha Meer's elevation. All the influence which Major Baillie supposed himself to possess was inefficient towards suspending the course of this dissatisfaction. When that minister was sent on the mission to me at Futtygurh, Major Baillie represented that Agha Meer had many enemies working against him; and the Resident therefore earnestly begged that I would shew to the man such marked testimonies of my regard, as might induce the Nawaub Vizier to take him again into favour. The application appeared odd; because when Major Baillie had declared his Excellency to be sensible of the injury done to him in the late transactions, to be full of contrition for having lent himself to the suggestions of intriguers, and to be glowing with gratitude at Major Baillie's generous remission of the fault, it did not seem natural that any influence beyond the Resident's could be necessary to reinstate a servant of such tried and approved fidelity as Agha Meer in the good graces of his master. During the whole of Agha Meer's stay at Futtygurh, I not only treated him with unvarying attention, but with such public distinctions as he had never before received, and even with constant demonstrations of cordiality. These tokens of good-will were unfeigned, because I really gave him credit for firm attachment to the British interests. Notwithstanding this countenance, and his being furnished by me with a letter to the Nawaub Vizier, in which I professed the most favourable opinion of him, he remained in unalterable disgrace; nay, he became the object of harsh persecution. The cause of this is considerably unfolded by a circumstance which took place after the arrival of Mr. Strachey (the successor of Major Baillie) at Lucknow. His Excellency entreated Mr. Strachey not to employ Ulee Nuckee as Moonshee at the Residency, saying that Ulee Nuckee had been the cause of all the differences with Major Baillie.

88. A suspicion may possibly now occur, that Major Baillie perceived the hatred of the Nawaub Vizier to be in progress towards acknowledging itself; that he foresaw the impossibility of maintaining his ground at Lucknow, and that he resorted to the excuse of being undermined to account for his expected dislodgment. That I had any pointed prejudice against him certainly appears not to have been in his conception, when he could apply to me to shew particular attentions to Agha Meer, whose connection with him he knew me to understand. Subsequently to that period he did take alarm. On the investigation of facts asserted to me in a petition, there appeared reason to fear that use had been made of the name of our Government to obtain the Vizier's decision on a case in violation of the laws of the country. It was a question of inheritance and landed property between one Imteaz Ulee and Ulee Nuckee. The Resident had often pressed Saadut Alee to determine the cause in favour of his Moonshee. Saadut Alee constantly replied, that it was an affair to be decided by the tribunals in regular course. Major Baillie insisted, that when the British Government (which had no right to judge) had already decided on it, as was testified by his application, it would be indecent to have it tried in a court of law. One of the first points carried with the present Vizier on his accession by Major Baillie was a decision in favour of Ulee Nuckee. The petition of Imteaz Ulee was a representation of the injury done to him by the British Government, in obtaining a decree against him without his having had a hearing. I saw no cause to suspect that Major Baillie had been actuated by other partiality than that which arose from regarding Ulee Nuckee as a partizan of the British Government. The mode of rewarding such a person did not appear to me correct. I thought an injurious act of oppression had been unwittingly committed mitted by the British Government, and I felt bound to repair it. I directed Major Baillie to solicit that the Nawaub Vizier would annul his decree, and place the parties in their original situations, and would refer the matter to the ordinary course of law. Whether Major Baillie erroneously construed this into an indication of ill-will on my part towards him, or whether he feared it would be an opening for the Nawaub Vizier's avowal of sentiments hitherto repressed, I cannot guess; but I am persuaded this intervention was a proximate cause of the framing a despatch which he must be sure would entail his removal. That despatch, though dated the 29th April, was not forwarded till after the period to which I allude.

89. With respect to the question whether we should support Agha Meer, I am clearly of opinion he cannot be maintained. The attempt would be an infraction of principles which I consider as fundamental in our relations with Oude: but, further, it would lead to extreme practical embarrassment. To retain Agha Meer in office, we should have to undertake the entire administration without any adequate excuse for such a violation of the treaty.

90. It remains now to determine on what principles the connection and intercourse between the British Resident and the Court of Oude shall be regulated henceforth, and what degree of interference is to be exercised in the nomination or appointment of a successor to Agha Meer, should we deem it necessary to insist on such an appointment taking place. Even this, however, may be matter of deliberation. His Excellency has decidedly expressed his wish that Agha Meer should be dismissed, and that no Minister should succeed him on the same terms, but that the obedience of all his servants should be secured by their sense of immediate and exclusive dependence on himself. The first question is, whether our Government should acquiesce in such an arrangement? From the nature of our connection, from the terms of the treaty between the two States, and from the admitted practice of former times, it would appear that we have an undoubted right to offer our advice in the conduct of the affairs of the Vizier's Government, more especially to exercise the right by insisting on the appointment of an efficient Minister, if we think it necessary, and conferring with his Excellency in the selection. There is, indeed, no limit to the control by advice and injunction we might exercise in the internal administration of Oude, except such as policy or a sense of justice and of propriety, may induce us to impose on ourselves.

91. It is on the ground of policy that I propose to consider the question. On general principles, I must confess it to be my wish, as I have already explained, to refrain from authorizing the practice of constant interference in the domestic concerns of our allies. Now, I should conceive there can be no species of interference so galling and subversive of the independence of a Prince, as to insist on the appointment of a particular Minister, and to uphold his authority in opposition even to his master, because he is conceived to be favourable to our interests. The tendency our alliances have to slide into the habit of such interference, is the very circumstance that has made a connection with us so unpopular, as only to be sought or acquiesced in when a State is on the brink of ruin. At this instant Holkar prefers the insults of his army and the being confined within the fortress in which he has sought refuge, to embracing the servitude of our protection. Why? He has had legible examples before his eyes.

92. It is obviously our policy to remove this impression, by making the yoke of our supremacy as invisible as possible, while the advantages of our protection are so manifest. This is the broad bearing of the question.

93. With respect to Oude in particular, our practice and our views would not, perhaps, in theory extend so far, because the selection of the person to be Minister is left with the Vizier, and we only assume the privilege of urging a special ground of disqualification in case such objection should justly exist against a particular individual. It comes, however, very nearly to the same thing. We insist that the person named shall be one known to be favourable to the interests of our Government, which usually means a dependant of the British Resident, or at least one who has been in the habit of courting his favour through the hope of rising to power by those means; for how else is a favourable disposition to our Government to be manifested?

94. There

94. There have always been two parties at the Court of Oude; one consisting of those who look forward to rise to power by means of the British Resident, the other courting the personal favor of the Prince; each in its turn has been strongest, as the Vizier has himself retained the power, or the Minister has engrossed it through the exertion of the influence of our Government.

95. During the lifetime of the late Vizier, as his favour was the predominant influence, it was only the malcontents who had lost or despaired of ever obtaining the favor of their Prince, together with a few immediate Moonshees and dependants that formed the Court of the British Resident. These, when disappointed in the objects of their ambition, represented the persons enjoying the advantages of the Prince's favour as hostile to the British interests, and themselves as martyrs to their espousal of our cause. Major Baillie would seem to have lent too ready an ear to the whisperings of such courtiers; and when, on the accession of the present Vizier, his party came into favour, his conduct appears to have had for its object the annihilation of the opposite interests, and the demonstration to his own courtiers that his favour was the only secure road to power.

96. I had unconsciously lent myself to a course of measures which had nearly enabled him to effect this, when the Nawaub Vizier was induced to make another effort in support of his own influence and authority. This effort produced the crisis in which we are now called on to deliberate as to the policy to be observed in future. Had not so complete an insight into the nature of Major Baillie's conduct been afforded me, I might perhaps have been misled by false representations respecting the character of Agha Meer and the circumstances which have occasioned his fall, to have lent him the same support which was formerly lent to Hyder Beg Khan; and this, in giving the finishing stroke to the independence of the Vizier's Government, would have entailed no light embarrassment. Such an extremity is now out of the question. Shall we, however, insist upon the appointment of another Minister in opposition to his Excellency's wishes?

97. The arguments in favour of such a measure are, that it gives a consistency and responsible character to the administration of affairs, and produces a concert with the Representative of the British Government not to be shaken by the insidious suggestions of private favourites, whose influence on the weak minds and fickle dispositions of Princes, like those of this country, might otherwise be productive of danger to our interests. Such an argument amounts to an admission, that to produce the advantages in question the Minister must be a man of our own, exercising in effect the whole power of the State, under our steady support, against what we may call the whims and caprice, but what must obviously be the pleasure and wishes of the Prince. This could scarcely be so disguised, as that the Prince should not feel all the humiliation of his dependence, and his secret enmity must be the inevitable consequence.

98. If it be politic to have the Minister in our interest, how much more desirable would it be that the Prince should be attached to our alliance; and how is it possible that he can be so, if he feel our interference and encroachments thwarting his inclinations in every step?

99. Is attachment to our alliance to be obtained by any means from the Prince himself? Can we hope to excite in him a firm and operative persuasion of the identity of our interests with his own, and a consequent disposition to meet candidly the expression of our views and wishes? If the inspiring a Prince with these sentiments be practicable there can be no necessity for a Minister. But if we assume that there can be no attachment to our alliance; if neither a sense of the advantages attending it nor a fear of the consequences of our displeasure can be expected to produce a disposition to listen favourably to our suggestions; if a jealous hostility, and constant spirit of counteraction, be considered as the necessary attributes of a Native Prince's unfettered administration, then should we be justified in seeking to provide a remedy.

100. There is but one intermediate question between ~~the~~ decision. Are we to assume at once that such is the incorrigibility of every Native Prince's Prince's disposition, or are we to wait till overt acts shall have determined the point?

101. For my part, judging from the character of the present Vizier, I see no reason to think he would hazard the displeasure of our Government by pursuing a course of counteraction. On the contrary, I believe him to have the fullest conviction as to the identity of his interests with ours, and the necessity of seeking and following our guidance in every particular. He will certainly seek to obtain our assent to his own spontaneous inclinations; but this is natural, involves nothing reprehensible, and affords no ground for anticipating his perseverance in any scheme which he should find us disapprove. Since, therefore, it is his wish to conduct the Government himself, I see no reason why he should not be suffered to do so, until either his management betrays symptoms of the entire unaptness of the system he may pursue, or until we should have just occasion to question the sincerity of his disposition towards ourselves. Then will be time enough for us to offer such advice as the peculiar circumstances may require, and if necessary to procure the appointment of a fit and efficient Minister; but until such may be the case, I scarcely think we should be justified in thwarting his wishes.

102. When I recommended to the Nawaub Vizier that he should nominate a Minister, I had taken up with too little examination an object which I had found already urged upon his Excellency. The constant jealousy with which Saadut Alee received the suggestions of Major Baillie made the latter think that he should carry his points more readily were a Minister established who would consider propositions dispassionately. Under the unhappy estrangement which existed between Saadut Alee and the Resident, the intervention of a Minister was evidently desirable: the plan was thence strenuously pressed by Government, and I supported the measure which I found actually in negotiation. Since I have seen the state of matters at Lucknow the point appears to me of doubtful policy; at least it is of no material consequence.

103. Under such circumstances, what course should the British Resident pursue? He should obviously stand aloof, and keep himself entirely unconnected with any party. He must be ready to offer disinterested advice whenever his Excellency may solicit it, and his conduct should be so shaped as to encourage his Excellency's frequent recurrence to his counsel; but his suggestions should not be obtrusive. He must be careful to impress his Excellency with a conviction that he has no personal adherents to countenance, no dependants whose interests the measures he recommends may appear calculated to forward, to particularize no one set of men whose opinions or whose cause he might be represented as having exclusively espoused.

104. By such means a real confidence would, it is hoped, be established between the Vizier and the Resident, from which the happiest concert and unanimity of counsel would result; because there can essentially be no difference between our interest and that of the Nawaub Vizier, on any point worth contestation. A decision eligible for us on minor objects ought to be foregone rather than that he should be soured by pertinacious contradiction where his own feelings appear warmly engaged. A cheerful relaxation to meet his Excellency's wishes in such cases would make him more readily manageable on subjects of greater consequence. Judging from my own knowledge of the qualities and dispositions of the gentleman I have selected to succeed Major Baillie, I think I may anticipate the permanence of such an understanding between him and the present Vizier.

105. I would have the Resident always careful how he originates advice when it may not be solicited. If he observe any department of the State requiring a correction in its administration, it might be better that he should first submit a statement of the grounds of his entertaining such a notion, and obtain the sanction of the Governor-General in Council before he proceeds to break the subject to his Excellency. The advice should only be proffered unasked, without such authority, on occasions of importance not admitting of delay. The Resident's first obtaining the permission of the Governor-General in Council before coming forward with it, would impress his Excellency with a proper sense of the reserve and delicate consideration observed in matters which might be construed as encroaching on his independence. I am very far from wishing to fetter the Resident in his communications. Much must depend upon his personal character and the terms on which he may individually stand with the Vizier: besides, occasions may arise, in which a reference to the Presidency may be either inconvenient or improper. In those instances he must use his own discretion, and he may be confident of receiving that liberal support to which the high trust of his situation entitles him.

106. It will, of course, be his duty to keep himself well informed of every thing that is passing at the Court of Oude, directing his attention particularly to the effects of the administration on the body of the people, so as to be able to supply Government with correct and full information on a subject which will necessarily be at all times one of high interest with us.

107. The above are the general principles which should regulate the intercourse and connection of the British Resident with the Court of Oude, in the event of its being deemed unnecessary to insist on the appointment of another Minister. I am desirous, however, of hearing what the Council may think on this point; and my opinion is not so fixed on the expediency of having no Minister, as that I should not be ready to yield it, in the event of there being any more peculiar motive advanced for a contrary decision than what has suggested itself to me.

108. Should it eventually be deemed necessary to insist on the appointment of a successor to Agha Meer, we must depend on the Resident, in the first instance, for a full report on the present state of parties at Lucknow, so as to enable us to weigh carefully the character, qualifications, and circumstances in favour of each candidate. We should then have to fix with more precision the line of the Resident's future conduct with respect to the Vizier and the person who might ultimately be selected; but, at present, the preliminary question of whether or not we shall insist upon the appointment of a Naib to succeed Agha Meer, is obviously all that presses upon us.

109. In conclusion, it may be expected that I should offer some observations on the subject of the attempted reform, to which, in a great measure, the Vizier would seem to attribute a considerable confusion in his affairs. I have already expressed doubts whether the system, such as we enjoined it without modification, be suited to the condition of society in Oude, though I would not, without minuter observation, positively pronounce it inapplicable. It is possible that partiality on the one hand, or insidious design on the other, may have pushed into the trust of its execution men wholly unqualified for the duty: still it is more likely that a system devised upon the model of that pursued in our provinces should have failed in the territories of the Nawaub Vizier, from the want of a class of public functionaries of approved integrity, free from sordid views, to be accomplished at the expense of the country, and unwarpd by families or dependants whom they could be interested in aggrandizing. I should wish, however, before coming to a final determination on the propriety of persevering in this system or otherwise, to receive a full and comprehensive report on the subject from the Resident, whence I might judge what have really been the endeavours for its introduction, and in what degree any such endeavours may have been locally successful.

Enclosure.

To Major Baillie, &c. &c. &c.

My dear Baillie:

Having replied officially to your several despatches, and signified to you the Governor-General's instructions on such points adverted to in them as demanded immediate notice, I now proceed to state to you, by his Excellency's desire, some observations arising out of the perusal of those despatches which have been reserved for a private communication.

You

You will not consider these observations to imply any retraction of the approbation which his Lordship has conferred on your conduct. They principally refer to the future rather than the past; and when they do relate to the past, they are not intended to cast censure on you.

After so long an experience as you had of distrust on the part of Saadut Alee, it is perfectly natural for you to be gratified by a sense of your influence over the present Vizier; but you should thence, his Lordship observes, be on your guard not to let the sentiment carry you away so far as may hazard the permanence of Refaut-ood-Dowlah's amiable disposition. You must not suffer the confidence which he places in you to be worn out on minor objects. Importance, his Lordship observes, has been unavoidably attached by you to the arrangements for Hoosein Alee Khan and the family of Tuhseen Alee Khan on account of the urgency of our Government on these heads. His Lordship then does not cast any blame on you for leading the attention of Refaut-ood-Dowlah to those cases, yet he sincerely wishes that it had not been done. Although his Lordship felt himself obliged to uphold, to a certain point, what had been done by the preceding Government, and must therefore, in consistency, give his public approbation to the carrying those objects, yet his Lordship has no scruple in saying that he thinks the principle of our interference was erroneous. It amounts, in his Lordship's judgment, simply to this: that a servant of the Vizier's is to be recompensed, not according to his master's estimate of the man's fidelity towards him, but according to our appreciation of his services towards us; services which might have been repugnant to the feelings and interests of that master.

Enclosure in
Governor-General's
Minute of 3d
February 1816.

Revived as those claims were immediately on the accession of the present Vizier, they bore rather the semblance of conditions imposed upon him. Now although a legitimate advertence to our own position entitled us to secure to Refaut-ood-Dowlah the peaceable occupation of the musnud, it behoves us to shew that we did not take that step for the purpose of achieving petty ends, and in proportion to the magnitude of the obligation conferred on that Prince, his Lordship would be delicate as to every measure which might ostensibly detract from his independence with regard to internal Government.

His Lordship had occasion, not many months ago, to convey to the Government of Fort St. George instructions for the guidance of the Resident at Mysore in his intercourse with the Rajah. Although the circumstances are not the same, yet the general principle intended to be enforced by those instructions appears to be so applicable to your situation at Lucknow, that his Lordship has desired me to send you the enclosed paragraphs, and to recommend them to your earnest and deliberate attention.

The dignity of our own character, our good faith with regard to the unambiguous spirit of the treaty, and in no lesser degree our wisest policy, require, in his Lordship's judgment, that the Vizier should be left free from a counsel which must savour of dictation (especially in domestic concerns), unless when some object really essential may demand our intervention. What has just been stated refers to our future relations with the Vizier; for in all that was requisite for establishing the government of Refaut-ood-Dowlah, it was indispensable that you should take the decision on yourself.

That the Vizier should, in his present circumstances, spontaneously and unfeignedly wish to yield himself to your ability and experience, his Lordship cannot doubt; but it is to preserve that wish in him hereafter that we must labour. A coyness as to offering advice will be found by you the surest mode of obtaining the Vizier's confidential recurrence to you on every important occasion. There is a great distinction between that resort to one's opinion which is only made from formal deference, and that application to one's judgment which springs from a conviction of one's disinterestedness. The latter, devoid of the secret reservation which must attend the former, becomes a habit, and ensures willing acquiescence in every sentiment one would wish should be adopted.

I remain, &c.

To J. Adam, Esq., &c. &c. &c.

My dear Sir :

Till I read the letter from Major Baillie transmitted by you, the existence of such a man as Gocul Chund was unknown to me. Little as I could imagine that any officer in my military suite could have intercourse with a person of that description, I still thought it necessary to question the gentlemen, who all disavow their knowledge not only of him but of any other attendant on the fleet not actually attached to the boats. Such of the civil service as I am in the habit of seeing frequently have similarly been questioned by me and make the same answer. But had the case been that any of those individuals had been intimate with Gocul Chund, no suspicion could have rested on any one of them; because to no person whatever now with the fleet, except Mr. Ricketts and yourself, have I ever in the remotest manner mentioned the affairs of Oude. At Calcutta, the Members of Council alone knew my opinion. It is a subject which I could not have the most distant notion of discussing in any other manner than officially: the quotation, therefore, of my sentiments imputed to Gocul Chund is sheer extravagance. Now I will express to you frankly my conviction, that Major Baillie has not himself believed one word of the story. He has been spurring a free horse rather too hard. He finds the Nawaub at length tired of going at such a rate, especially when the incessant objections of interested persons throw doubt on the expediency of the measure, and he wishes to accredit any other reason for the Nawaub's present delays than his own want of tact in driving the man too sharply.

My opinions on the head of reform are on record in the letters addressed by me to the late Nawaub Vizier, and they are so explicitly stated, that the copies of those letters transmitted to the Resident can leave nothing doubtful on the subject. I believed, as I still believe, a reform in the administration of the revenues of Oude to be necessary. I had found a specific plan recommended to the Vizier by my predecessor. Of the real applicability of that plan to the country I could form no judgment; therefore I rested on the local knowledge of those by whom the plan was framed, and I urged the adoption of that specific reform as a system which had been found practically the best in our territories. We were not entitled, however, to dictate (a distinction which Major Baillie seems never to comprehend), but to advise; so that were there in that particular plan any thing humiliating to the personal feelings of the Vizier, it would be a gross violation of the precise terms and obvious good faith of the treaty, were we to subject the Vizier to it. I thence addressed to the Vizier a letter of a tenor to bring that question to a point, professing that, although the specific plan of reform had been recommended as the best which our own experience could enable us to offer, I did not wish to press it, if it contained any thing which the Vizier regarded as injurious to his dignity; and I requested he would, in that event, consult the Resident, and fashion a plan which might be more palatable to himself. All I required was that the plan should be efficient, warning the Vizier that it was his interest to make it so, it being my determination that the British troops should not be employed in supporting rapacity or oppression. This exposition appears to me strangely superfluous; yet since Major Baillie appeals to you for my opinion respecting the reform, I have thought it right to recapitulate the principle on which I have acted, and to state that it is the principle on which I mean to act.

Major Baillie, with an oblique indication of the necessity for his exerting a stronger degree of influence over the Vizier, hints at the possibility of his own relinquishment of the station when his successor may find it indispensable to exercise a more efficacious control over the Vizier's conduct. You may assure Major Baillie that I will not countenance in any other man, more than I would in him, the attempt to hold the Vizier in a state of subjugation. The behaviour of the Nawaub Vizier might become such as virtually to dissolve the existing treaties, and to place him in a situation where nothing but his own convenience and security, as contrasted with the interests of the British, could come into contemplation. In that possible (though I do not think it probable) juncture, another species of corrective than that which I have now mentioned must be enforced ; but as long as our relations with Oude shall continue on their present footing, I must consider the humanity, the justice, and the honour of the British Government strictly bound to preserve to the Nawaub Vizier that essential independence of internal administration and that respectability, which were secured to him by the pledge of British faith, when he surrendered the whole of his dominions to be modelled at our pleasure.

I have, &c.

To J. Baillie, Esq., Resident at Lucknow.

Dear Baillie :

Lord Moira has desired me to transmit to you the enclosed Persian paper, which was sent to his Lordship in a mysterious way by the circuitous Dák of Moradabad. The paper is so scurrilous and calumnious, that his Lordship was inclined to save you from the annoyance and trouble of reading it ; but, on the whole, he has conceived it to be better that you should be informed of what was thus brought to his notice, with a view to keep nothing concealed from you, and to enable you, if necessary, to trace the author. It professes to give an account of the present state of affairs at Lucknow, but which his Lordship is satisfied is totally unfounded in every point. There are, however, two or three alleged facts advanced, on which his Lordship would be glad to receive information from you, viz., respecting the birth, parentage, and education of Agha Meer, and his declared total incapacity for public business ; respecting the person appointed collector or Aumil of the district of Lucknow, as it is impossible to suppose that a child could ever have been nominated to that situation, in the manner asserted ; and respecting the person who conducts the duties of Aumil of Soaree, and the alleged alienation of a part of that pergunnah in Mokurreree in favour of Ulee Nuckee.

Enclosure.

Two things are requested of the gentlemen of illustrious dignity into whose hands the recital of our calamities may fall, first, that they will be kind enough to read the whole through carefully, and not be out of temper or displeased on account of its length ; secondly, that for the sake of God and the Prophet Jesus, they will be careful and observant, that when it may be translated into the English language for the information of the Governor-General, the import of a single word or construction may not be overlooked, as the ruin of the complainants may be the consequence, and in that case on the day of judgment the hand of the sufferers of the city of Lucknow will be on the garment of the translator (in demand of retribution) ; but let all the gentlemen study to ascertain exactly the true meaning of the whole, and they will receive of God an ample recompense.

It not having been thought proper to send this by Lucknow Dák, through fear of Ulee Nuckee ; it has, accordingly, been forwarded by a distant Dák. (It came viâ Moradabad.)

more especially is he indignant at the disrepute of so great a chieftain as that peer, son of a peer, descendant of peers, that noble son of a noble, descendant of nobles, the most noble of lords, the Nawaub Governor-General Lord Moira Behauder (may his glory increase), the rumour of whose arrival has for a long time raised hopes in the inhabitants of Hindoostan that they would obtain, through his means, every kind of retribution, justice, and prosperity. In the days when, by the good fortune of this devoted, his Lordship arrived at the city of Lucknow, he found the nobles of the city weeping and the poor of the city lamenting; and were the reason of this to be asked, the whole of the inhabitants of the city would answer with one voice in complaints against the Resident, and regret at the want of attention in such a Governor-General. In the judgment of your slave, that the Governor-General has not done justice; that he has not paid sufficient attention to the sufferings of the inhabitants of the city; that he has given power in all affairs to the Resident; and to such a Resident, who placing his sense of justice and of honour upon the shelf, and falling into the lusts of the brittle things of this world, has given himself into the hands of his Moonshee, Ulee Nuckee Khan, a man whose character is about to be set forth at length. That the Governor-General has done all this, is stamping in the page of history his own name as the source of all our sufferings. Does he not fear that the reputation of so illustrious a Governor, whose conduct and principles are celebrated and current over the seven climates (whole world), from Evan and Tooran even to Rami (Constantinople) and China, and which is in the habits of intercourse with all the kings of the earth, more especially in the time of so merciful and just a Governor, will be affected by our complaints. It cannot, therefore, be from any cause but a want of a proper information on the subject, that all this has been suffered to occur; nor can I understand upon what principle other illustrious gentlemen should have sacrificed the cause of justice to their personal regard for the Resident, notwithstanding our loud and incessant cries for retribution, and should not have brought the sufferings of this city to the notice of the Governor-General. I, an individual, now propose to bring them forward; and I entertain a confident hope that, agreeably to that innate regard for justice which is the characteristic of the English nation, and which has procured for them this extent of dominion, some gentlemen will, from a disinterested public spirit, impress the whole of this subject in all its bearings upon the particular notice of the said Governor of exalted dignity, and they will obtain a reward in this world and the next, both for themselves and for him who has from pure disinterested motives taken the trouble to draw up this paper.

The source of all our distress can only be traced to the coming amongst us of the dregs of Hindoostan, street wanderers and beggars, strangers to the principles of government, and to their being brought to the head of affairs; but more immediately is it to be traced to the blindness which appears to exist to the crooked policy of the Resident, which has raised such men to power, and brought ruin on the people of God. The neglect of the Governor-General when at this city has given additional confidence to these upstarts; and how can it be otherwise? but if such oppression is openly practised even when the Governor-General is in the neighbourhood, God only can tell what will happen when the Governor-General may be obliged to return to Calcutta, and with what injuries these upstarts will not then visit us. My sincere and faithful heart, on perceiving the sufferings of the inhabitants of this city, and becoming convinced that the blame which has attached to so great a Governor-General on their account is purely attributable to the wiles of the Resident, is desirous of giving information of the real state of the case. And of a truth, now that the Governor-General will have been informed of all, his sense of justice will leave him no choice but to visit the oppressors with befitting retribution.

Governor-General's
Minute,
1 Feb. 1816.

In the time of Lord Minto, the late Nawaub Saadut Alee Khan was much grieved and distressed at the oppressions committed by the Resident under the support of Mr. Edmonstone. This is known to every gentleman and to the world at large, and these vexations were bringing him near his end, when he was sustained for a short time by hearing of the intention of Lord Moira to visit Lucknow in person; but of a sudden, from the changeable revolutions of heaven, the measure of the life of that traveller on the road to eternity became full to the brim with the mortal poison of death, and on the 22d of Rujeeb, 1229 of the Hijjree, notwithstanding that his heart was full of a thousand hopes, his former vexations so bore him down, that he made the clay tenement of his existence a house of mourning (that is he died). It was an act which calls for justice, that on the death of so illustrious a Vizier, neither the Resident nor any of the English gentlemen attended the bier of the deceased or performed the dues of mourning. Beyond this would have been hypocrisy; but the Resident finding he was nearer his object in consequence, with every appearance of joy and conviviality, in the very place where the coffin of the deceased was lying, ate his breakfast and drank his tea, and in another the Nawaub Ghazee-ood-Deen Hyder Khan, next heir to the deceased, was seated on the musnud of the Vezârut. At this very time the Resident, by means of Agha Meer, now called Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, and through the mediation of Ulee Nuckee his Moonshee, plundered lacs of rupees in money and goods, and he also took the opportunity to open a drawer of the table and got possession of the book which had been prepared by the deceased Vizier containing all the crimes of the Resident, in order that they might be laid open to the Governor-General on his arrival. The Nawaub Ghazee-ood-Deen Hyder Khan having perceived that his father's affairs had been ruined by the hands of the same Resident, was most fearful for himself from a continuation of the same injurious conduct: He therefore put up with all that was going on from helplessness; but as the reported approach of the Governor-General gave him strength and confidence, he was induced to open his mind to him at Cawnpore and at Lucknow. All his accusations, however, came to nothing. At that time, on the very night of one of the communications, Moonshee Ulee Nuckee sent for Agha Meer and said to him: "Now is your time, you may now get the neabut from the favour of the Resident, and you will also place him under infinite obligations: you will not have such another opportunity. You have only to do what the Resident now bids you. Go, then, to the Vizier, and say to him, 'You are a fool and out of your senses. You have acted very wrong in bringing accusations against the Resident. Do you not know that it is in the regulations of the English Government that the Council should remove any one that accuses the Resident, for it is a breach of the treaty, inasmuch that the Vizier Ulee was put off the musnud for this very fault in having brought complaints against Mr. Resident Lumsden. The Governor-General has now determined to seat Shums-ood-Dowlah upon the musnud, and has written to Council on the subject, and the Council are in the Resident's interest, of which their support in the time of the late Vizier is sufficient proof.'" Agha Meer and Ulee Nuckee having before been on good terms, and indeed like father and son, Agha Meer was persuaded by the Moonshee, and went and told the Vizier just what he had been directed. The Vizier was disturbed and not in his right senses, so he believed it all. Agha Meer and Ulee Nuckee immediately mounted an elephant together and went straight to Beebepoor, where the Resident was, and making him acquainted with all the circumstances prepared a draft of a razee-namah, to the tenor of which a deed was to be brought in the writing of the Vizier. Agha Meer accordingly returned to the Vizier's presence, and having caused the deed to be written in the prescribed form according to the draft, carried it to the Resident, and it was by his advice and that of Ulee Nuckee that Captain McLeod and the other English gentlemen were caused to be turned out with disgrace and ignominy, and were ~~all~~ ^{ordered} to give back even any little articles which the late Nawaub ~~had~~ ^{gave} them with in token of his favour towards them, and that that too in a most disreputable manner, to the scandal and disgust of all, whether noble or otherwise. Agha Meer and Ulee Nuckee boasted of this aloud in public, saying "Look how degraded and debased I have rendered the English, even when the Governor-General is on the spot; and had the Vizier delayed one instant signing the razee-namah, you would have seen him in the state that Vizer Ulee is now. You see that the Governor-General has no help for it but to be guided by the Resident's judgment." On hearing this from Ulee Nuckee, every thing appeared to be the reverse of the usual principles of English Government (and no one believed it at the time); until at last, as was promised by the Moonshee, Agha Meer was invested with the neābut, and the Governor-General took his departure towards the west. In this plan it is necessary that the observer of the state of this ruined neābut, and of those who are connected with it, should bear at the same time the Governor-General's excellent qualities in constant recollection.

The badness of the Resident's administration, and the want of attention on the part of the Governor-General, has been the support of all this confusion: Hence have the sufferings of the people of God, the mismanagement of the affairs of the Vezārut, and the squandering of treasure and property collected with the labour and care of years, become the talk of the intelligent of all countries. Be it known, that Agha Meer (now called Moatumud-ood Dowlah Mookhtaur-ool-Moolk Syud Mohummud Khan Behauder Zeighum Jung) is the son of Mohummud Nuckee: The same Mohummud Nuckee who was for years a beggar in the streets of Lucknow; and when the nobles of the country used to distribute alms, this Mohummud Nuckee would rush forward importunately before the rest of the Fakeers to seize his pittance, and for every pice he would be turbulent and noisy and would be every where thumped and kicked: the people of Lucknow have seen this with their own eyes. It is not to be supposed that a man in such a situation could have the means of marrying; but be a man a Fakeer, he is not on that account without the lusts of the flesh, so the said Mohummud Nuckee took to himself a wretched woman of no character, who lived by begging here and there a few fuloos. As it happened a daughter was born from this said woman to some man with whom she had before had connection, such a child as they call in Persian a madur huloo; and after some months more another child was born of her to Mohummud Nuckee, and that was this Agha Meer. The knowing ones differ on this point: some say Mohummud is the undisputed father, others again that the real father is unknown; but there is no doubt the child was born while the mother was in the keeping of Mohummud Nuckee. In short, until the auspicious age of Agha Meer reached the period of fifteen years he was a wanderer in the streets, and attached himself to the class of labourers employed in building and repairing houses for men of substance. At the time when the Vezārut of Asuf-ood-Dowlah descended to his son Saadut Alee Khan, Ghazee-ood-Deen Hyder Khan Behauder came with his father from Benares, and took up his residence in Muhtab Bagh, in the palace built by Asuf-ood-Dowlah deceased, enjoying the almonership to the Syyuds in distress, as is customary in this Government for the heir apparent. A man named Merza Hyder Ulee of Lucknow, taking compassion on the apparent distress of Mohummud Nuckee, the father of this Agha Meer, assigned for his maintenance a pension of five rupees per month out of the fund for distressed Syyuds; and since he was himself very old, this Agha Meer, his son, used to come to the present Vizier, then heir apparent, to receive his father's pension of five rupees. By degrees he got himself enrolled amongst the Khidmutgars; and from this may be traced his rise and present elevation. In course of time the treasuries which for ages this Government had been employed in filling became entrusted to the Prince Ghazee-ood-Deen Hyder. Agha Meer kept the keys of the treasuries for his master, and embezzling the treasure secretly diverted the public resources of the State to his own private expenses, giving a part to Ulee Nuckee the Moonshee, in the hope of winning over him by this means. Now the Nawaub Ghazee-ood-Den Hyder of the Vezārut, and as Agha Meer had before been

terms with Ulee Nuckee, particularly in the course of the embezzlement above-mentioned, they now also are in such way in league together that they preserve the good-will and confidence of the Resident, as has indeed before been hinted. Besides all this, since the present Vizier was foiled in his wishes, Agha Meer having obtained the neābut by the Resident's means for having brought the razee-namah with the Vizier's seal, and having been invested with the khillat of the situation, now rules with arbitrary power in the affairs of the Vezārut. But those who are about the durbar in the present times see enough to convince them that Ulee Nuckee Moonshee is in truth the absolute master of all, and has the power of loosing and binding in all affairs, whether general or particular. Agha Meer, notwithstanding his ostensible neābut, spends every day at the house of the Moonshee and does nothing without consulting him. In return, the Moonshee goes to the house of Agha Meer, and enjoys with him the entertainment of nautching, &c. Hundreds of acts of oppression, however, are daily committed by Agha Meer in the course of his transaction of business. A few examples shall be stated. First, he has caused to be dug up the houses of hundreds of persons, noble and otherwise, that the materials may be employed in building a palace for himself. The furniture of these houses is left a prey to all the loochas of the city, and not a rupee is paid for any thing. The poor, whose houses he has destroyed, have been thrown upon the world in their wretchedness. Also by means of Roshun Ulee (son of that Madur Huloo, daughter of the mother of Agha Meer, who is now known as his sister), under pretence of mending and making roads, he has knocked down thousands of houses, and many of the muhls (wards) of the city of Lucknow have been deserted in consequence. Agha Meer himself spends his nights and days in drinking and in the company of women of the bazar. The administration of affairs exhibits symptoms of this. The land revenues of the Vizier's Government amount to one crore and forty lacs of rupees; but though the year is approaching its end, one-fourth of this amount has not been collected, neither is there any one who looks to the settlement of the country or to the accounts of the revenue. But what excites yet greater wonder and scandal is, that in the house of Agha Meer, which is contiguous to that of the Resident, you hear nothing all day but the sound of the drum and the voices of singers from the bazar, with the rioting of the loochas of the city, the friends and companions of Agha Meer; and the Resident, notwithstanding that he has delicate nerves, as indeed is usual with the English, encourages this riot. Indeed Ulee Nuckee, though seventy years of age, is a party in the debauches. The disrepute and scandal attending such transactions are not unknown to men of undertaking. Ten thousand rupees a month is the private salary of Agha Meer; what further he requires he takes from the public treasury of the government without restraint, and applies to his own purposes. In these days some lacs of rupees and many strings of pearls, besides other jewels and wearing apparel, have been embezzled from the public treasuries of the Vezārut; and one day, when he was called to account for this by the Vizier, he said it was necessary for the proper management of affairs that he should keep these things by him; and although the Vizier is aware that Agha Meer divides the whole with Ulee Nuckee, still he is obliged to remain silent and wink at it, through fear of the Resident and from want of attention in the Governor-General, as before experienced. From pure helplessness, being reduced to the situation of one out of his senses and without a will of his own, the Vizier has taken to eating bong night and day, thus verifying the moral of this stanza:

“ Oh king! from so much wine, what fruit can be expected ?

“ From such infinite drunkenness what fruit can be expected ?

“ The king is drunk, the world is ruined,

“ Fools surround him on every side :

“ From such confusion what fruit can be expected ?”

The whole territories of the Vezārut have been divided into six Zillahs. The first, the Shahjahanpore, the jumma of which has been fixed at thirty lacs of rupees, the son of Agha Meer, has been selected to make the collections of it, the age of the said collector being at the present moment two years. He is the son of a prostitute by profession, and it is by no means certain that Agha Meer is his real father, as she is a woman of the bazar and has never been married to him. Agha Alee, the said collector, is still at the breast, and cannot distinguish between his mother's milk and the salary of 2,000 rupees assigned for his maintenance. Weigh this in your mind, ye of acute perception. The second Zillah is Sandee and the district of Shah Rah, &c. with the jumma or assessment of thirty-five lacs of rupees. This the Resident has assigned to his own Moonshee for his personal benefit. The nominal collector of it, Kootub-ood-deen, the Moonshee's nephew, never in the course of his life had more than thirty rupees per month allowed him by Ulee Nuckee; but now that every thing belonged to the Vezārut is exposed to every sort of plunder, and the said nephew nominally is allowed a salary of 2,000 rupees, besides ten per cent. on the collections of the Zillah, he gets for his personal salary and emoluments 100 rupees a month and no more: the rest is all enjoyed by Moonshee Ulee Nuckee, under the countenance and support of the Resident himself. The oppressions also which the Moonshee has committed on the Chowdries of Sandee, and the circumstances of his knocking down all their houses, are well known to the officers of the Governor-General. The object of my representation is this: that alas! the Vezārut, with all its splendour, high reputation, and with such stores of treasure, should come to ruin in the time of so noble a Governor-General; that the sufferers of the city should experience misery and oppression and no one listen to their cries.

“ How can you hear the cries of supplicants for redress: you have dropt “ towards the universe the bed-curtains of sleep. Sleep so that the cry of “ distress may reach your ears, whenever it may be raised by a supplicant for “ justice.”

The circumstances under which Dhoomee Beg, the Cutwal, poisoned himself through dread of Agha Meer, the confiscation of his house and property without any legal right, to the ruin of all his heirs and relicts, who have indeed been since imprisoned, all which has been done by Agha Meer without any interference of the Resident to procure justice: God knows upon whose neck will be the weight of these crimes.

This humble supplicant has a question to put to the Resident, to which I call upon him, in the name of God and the Prophet Jesus, to give a just and true answer: whether the appointment of Agha Meer to the nabut, and the fixing of his salary at 10,000 rupees a month, besides what he embezzles from the public treasuries and the bribes he extorts from the people of the city by threats of knocking down their houses; whether the appointment of his son and infant to the collectorship with a salary of 2,000 rupees; whether the placing so low a character over the heads of all the nobles of the city and giving him authority over them, is not bringing ruin upon the country and confusion into all the affairs of the Vezārut? What other consequence can result from it, but that the house of the late Vizier will be plundered and the people of Hindoostan subjected to degradation and ignominy, while your family and fortunes and those of your Moonshee are enriched from the spoils? This I ask of the Resident and of the Governor-General, whose glory and splendour are so transcendent. I ask him how he can rest contented when his reputation is taxed with all this? Although the Governor-General is no way a sharer in the stain of those advantages which the Resident obtains, but on the contrary is more disinterested, magnanimous, and dignified than any Governor-General who yet has come to Hindoostan, still why does he subject himself to the imputation of palpable neglect, and act entirely on the Resident's representations? For God's sake let him cause them to be investigated and confirmed by some gentleman who has some sense of religion and justice; and since Secid Peshaud, the Ukhbar Navees, has the orders of the Resident not to report as they actually are, should any credit attach to the representation of this, let a man be sent privately, and one entitled to the affairs of the city as they are, so that its state of ruin be made known, as well as all the unworthy acts of his keeping company with all the loochas of the bazar, his going about the streets on foot and giving gross abuse to all the chiefs and most respectable men of the city, complaint of which being made to the Resident he forbid its being noticed in the Ukhbars, lest it should reach the ears of the Governor-General. For all this every one knows how much the Resident is abused and complained against. How excellent is that saying :—" Let not the crown and throne adorn every one. There needs but one king of auspicious fortune, on whom the shadow of the Almighty may have fallen, and whose conversation may not be without wisdom."

Now, however, it has been given out that this Naib, with all this weight of infamy, of dishonour, and of oppression upon him, is about to go to the presence of the Governor-General, through the management of the Resident, and he is accordingly making further embezzlements from the public treasury on the plea of its being necessary to prepare for his appearance in due splendour; and in this, also, is he assisted and countenanced by the Resident, who wishes him to make an appearance equal to that of Hyder Beg Khan when he went to meet the Governor-General Marquess Cornwallis, and he himself expects to obtain equal honour, and to have his jagier confirmed in the same manner. He has several objects in this mission. First, to get the neābut in perpetuity and complete independence; second, the assignment of jagiers; third, to secure the continuance of Ulee Nuckee's concern in the Government, let who will be appointed Resident; fourth, that he may at least secure his continuance until the Resident may resign his situation. These are the Naib's objects in going to Futtygurh. But it is requested of the Governor-General, in the name of God, that he will not suffer the affairs of the hills to occupy his attention so much as to keep all other affairs from his mind. But it is in justice necessary that he should not act implicitly on the representations of the Resident, to the sacrifice of his own innate judgment. Let him observe how base is the Naib of the Vezārut, and from what parents he is descended; that he was brought up in beggary, and though now raised to the high dignity of the neābut, his innate baseness shows itself in all his actions. To raise to an equality with the nobles of Hindoostan, and to place in authority over them a low fellow who used to feel constantly the smart of the blows and slippers of the Vizier, (insomuch that this was the usual treatment he met with), is to give offence and disgust to all the really noble, and to subject all that immense wealth, which is the property of the community, to the profligate waste of so low a fellow, without any pretensions from former services, or present qualifications. On what principles can this be justified? Lastly, this Naib and Moonshee Ulee Nuckee, who has become, as it were, a tender father to the Naib, said in public durbar, that the Governor-General had need of much money on account of the hill war at present waging. " Whatever he may need I will furnish him from the Vezārut treasury: and though the fortunes of the Vezārut should be ruined, I will nevertheless have what I want, so that I may secure the Resident in my favour; and as he is so, the Governor-General must necessarily come into my views, nor could there be for me a more propitious moment than the present." Alas! that so low a fellow should sit with such a Governor-General on a footing of equality; that he should talk so sillily, and other Sahebs of high spirit should bear it, and prevent true reports of all from reaching the Governor-General's ears.

This is a sketch of the present state of the neābut. Listen a little to an account of the Naib's connections, for on no side are agents of oppression wanting. The chief of them is Roshun or Buwahr Ulee, son of that Madur Huloo, daughter of the mother of Agha Meer, born in the house of Mohummud Nuckee. This Roshun Ulee availing himself of the power and influence of his pretended uncle, commits all kinds of oppressions in the city and destroys houses that have stood for hundreds of years, the property of the nobles and other of the city. This man goes amongst the people by the title of Suruk. Suruk-ool-Moolk Boom Jung (viz. the Suruk of the State, the owl of war). At last, however, the Suruk was ordered by an order from the Vizier, after an angry dispute, to be stuck up, by which means they at last reached reached his cars. Not however till he had taken thousands of rupees in bribes, and he then took credit to himself for having procured the suspension of his doings. This man has dealings night and day with the women of the bazar, and even goes to their houses. Another of the Naib's people is one Usud Ulee, whose father used to keep a perfumer's shop at Jounpore; he is of the Kimdhu tribe, and left Jounpore about twenty years ago to become a street wanderer at Lucknow. For some time, indeed, he practised his villainies in the adawlut of Lucknow as Vakeel but was turned out by the late Vizier, who was satisfied of his unfitness and misconduct. Now, under the support of Moatumud-ood-Dowlah, whose power is absolute in the courts, he has got himself called judge, and avails himself of the situation to plunder the city. He abuses grossly, even to their faces, Moolvee Juhoor Ollah, Moolvee Wullee, and the other members of the Court, who are of respectable families; nor does any one dare to open his mouth (in their favour) through fear of the Resident Behauder. There is also one Ruhmut Ulee, formerly a Mohurrer of the dewannee court of Lucknow, but turned out for misconduct by the late Nawaub Vizier, who has been appointed Mooftee in these times by the said Usud Ulee, though neither a man of learning nor descended of men of learning. Alas! for these times, that such is the state of the Vezārut! that such is the way with the Governor-General's glory! that such is the admirable character of the Resident for integrity and trustworthiness! But how can Kulpee escape from ruin, when Mullan Muddun (the saint) keeps a ginshop (applied apparently to the Resident).

The whole of the umlah are of the same description as the above, that is, all those who have obtained their situations, through the Naib and Moonshee Ulee Nuckee. Since they have come into power, in the affairs of the Vezārut, only loochas and street-wanderers have been promoted. Let the Governor-General send for them and judge of them by trial in his own presence, when the sincerity of this communication will be appreciated. The head and leader of all this confusion, the chief of this band of ragamuffins, is that Ulee Nuckee, who by the countenance and support of the Resident has set all this in motion. The title with which he has been honoured is Mussulleh-ood-Dowlah. The translator of which has only to insert a few nooktas (points) when the real import of his name will be discovered.

This humble suppliant has represented these things at so much length, in order that the gentlemen of just principles may gather from the whole some slight idea of what is passing. The said Moonshee was for a long time in a state of distress, but by playing the game of cunning and deceit, in which he is of a truth most expert, he has been brought by the revolutions of fortune to a pitch whence every thing is at his beck. The Resident has confided every thing to him, insomuch that those people of respectability and high family who were before acquainted with the Resident and enjoyed his friendship and counsel, have lately been kept away by the unworthy conduct of the Moonshees into whose hands the whole authority of the Vezārut has descended. His obtaining the whole Zillah of Sandee, with its settlement of thirty-five lacs of rupees, has before been mentioned: of this he has taken off four hundred villages and got himself an istemrarie tenure, at a jumma much below the rate of former years, causing himself to be acknowledged Zemindar of this tract, and he has turned out those he found in found in possession and pulled down their houses. This man has reached the venerable age of seventy years, notwithstanding which he has lately seized and enjoyed by force a young girl of the labouring class, daughter of a Bildar, who had come to Lucknow for employment.* The father and mother of the girl went to the Resident to complain, but the Resident said nothing to the Moonshee, but ordered the complainants to be turned out. What power would the Nawaub Vizier have to grant redress? He dare not breathe through fear of the Resident. The Moonshee has also knocked down hundreds of houses contiguous to his own, in in order to make use of the materials in enlarging it; and notwithstanding that all these houses are close to the Residency, (nothing is said to him). In short, it only remains for the Governor-General to exercise his sound judgment and high authority, to ascertain the fitness of the Naib, and to redress the wrongs he has committed; and since the Governor-General has given over to such people unbridled authority, and with his eyes open taken upon himself all the ill repute which attaches to such conduct, the inhabitants of the city of Lucknow have been able to account for it in no way but by attributing it all to the wiles of the Resident. First, the Resident causes the Vizier to understand, that if he does the slightest thing contrary to his wishes he will have Shums-ood-Dowlah raised to the musnud in his room. Then he says to Agha Meer, "Were you not at Khidmutgar before I raised you to the rank you now hold? In the event of any opposition I will again reduce you to your original state." Then he writes to the Governor-General that the Vizier is a fool, and if affairs go on well it is only through the management of Agha Meer assisted by Moonshee Ulee Nuckee, both of whom are devoted to the English Government. (He writes also) That the Vizier is not displeased at any thing that passes. In short, there has been a wonderful exhibition of juggling and slight-of-hand tricks.

Since the Governor-General has been made acquainted with all this chicanery, and still out of regard for the Resident does not exercise his own judgment in the discrimination of the true from the false, he has on that account incurred the imputation of neglect amongst the people of this Government. Your slave, who is the sincere well-wisher (of the English Government), has forwarded this representation, after verifying every thing he has stated by enquiries amongst those who have access to the Resident's office and from the Vizier's private companions; and he affirms that the Vizier holds Agha Meer in complete detestation as well as the Resident's pride, and that though he did express something of the sort to the Governor-General, that nevertheless he had no real desire that the English gentlemen should be turned out; but they were so, and he dares not open his mouth through fear of Shums-ood-Dowlah's being placed on the musnud in his room. He however is, night and day, sighing and weeping at the ruin that has come upon his family and fortunes, and at the tyranny exercised on the people of the city by their oppressors. He passes every day in fear and trembling for his own honour, much less has he the means of affording redress. If you do not give us redress, the day of universal retribution will come. The dominions of the Vezārut are subject to the control of the Governor-General; why then has he placed in authority those few (pajees) low fellows, and why does he suffer the public wealth to be thus wasted? Let him take the country under his own dominion; the Vizier could not say a word in opposition: but if, as is more agreeable to the principles of English government and to justice, it be thought more proper to observe treaties and keep promises, in such case, it cannot be just to suffer the fortunes of the Vezārut to go to ruin in this manner, and that too in the time of so just a Government, or that the treasure which has been years in accumulating, should thus be wasted. It is, of a truth, all your own; but it is far from good policy or wisdom, to suffer yourself and the other gentlemen of high dignity to fall under the reproach of neglect and inattention. The writer of this is altogether free from all connection with the affairs of this Government, and has made this representation merely from a disinterested regard, and from a desire to prevent these creatures of tyranny from bringing the glory of the English Government into disrepute through the whole world.

I have loved to you information of things exactly as they are.

To C. M. Ricketts, Esq., &c. &c. &c.

Dear Ricketts:

I have received your despatch of the 6th instant, and I am highly sensible of the kindness and liberality of the motive which induced Lord Moira to direct this anonymous paper to be sent to me. A production very nearly the same, except in so far as my name is concerned, was stuck up against a wall in Lucknow several months ago, and his Excellency the Vizier offered a large reward to the author if he would come forward and avow it.

The imputations against me are certainly quite novel, though as a continuation of the proceedings of October last they are not much to be wondered at.

Regarding the birth and education of the Minister, and the circumstances of his appointment to office, the best information I can offer is contained in the enclosed extracts from the rough draft of a narrative of the memorable occurrences of October, which I have lately been engaged in compiling, and which I hope soon to submit to Lord Moira in official form.

The nominal collector of Zillah Lucknow is certainly what the anonymous author states him to be, or nearly so. He is a boy of three or four years of age, I understand. It would be strange, indeed, if among so many falsehoods and fabrications, a few circumstances were not to be found that have some foundation in fact. The true circumstances of this case are as follow: On the division of the country into Zillahs, the Vizier very naturally gave the patronage of one Zillah each to the Minister and Dewan, knowing of course that they could not be holden in their own names nor the duties discharged by themselves. The Minister being himself the naib of a boy, very naturally gave the name of his only son for his office, and recommended for the duties of the station, as his son's Naib, Sheikh Emām Bukhsh, an efficient revenue officer, who was put in nomination, as you know, for the high office of Minister by his Excellency, at the suggestion of the Sheikh's friend, Mr. Clarke. The duties of collector, &c. of Zillah Lucknow are accordingly performed, and I believe very well performed, by Sheikh Emām Bukhsh, as the Naib of Agha Alee; a name that I first heard of when I received the letter from the Vizier, a translation of which I submitted in my letter to Mr. Adam of the 8th April last. Lord Moira is doubtless aware, that his Lordship's explicit instructions preclude any interference on my part in the appointment of the Vizier's officers; and, in fact, I know nothing of these matters but by the reports contained in the akhbar, and occasional communications from the Vizier which he makes to me now-a-days very rarely.

The nominal and actual Zillahdar of Sandee, &c. is Syyud Kootub-ood-Deen Hoosein, a near relation of my old Moonshee (another perverted truth in the anonymous paper), who was for ten years a Tuhseeldar of the highest reputation in Bundelcund, as is well known to the Board of Commissioners, and particularly to Sir Edward Colebrooke, who relieved Kootub-ood-Deen from his duties in Bundelcund, at my particular request, about a year ago. The late Vizier, when he agreed to the reform, requested me to recommend to him some able and upright revenue officers acquainted with our regulations, and this person was one of a few (your acquaintance Taj-ood-Deen among the number) whom I named to his Excellency on that occasion. He came over about a year ago, and was appointed Ameen of the pergunnah of Sandee, in which situation he conducted himself so much to the satisfaction of the Vizier and of Colonel Burrell, whose reports are on record in my despatches to Mr. Adam, that his Excellency raised him in December last to the office of Zillahdar, and announced this appointment and the cause of it, as above stated, to me. The annual revenue of his district for last year was sixteen lacs of rupees (not this as the anonymous author has stated), of which fifteen only were realized, as I understand from Rajah Dya-Krishen that the revenue has been raised by Kootub-ood-Deen this year to nearly eighteen lacs, with universal satisfaction of the landholders.

My old Moonshee got his zemindary in Sandee of Lord Minto, as you know; and the pre-exceedingly kind to the Moonshee, granted

It is to be regretted, I think, that you did not report the circumstance of the appointment of the Minister's child to the important office of Zillahdar of the district of Barahat, as your doing so would have given his Lordship an opportunity, had he chosen, of communicating his sentiments on the subject to the Nawaub. It is, however, that non-interference, generally speaking, has been recommended by the Government of his Excellency's officers: but may not some distinction be made in the case relating to the reform, which was rather an affair of the Nawaub, and on which he looked to receiving advice from the British? It is needless to observe that its success will depend on the best system to be introduced and to the best selection of instruments, and that on general principles ciples the same confidence cannot be reposed in a deputy as in a person specifically appointed at the head of an office.

The circumstances mentioned by you of the grant of an istemrarie, or perpetual lease of an estate, in the pergunnah of Sandee to Ulee Nuckee, and of the appointment of his near relation to the office of Zillahdar in that pergunnah, will be noticed to you by Adam, I believe, in a letter respecting the claims of Imteaz Alee and others against Ulee Nuckee.

You remark that the agents of Hukeem Mehdee, of Akbur Alee, and of Imteaz Alee have long been in attendance at Futtygurh, though you are at a loss to know why they have been encouraged. Of the first I know nothing, and nearly as little of the second, save that he presented petitions which were forwarded to you, and that, on the receipt of your answer, he was told that nothing could be done in the case by his Lordship. With respect to Imteaz Alee, his petition was also forwarded to you, and a reference has been made to the proceedings to which you referred. The result will be communicated to you by Adam, agreeably to his Lordship's orders, as above stated.

Many thanks for your suggestion on the question of recompense to Home: it relieved his Lordship from embarrassment, and enabled Lady Loudon to settle with Home. The picture, therefore, is, I now hope, in his Excellency's possession.

Political Department.

1. Had you any acquaintance with the present Nawaub Vizier, Refaut-ood-Dowlah, previous to his coming to visit the Governor-General at Cawnpore?

I have been acquainted with the present Nawaub Vizier since Sir George Nugent's visit to Lucknow in 1812.

2. When you, at Cawnpore, asked Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie's permission to wait upon the Nawaub Vizier, was it a private audience that you requested, or did you only desire leave to pay your respects to his Excellency in public?

I asked Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie's permission to wait on the Nawaub Vizier, in consequence of a personal invitation to breakfast which his Excellency gave me when returning from his first visit to the Governor-General. I neither solicited, nor had I any private audience or conversation whatever with the Nawaub Vizier.

3. Were there, at that period, shawls or jewellery sent to your house, either antecedently or subsequently to the visit paid by you to his Excellency?

After breakfast some trays containing three pieces of shawls and a surpeash of false stones were laid before me. On my expressing my wish to take only one pair of shawls, the gentlemen of his Excellency's family said it was unusual for any one to decline accepting such presents, and that it would particularly displease the Nawaub were I to do so, as he had often to them great friendship for me and surpeash were my house. They were at Lucknow.

4. On the occasion upon which you took Captain McRa with you to breakfast at the palace at Lucknow, had you any invitation from the Nawaub Vizier?

I had no invitation from the Nawaub Vizier.

5. Had

5. Had you any reason to expect such an invitation, or did you from any circumstances expect it?

6. Had you any deputation from the Governor-General, or from any other person, to seek that interview?

7. Had you any leave or encouragement from the Governor-General to go to the Nawaub Vizier on that occasion, other than the assent which might be implied by his not objecting, when you asked whether you might take Captain McRa with you?

8. What was the precise instruction relative to the proposed interview which the Governor-General gave to you, when you afforded him the opportunity of speaking on it by your application respecting Captain McRa?

9. When you accepted the Vizier's invitation, had you any expectation of a private audience of his Excellency?

10. Was the private audience which the Nawaub Vizier gave you on that occasion solicited by you, or was it spontaneous on the part of his Excellency?

11. Did the conversation regarding Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie in that audience originate with you, or was the subject introduced by the Nawaub Vizier?

12. What was the tenor of the Nawaub Vizier's language on that occasion?

13. Did Captain McLeod or Mr. Clarke hint to you previously any by you, in the event of their appealing to you?

ral's breakfast-table. I accepted the invitation on the express condition that his Excellency was not to offer me any presents.

I had no further reason to expect such an invitation, than what might arise from my being personally acquainted with him.

I had no deputation from the Governor-General, or from any other person, to seek that interview.

I had no leave or encouragement from the Governor-General to go to the Nawaub Vizier on that occasion, other than the assent implied by his not objecting when I asked whether I might take Captain McRa with me.

The Governor-General instructed me to ask the Nawaub Vizier, as if from myself, which of the two surgeons it was his Excellency's wish to have attached to him. The Governor-General particularly instructed me not to let it be supposed that he had spoken to me on the subject. I was also, in the event of the Nawaub Vizier's proposing to make up carriages for the Governor-General's cheetahs, to decline the offer.

I had no expectation whatever of a private audience when I accepted the Vizier's invitation.

The private audience was spontaneous on the part of his Excellency.

The subject was introduced by the Nawaub Vizier.

The oppression he suffered from Mirza Jāfer and his sons.

Neither Captain McLeod or Mr. Clarke ever hinted to me that the Nawaub would appeal to me, neither did either of them suggest any tone I was to hold in the event of the Vizier's doing so.

To Lieutenant-Colonel Baillie, &c. &c. &c.

Sir :

The attention of the Governor-General having been drawn anew to that despatch for the impropriety of which you were removed from your situation, two circumstances have struck his Excellency as requiring elucidation : I am accordingly directed to require your answers to the points.

In paragraph 22 you state that the accounts of Mehdee Alee Khan exhibit charges of presents made to certain English gentlemen and ladies at Calcutta : you will please to name the individuals stated to have received such presents.

In the postscript you have advanced that Agha Meer was undermined in the confidence of his master the Nawaub Vizier by the representations of native emissaries in the suite of the Governor-General. You will please to point out the individuals to whom you allude.

Sir :

1. I received your letter, dated the 28th instant, at a late hour of yesterday evening, after I had come on board the Minerva ; but having few of my papers at hand, I am unable at this moment to afford to you so particular an explanation as I could wish of the two points which you have referred to me by order of the Right Honourable the Governor-General.

2. To the best of my recollection and belief, the principal persons who were mentioned in the accounts of Hukeem Mehdee Alee Khan, as noticed in the twenty-second paragraph of my narrative, were the Honourable Lady Hood and General Gillespie, or some other general officer whose name I did not easily make out.

3. The emissaries in the suite of the Governor-General, referred to in the postscript of my narrative, were an agent on the part of Hukeem Mehdee, another on the part of Akbur Alee Khan, whose names I do not recollect, and his Excellency the Vizier's newswriters in attendance on the Governor-General, controlled by Anghun Loll, son of the late Ruttun Chund, and by the Mussulman Darogha of the Kote Gushtee Akhbār, whose name I have at this instant forgotten, but whose ingratitude and enmity to Agha Meer render him very notorious at Lucknow.

I have, &c.

P.S. It has just occurred to me to refer you to a private letter which I recollect my having written to yourself, in answer to a letter from you dated the 6th of June last, in which some notice must have been taken of the emissaries from Lucknow in your suite. My private letters of the same time to Mr. Adam and Mr. Swinton were probably fuller than those to you, and those gentlemen can inform his Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor-General of my sentiments, as explained to them, regarding the intrigues of the natives at Futtygurh and in the capital of Oude.

Enclosure No. 2, in Bengal Political Letter, dated 30th March 1816.

MINUTE of MR. EDMONSTONE.

As the general subject of the Right Honourable the Governor-General's Minute, containing his Lordship's remarks and explanations in Colonel Baillie's narrative of transactions at Lucknow is : Members of Council can properly record an opinion that it is not to enter into any discussion of it ; but, as the paragraphs from 82 to 84 of that Minute appear to principles of action with respect to the state of Oude of a nature deeply affecting the character of that administration, I am confident that his Lordship will not only excuse but approve of my bringing under his notice recorded documents, in which the principles entertained by the Government with respect to those points on which his Lordship has animadverted are distinctly declared. His Lordship has, in the first place, stated some remarks on the construction which should be given to that article of the treaty with the Vizier which conveys to the British Government the privilege of advising him, and imposes on him the obligation of attending to its advice. His Lordship observes, that the privilege cannot justly be extended beyond remonstrance and ultimate interference in extreme cases. That an attempt to fix upon the article in question a more comprehensive sense would be an act of lawless oppression; and his Lordship concludes by intimating that Government had mistaken the nature and extent of the right of counsel. I beg leave, therefore, to refer to the instructions to Colonel Baillie under date the 6th of July 1811, in which that question is discussed in great detail, for the very purpose of shewing that the article in question did not confer on Government a right to enforce its advice except in extreme cases; a right which Government had supposed (although it would seem erroneously) Colonel Baillie to have deduced from it. From a perusal of that document, it will be evident that the Government of the time entertained precisely the sentiments on that question which are expressed in his Lordship's minute.

Mr. Edmonstone's
Minute,
30 Mar. 1816.

His Lordship's minute contains the following further observations:

“ Soon after I had occasion to advert to our position relative to Saadut Alee, I became aware of impending consequences which filled me with the utmost alarm. That Prince was driven to actual desperation. He had even openly declared it in full durbar. The mischief had proceeded so far, that if we continued to assert the principle advanced for us, there was no avoiding a decisive struggle. I saw that we were on the brink of being forced in self-defence to possess ourselves of Saadut Alee's dominions and riches, to prevent his throwing himself with all his treasures into the hands of any power that would take the field against us.”

It will be observed from the document already referred to, and from the further instructions of the 19th of July and 2d of August of the same year, that Government neither asserted the right nor entertained the design to enforce the plan of reform. On the contrary, by the instructions of the 6th of July 1811, the Resident was directed to abstain from the further agitation of the subject. It was, indeed, admitted and expressly stated in the documents above referred to, that no plan of reform could be efficient unless the Vizier cheerfully acquiesced in it, and the adoption of it, therefore, was not subsequently pressed upon the Vizier, nor was the discussion renewed till the Vizier himself brought it forward in October 1813 by an intimation of his acquiescence.

As previously applicable to this point, I beg leave here to quote a part of my minute of 10th May 1814.

“ When I was exclusively believed that his Excellency would not cordially consent to the continuation of the system which he had at one time approved, the result was that I was then to desist from urging him, and Government then rested its claim of ascertaining the merits of any case of disturbance for the purpose of which its troops were demanded by the Vizier, and of settling the claims and the conduct of the disputing parties, and we have asserted our right of that right.

“ The reform was revived in consequence of renewed indications of a desire to adopt it. The result has been such as I need not add, that I most fully concurred in the prosecution of it.”

“ I entered into details. All that I am anxious to state is that I distinctly disavowed the principle which was quoted from the Governor-General's minute minute appear to ascribe to it; nor is it unnatural that I should personally feel an earnest solicitude to free from a charge so severe as that which the passages in question convey, an administration with which I was so closely connected during the whole period of its existence, and of which I had latterly the honour to form a part. Having stated these observations, it is superfluous to advert to the impossibility (so far as I may be supposed to have had a knowledge of the state of affairs at Lucknow) of my recognizing at any period of time the existence of a crisis, such as is described in the passages above cited from the Governor-General's minute.

Governor-General's
Minute,

MINUTE of the GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

The fear of Mr. Edmonstone, lest the credit of the administration preceding that in which I have the honour to bear a part should be injuriously affected by my remarks, appears strained somewhat beyond a correct apprehension.

Whatsoever inaccuracy I may have imputed to any former administration, I attach, in at least an equal degree, to that over which I preside; and when the context is fairly taken, it must be seen that it is myself whom I frankly charge with the great amount of error. The passage which Mr. Edmonstone has recited from my Minute, as conveying a stricture on measures antecedent to my own participation, does not seem to afford a satisfactory support to his position. If there be definiteness in the English language, I should think the phrase, "if we continued to assert the principles advanced for us," must mean a transaction in which I bore a part, and which of course referred to my own administration. The obvious connexion of this with the letter which I declare to have been drafted by myself to the Nawaub Vizier, and which I shortly after profess to have been written with insufficient knowledge of the case, puts the matter out of question. I have to regret that a discrimination which appears strongly marked, and assuredly was so meant by me, should have escaped Mr. Edmonstone. I speak of the principles advanced for us, not of those advanced by us. The construction given to the treaty by Government was just, whensoever that main question was agitated. The policy of the Resident was always to keep out of sight this fundamental principle; but by boldly assuming a deviation from it on the part of the Nawaub, to obtain the sanction of Government for insisting on points which were real infringements of that principle though undetected by us. The canker of our relations in Oude existed in this: that the Resident thought himself nobody, if he did not exhibit himself to the people of Oude as far superior to their Sovereign in authority. With a wholesome doubt of being countenanced in this pretension, he took care not to let it come within the observation of Government: while Government not imagining that so false a conception could be entertained received every piteous and distorted complaint from the Resident respecting the Nawaub Vizier's forwardness as a proof of resistance against the legitimate interference reserved to us by treaty. My firm persuasion is, that whensoever Major Baillie and Saadut Alee restive with regard to the advantages which he solicited any of his adherents, he goaded the Nawaub on the article of Reform, with a multitude of urgency very different from the intentions of Government, knowing to be a subject on which he could ultimately (by having the statement which he made himself) secure the support of Government. The discovery of this practice made me draw the distinction between the principles which Government has as the rule of its procedure and the principles advanced for us. As long as I upheld the Resident at the hazard of public inconvenience, the blame which may affect such an error in me, must equally be laid on the error in any preceding administration. It is not the principles which is chargeable to any of us: it is the want of vigilance that wrong principles should not mislead those who acted in our name.

MINUTE of Mr. SETON.

Mr. Seton's
Minute,
30 Mar. 1816.

When first I perused the Minute of the Governor-General on the affairs of Oude, the impression made upon my mind by the perusal, combined with what fell from his Lordship during the course of verbal discussions on the subject, was that the uneasiness manifested by his Lordship in expressing his sense of the critical state of our political relations with the late Vizier had no reference to the proceedings or instructions of the late administration, but that they solely related to the line of conduct pursued by the late Resident at Lucknow. But though such was my own construction of his Lordship's observations, I cannot but consider it as fortunate that Mr. Edmonstone's natural solicitude to guard against the painful effects of possible misconception has led him to bring to the notice of the Governor-General certain passages in the Minute which appear to him to be obviously susceptible of a more comprehensive interpretation, since it has furnished his Lordship with an opportunity of at once gratifying the known liberality of his own mind and relieving that of Mr. Edmonstone, by distinctly stating the extent and tendency of the observations in question.

It is most satisfactory to observe from the instructions cited by Mr. Edmonstone (viz. those issued to the late Resident at Lucknow on the 6th July 1811), that with respect to the degree of interference in the internal affairs of the Vizier's Government, which according to the provisions of the treaty concluded with his Excellency in the year 1801 can be regularly exercised by the British Government, the sense entertained by the late administration exactly corresponded with the views of the Governor-General, as described in the Minute now recorded by his Lordship.

Para. 11. We have attentively considered the documents referred to in this paragraph, together with the Governor General's Minute of the 30th November 1814,† containing his view of the extraordinary transactions to which they allude. We do not deem it necessary to enter at length into a discussion of the several points therein brought to our notice; at the same time, we cannot avoid expressing an opinion, that the conduct of Messrs. Law, Clarke, McLeod, and De L'Etang, has not been characterized by a strict adherence to the rules laid down by you, and sanctioned by us, for regulating the intercourse of Europeans with the Native Princes of India, to the due observance of which rules we attach considerable degree of importance. We therefore approve of the Secretary Adam's letter to those gentlemen, dated the 12th November 1814, in compliance with the Governor-General's orders, to signify to his Lordship that he no longer closed in the Governor-General's letter to the Vice-President in Council of the 29th December 1814,* relative to the affairs of Oude.

17. We have attentively considered the Minute recorded by the Governor-General on the 3d November 1815† and the narrative contained in Colonel Baillie's letter, and concur in opinion with his Lordship, that the style and tenor of that despatch rendered the removal of Colonel Baillie from the office of Resident at Lucknow indispensably necessary; a measure to which we observe, by the Minutes recorded by the several Members in Council on your proceedings of the same date, they gave their unqualified assent: we therefore approve of the letter of recall which was written to Colonel Baillie on the 31st October 1815.

18. The conduct of Colonel Baillie in having written a letter containing insinuations so highly offensive to the Governor-General is not to be palliated, and the desire which we always entertain to uphold the dignity of our Governments abroad, compels us to view this breach of duty on the part of Colonel Baillie as highly censurable. Under these impressions, we have no hesitation in expressing our entire approbation of the course pursued by you on that occasion.

19. In addition to the impropriety of that despatch, we see reason to believe that in the course of Colonel Baillie's intercourse with the Vizier he has, on some occasions, exceeded the limits of the instructions issued to him for regulating the degree of his interference in the affairs of Oude.

Letter from Lieutenant-Colonel
Baillie.

To James Cobb, Esq., Secretary to the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company.

Sir:

I had formerly the honour of apprising you, for the information of the Honourable Court, of my arrival in this country, on furlough, in the month of July last.

The Honourable Court is aware of my having occupied the station of Resident at the Vizier's Court of Lucknow for a period of eight years preceding my departure from India. The nature of my former services, which led to my appointment to that office and to the Honourable Court's confirmation of that appointment, is doubtless in the Court's recollection, and may, if necessary, be referred to in the despatches of the Supreme Government of India to the Honourable the Secret Committee in the years 1805-6 and 7; and more particularly in a letter from the Governor-General in Council to the Honourable Court of Directors, dated the 1st of May 1807, an extract from which is in my possession.

The extraordinary transactions at Lucknow during the two last years of my residence at that Court, which led to my retirement from office and return to this country on furlough, have doubtless been reported to the Honourable Court by the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council, and the different or rather the opposite views of those transactions which were taken by the Governor-General and myself, are probably now under consideration.

In a letter from the Secretary to Government in the Secret and Political Department, dated the 31st of October 1815, announcing my removal from Lucknow as the consequence of my despatch to the Government dated the 29th April preceding, I was informed that a communication would be made to me on the subject of that despatch at a future more convenient period. I have recently had reason to believe that a communication on that subject had been received by the Honourable the Court of Directors, and that the Governor-General in Council, in which it was detailed in a manner unfavourable to my character, that you will have the goodness of submitting to the Court of Directors my earnest and anxious wish, as well as that the decision on the question of my removal from Lucknow shall be suspended till I be heard.
